"On my arrival in Atlanta I made every effort to bring about a settlement of the strike, which was then in its fourth month. A strong and influential committee of Atlanta citizens cooperated with me to this end. Our efforts failed, however, Mr. Elseas, the principal owner of the mills, taking the usual position of the employer who is deadly opposed to his employees joining a trade-union when he said: 'This is my business, and I have a right to run it my own way.' It was no use to tell him he was living in an age when the right of the wageworker to organize and join a legitimate trade-union was recognized by all fair-minded employers. This man Elseas has boasted of having made $10,000,000 in the business since he started, a dozen years ago; that he is now about to resign as head of the concern and leave the business to his three sons, all of whom, I suppose, expect to make another $10,000,000 each. From what I saw of the conditions surrounding the Fulton Bag & Cotton Co., if Mr. Elseas has made $10,000,000 profit, he has made it out of the sweat and blood and the lives of the women and little children who have for 12 years toiled incessantly under the most filthy and insanitary conditions in the places where they worked and the miserable shacks in which they were compelled to live in order to pay further tribute from their miserable pittance of a wage to the man who boasts of having made $10,000,000 in a little over as many years.

"Nearly 1,200 people are involved in the strike, which resulted through the discharge of a number of old employees who had given years of faithful service because they had dared to form a union. Hired thugs parade the streets around the mill, supposedly for the purpose of protecting the mill property when, as a matter of fact, no violence whatever either against the mill property or against the imported help has ever been attempted. The principal work these hired thugs are engaged in is to try and goad the strikers to some lawless act.

"On my arrival in Atlanta I found our people were being evicted from the company shacks by negroes engaged by the company, white men in and around Atlanta refusing to engage in such work. I immediately purchased a number of Army tents and secured the grounds at White City close to the mill property. These grounds are owned by an old union printer and were turned over to me free of cost as long as the strike lasted. In about one more week we will have all the strikers under canvas, a healthful change from a filthy unsanitary company shack to a clean sanitary Army tent, out in God's sunshine and fresh air, which the Fulton Bag & Cotton Co. with all its millions can not take from them.

"Unless the right to organize is granted to these people we are prepared to fight for this right until it is granted if it takes all this year and the next. We are going to feed these people better than their scanty wages allowed them to feed themselves. We plan to secure donations of clothes and shoes to fortify them against the cold blasts of winter from those generous people who are always ready to help in such a worthy cause. We plan further to thoroughly expose the terrible conditions existing in Atlanta and other parts of the South, which, to say the least, are a disgrace to twentieth-century civilization as they apply to the textile industry.

"The American Federation of Labor is working hand in hand with us in the battle that has commenced for the emancipation of the textile workers of the South from long hours of labor, insanitary conditions, and miserable wages. We are going to take the little children from the mills and place them in the school and the playground, where God intended they should pass their childhood days, rather than have their little lives crushed out making millions for a few families of the Elseas type. We know that all liberty-loving Americans will sympathize, aid, and assist us in the task which the United Textile Workers are determined to accomplish."

As the result of that publication I offered the following resolution in the House on September 15, 1914:

House resolution 621.

Resolved, That the House Committee on Labor is hereby authorized and directed to make a thorough and complete investigation of the conditions existing in the textile industry in the city of Atlanta, in the State of Georgia, for the purpose of ascertaining—

First. The underlying causes of dissatisfaction among the wage earners in said industry.

Second. The existing relations between employers and employees in each of the textile mills in said city.

Third. The conditions of sanitation and safety of employees and the provisions for protecting the life, limb, and health of the employees.

Fourth. Whether there exists any association or associations of wage earners, and the effect upon the relations between employers and employees.

Fifth. The number and the ages of children employed in said industry.

Sixth. The number of hours constituting a day's labor, and the amount of wages paid per day to each class of employees.

Seventh. Whether or not any system of peonage has been or is being maintained in said industry.

Said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby empowered to sit and act during the session or recess of Congress, or either House thereof, at such time and place as it may deem necessary; to require, by subpœna or otherwise, the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, books, and documents; and to employ stenographers and such other clerical assistance as may be necessary. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

The expenses shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

Because of the presentation of that resolution the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], representing the city of Atlanta, sent a letter to the secretary of the Atlanta Federation of Trades, in which he used language in regard to myself which at least is very peculiar. I quote from the letter, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., October 7, 1914.

Mr. J. F. BRADFIELD,
Secretary Atlanta Federation of Trades, Atlanta, Ga.

MY DEAR MR. BRADFIELD: I am just in receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, as follows:

"At the last meeting of the Federation of Trades resolutions thanking Congressman GREENE of Massachusetts for his activity in behalf of legislation affecting the striking textile workers of this city were adopted.

"In the discussion your inactivity was criticized, and the secretary was instructed to write you of the action of the federation and to ask if your attitude toward organized labor had undergone a change, and why."

It is inconceivable to my mind how any labor organization that believes in the underlying and fundamental principles of organized labor could be so unjust to a faithful friend and an active public servant who by his every vote, every utterance, and every act has shown his sincerity and fidelity to the men who toil.

I have never been a demagogue. I do not propose to start demagogy now. I have never done an act in my life for my own personal or political aggrandizement. What I have done I have done as one servant who only hoped to receive as his reward the plaudit of those he sought to represent, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. My colleague [Mr. HOWARD] does not seem to be here just now.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I am very sorry. I have not seen him for some time. I am sorry, I say, but I talked to him after I introduced this resolution, and said I only desired to obtain the facts; and he said he would cooperate with me in every way to get at the facts. I want to show what his letter contains. It is dated October 7, 1914.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman says that resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules, which is true.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that less than two years ago the Committee on Rules made a thorough investigation, under a similar resolution, of conditions existing in Massachusetts——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And came to the conclusion that this Congress had no authority to enter into such an investigation as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes. I have but a brief allotment of time, and, if the gentleman will allow me to continue, I will say that I called on several members of the Committee on Rules, who told me that if I asked for a hearing before that committee, it would be granted without doubt. One of the gentlemen referred to was the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE]. I asked for an opportunity to appear before the committee and to be granted a hearing on the resolution, and the gentleman from New York said to me that the investigation into the strike at Lawrence, Mass., had been expensive, and that he believed a hearing would answer the same purpose.

I afterwards saw the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], the chairman of the Committee on Rules, and he said to me that they were too busy during the last session of Congress, but that if I would let it go over until December he would grant me a hearing some time after Congress reassembled this winter. I saw him several times after that, and also spoke to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], a minority member of the committee, and said to him that I desired to be granted an opportunity to have a hearing, and that I was willing to waive the investigation, provided I could have a hearing and bring out the facts. He said there would be no objection to that, only I would have to wait for it.

Now, the letter written by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] to which I have referred continues, and the language regarding my action is quoted as follows:

Mr. Webster defines a demagogue as "one who plays an insincere rôle in public life for the sake of gaining political influence or office; a poser in politics; one who panders to popular prejudice or seeks to inflame reasonless passions in the advancement of his personal interests." If he had had an intimate acquaintance with Congressman GREENE of Massachusetts, he could not have described the man, as he is known to all men, in better terms. When the Atlanta Federation of Trades passed a resolution thanking Mr. GREENE for his activities in behalf of labor, I am sure no one was more surprised to receive such a resolution than was Mr. GREENE, and probably in all his life this was the first letter of this character he had ever received.

And then he refers to the fact that an investigation had been taken up in regard to the State of Massachusetts and the city of Lawrence, and he makes some statements in regard to that which I think are entirely out of character, because he says people were shot down on the streets there, which really was an extravagant statement, and then he makes further reference to myself, as follows:

Now, what is the Greene resolution and why was it introduced? In the first place he singles out the cotton mills of Atlanta, Ga., for Federal investigation, when, as a matter of fact, there is only trouble in one mill in Atlanta. You know there has been great enmity existing between the cotton-mill men of the New England States and those of the Southern States almost since the inception of the cotton industry. Mr. GREENE is a candidate for reelection. He has always served the manufacturing interests of his district, and to incur a little more stimulus and probably a little larger campaign contribution for the ensuing election he jumps on the southern mills by introducing this resolution, which he has made no effort to have passed or a rule adopted to bring it up on the floor of the House. It was pure, unadulterated demagogy. He had no hope of passing such a resolution, and he knew when he introduced it that he did not intend to push it.

I wish to say that I have lived in the manufacturing city of Fall River all but three years of my life, and those were the first three. I have been associated with both manufacturers and operatives during all that period and have been constantly in public life for more than 40 years, consequently I have been in the limelight and could not have been known as a demagogue. Having had that amount of public experience and having met both manufacturers and operatives and having lived in peace and harmony with both during all my lifetime, it comes with rather poor grace at this late day for a Member of this House, in a letter to his constituents, to charge that I am endeavoring to incur the favor of the cotton manufacturers of my city and to secure from them contributions for a campaign. I will inform the gentleman that there are more than 40 corporations in Fall River, Mass., representing 111 cotton mills, and under the law of the United States no corporation can make contributions for campaign or election purposes. So whatever may be my shortcomings, this is a charge that ought not to have been made against me by a Member of this House.

I happened to have received a copy of the letter written by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], and that is how I was informed as to his action. To my face the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] has stated that he desired to have this matter cleared up. I stated in reply that it would be to the credit of the people of Atlanta if they could prove that the statements referred to were without foundation. If the charges made by the United Textile Workers of America were incorrect, if a hearing could be granted, then the Fulton Bag & Cotton Co. could be vindicated. The representatives of the United Textile Workers of America, who are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, have written me several times and have called on me by their representatives, and I have said to them, "I have the promise of a hearing"; but it seems to have been promised to me in one way and denied to me in another. Therefore I bring the subject to the attention of the House.

There have been some contracts put out by this Atlanta corporation which I consider very peculiar, looking at them from a Massachusetts viewpoint. They may seem different from the viewpoint in the State of Georgia. I have before me a contract which the Atlanta employee in the Fulton Bag & Cotton Mills has to sign before he or she goes to work. It provides that the employee must give five days' notice if he wants to quit, but they can discharge him at any moment they please; but he can not draw his full pay, no matter for what cause he is absent, even though it be on account of sickness and he is unable to give five days' notice, he can not draw his full pay. One week's wages are held by the company as a forfeit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield me a little more time?

Mr. GILLETT. I have promised more time than I have. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I think perhaps I can get along with 10 minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. I have got to cut down the time I have promised to others. Suppose I give the gentleman five minutes?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Very well. This contract to which I have referred and the rules for the operatives and section men are as follows:

CONTRACT FOR EMPLOYMENT.

[No. A 31.]

ATLANTA, GA., ———, 190 .

The Fulton Bag & Cotton Mills, hereinafter called company of the first part, and ——— ———, of the second part, agree as follows:

In consideration of the promises and agreements hereinafter made by the party of the second part, the company hereby employs him (her) either as a cotton-mill hand in either spinning, weaving, or carding departments, or as a hand in bleachery or any other department of said first party, with the right to change the nature of the employment. The company is to pay for such services as are actually rendered by the said employee, and is not to pay for lost time arising from accident, disability, or any other cause. The company may discharge him (her) whenever it shall become unwilling to retain him (her).

In consideration of said employment, and as it is agreed that it causes the company loss for an operative or employee to quit its services without giving notice, and also causes a breach of discipline, party of the second part agrees to give the company one week's notice in writing of his (her) intention to quit before he (she) shall leave the services of the company and agrees to continue to work during the full period of said notice. Said employee shall not have the right to furnish a substitute to work said one week's notice, but shall perform the same personally. Said employee agrees to make good to the company any injury to its machinery or property which may be caused by said employee's negligence. Said employee states that he (she) is — years of age.

It is further agreed that this contract shall remain in force between the parties upon any subsequent employment of said party of the second part, it being the intention that this agreement shall be binding between the parties whenever the relationship of employer or employee exists between them at any time whatsoever.

The company agrees to pay wages at such rate and at such time as may be agreed upon from time to time. But it is mutually agreed that the employment may not be constant.

It is distinctly understood that the wages for one week—a week being construed to mean not less than wages for five days—are to be always held by the company, and said wages are not to become due and payable at all, and the same is hereby agreed upon as liquidated damages if said employee should quit said services without giving the one week's notice above mentioned.

When the employment is terminated, the employee, if a tenant, agrees at once to vacate without further notice, and any wages due the employee may be held by the company to cover any rent or damage done.

It is also agreed that claims for shortage in pay envelopes will not be recognized by this company unless such envelope is opened at the time it is received and amount counted in the presence of the party delivering the envelope.

It is also agreed that any sum which may be due an employee on piecework on being discharged shall be payable by the company after a reasonable length of time (not exceeding two days), in order to count or inspect the stock.

This contract shall only be altered by agreement in writing, nor shall any custom vary the same or any part thereof.

Age, — years.

NOTE.—The word "he" or the word "she" in the second line should be stricken. This affidavit must be signed in the presence of and attested by some officer authorized to administer oaths.

I also present the rules for operatives used in the Fulton Bag & Cotton Mills:

One week's wages is to be always held back.

One week's notice is required before leaving the service of the company. Should you leave without completing said notice, the week's time withheld will be forfeited.

Weavers will be charged for bad work, and upon leaving the service of the company before the work is inspected, whether on notice or upon being discharged, will be required to deposit $1 or more until the work has been inspected. A self-addressed post card will be furnished for address, and upon receipt of same the company will mail check to cover the amount withheld, less charges for seconds.

Frame hands (slubbers, intermediate and speeders) will be charged for bad work, and the amount charged will be given to the spinner detecting the bad work. The work can not be inspected until it is spun; this requires from one to two weeks. From 50 cents to $1 will be withheld—the rule applying to frame hands the same as weavers.

No matches, except the kind furnished free of charge by the company, are allowed in the plant. A fine of $1 will be assessed when this rule is violated.

Pay envelopes will not be delivered on Saturdays unless you have in five days' work on the present week. What time is lost on the present week must be made up the following week before the pay envelope can be drawn. "Ask your friends about the premiums."

RULES FOR SECTION MEN IN WEAVE DEPARTMENT.

Loom fixers are expected to be at their work morning and noon in time to see that all looms in their section are in operation promptly at starting time, and will see that they are not shut off until speed slacks at noon and night.

You are required to use straight edges. The overseer will specify the kind used. You can secure these at the storeroom. A deposit of $1 and $2, according to size, is required, and when returned in good condition the amount deposited will be refunded.

A complete set of tolls is required.

You will be fined 20 per cent of the seconds on your section.

When leaving the service of this company, whether you complete a notice or are discharged, 25 per cent of your time will be withheld at the time of settlement until all of the cloth on your section has been inspected, taking from one to two weeks to inspect same.

This does not cover all the rules for loom fixers, but is intended to outline some of the most important ones.

FULTON BAG & COTTON MILLS.

On December 8, 1914, the following letter was written to me by Mr. John Golden, president of the United Textile Workers of America, whose headquarters then were in Fall River, Mass., where I reside:

UNITED TEXTILE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
December 8, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM S. GREENE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GREENE: I trust that, now Congress has convened, you will not relax in your efforts to secure a congressional investigation of conditions in the textile mills in Georgia and the Fulton Bag & Cotton Co., of Atlanta, Ga. The strike is still on here, with our people just as determined as ever to fight for the right to belong to a trade-union and break down this pernicious contract system in operation at this particular concern, which is the only mill corporation in the State of Georgia having such a contract, and which everyone who has studied it agrees is nothing more nor less than peonage. Every employee has to sign this contract as a condition of employment.

One of the clauses of this contract will give you an idea of what it is. The employee agrees to forfeit all pay coming to him if he leaves work without giving five full days' notice, no matter what be the conditions that cause him to cease work. The employer, however, can discharge an employee for any cause or no cause whatever. This was the reason why less than 100 people came out on strike the first day; they stayed in and worked their notice rather than lose what small earnings they had coming to them; but they came out just the same.

The mill officials of the Fulton Bag & Cotton Co. have stated openly that all Congressman GREENE was doing was "playing cheap politics"; that now the elections were over your activities would cease in this respect.

I am in possession of a letter written by Congressman HOWARD, of Atlanta, Ga., addressed to the Federation of Trades here at the time they passed the resolution thanking you for your efforts to secure the investigation, and at the same time asked him what he was doing in the matter, wherein Mr. HOWARD makes the same identical statements regarding your sincerity in asking for the investigation, saying, among other things, you knew you hadn't a dog's chance of getting such a thing through when you started the movement.

I agreed with the Federation of Trades here to write you on the matter. They have decided to communicate with Congressman HOWARD and find out where he stands on this issue. There are two Federal mediators on the job, but I don't believe they are making much headway.

This strike in Atlanta, Ga., has aroused interest all over the South, in spite of the efforts of such men as Oscar Elsas, head of the Fulton Bag & Cotton Co., and Congressman HOWARD and others to make light of it. Our people are still living in the Army tents, and since the convention of the American Federation of Labor in Philadelphia, Pa., last month this interest has spread all over the country. We are fully determined to fight this thing out to a finish. The Federation of Labor is behind us to a man in this struggle for better conditions and the abolition of peonage.

I am on the ground conducting the fight, and mean to stay here. I shall be glad to assist in any manner possible; and again let me say I trust you will not relax your efforts in this matter and disprove the charges I have mentioned. With best regards,

Very truly, yours,

JOHN GOLDEN,
General President United Textile Workers of America,
Hotel Terminal, Atlanta, Ga.

It is the first time during my entire life that any individual anywhere has ever accused me of practicing demagogy to advance my particular interests. I have served in this House for more than 16 years, and no gentleman has ever heard me make any allusion whatever in the way of discrediting the southern cotton manufacturers. I have frequently stated that the people of New England did not object to the manufacture of cotton goods in the South, and, of course, if we did object we could not stop it. The northern and southern manufacturers meet in conventions and cooperate with each other.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. I hold in my hand a copy of the extraordinary contract to which the gentleman alluded, of the Fulton Bag & Cotton Mill, and also a copy of the even more extraordinary rules for the operatives which govern the employees of that concern, and I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he will extend his remarks in the RECORD by incorporating these in full.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will do so. I repeat, no man on this floor—and I have heretofore spoken several times during the debate on the tariff bill—ever heard me say anything to the detriment of any southern cotton manufacturer. I could only wish they had the same laws there that we have in Massachusetts.

Mr. BARTLETT. We have.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Oh, no.

Mr. BARTLETT. Better ones than those in Massachusetts.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Oh, no. It is easy to get up and make such a statement, but an examination and comparison of the laws of both States would better illustrate the actual facts.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have a copy of them here in my hand.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. But the laws are not carried out.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is not true.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. We know in Massachusetts by long experience that any law is not worth the paper that it is written on unless there is a penalty prescribed, and if no penalty is prescribed it is not enforced either in Massachusetts or Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman permit me? I have the laws in my hand to which the penalty is attached.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Well, all right. I wish the gentleman would not take up any more of my time. The gentleman can put copies of these laws in the RECORD four or five times, but these laws are not very effective, even in Georgia, when such rules as I have presented and such contracts as are required by the Fulton Bag & Cotton Co. as are entered into with employees are in practice in that State. As I have said, I tried my best to get the Committee on Rules to give me a hearing, realizing that the Committee on Rules had determined not to give authority for an investigation. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, including also such papers as may bear upon the subject under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. EDWARDS. I object. I think speeches of this kind ought to be made on the floor of the House.

[Subsequently Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts obtained unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel called upon nor have I any desire to enter into the personal phases suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE]. I do not know anything about this particular cotton manufactory that he refers to in Atlanta, Ga. So far as I recall, I never heard of it until this resolution was introduced. I do not know who owns the factory; I do not know where the stock is owned. It would not be at all surprising if the fact were to develop that the majority of the stock of that particular factory, like the majority of the stock of a great many other southern manufactories, is owned not in the South but in the North.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. GARDNER. What reason has the gentleman for believing that the majority of the stock of the company is owned in the North?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no reason whatever; I said it would not be surprising if the fact developed, because the gentleman from Massachusetts knows that there are a great many cotton factories of the South in which the majority of the stock is owned not in the South but in the North. However, I do not know what the facts are about that, and I do not want to go into that controversy, for I do not care anything about it.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. If you had granted a hearing, would not all of these facts be brought out?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think so, before the Committee on Rules, and that is precisely the thing I want to speak about. Since I have been a member of the Committee on Rules, beginning with the Sixty-second Congress, there have been, again and again, presented to that committee demands for investigations. One of the first cases presented for investigation was a case somewhat similar to this, the case of the Lawrence, Mass., strike.

The resolution was introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. Berger. The Committee on Rules gave a hearing upon that, ostensibly to determine whether or not there was involved in the matter such questions as would justify an investigation by the Congress. After the hearing, at which advantage was taken to introduce not only testimony and statements upon the legal proposition involved, but also facts in regard to the strike, not under oath, the Committee on Rules unanimously came to the conclusion that no Federal question was involved—that there was no question involved in which the Congress could properly enter upon an investigation.

Following that, we had numerous other resolutions; we had the Colorado strike and the Michigan strike resolution introduced. The Committee on Rules, realizing that there was no Federal question involved in it, thought that was no proper matter which Congress could investigate and refused to present that resolution. The result was that a caucus was called, and the caucus was swept from its feet and the House was swept from its feet and investigations ordered which cost—I do not know how much; not a great deal, perhaps—which have resulted in absolutely nothing.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] introduced a resolution to investigate this proposition in Georgia—not the general conditions in the cotton-textile world, but conditions in Georgia, at a particular factory in Georgia—and there was no Federal question involved in it. The gentleman from Massachusetts has admitted that it was bunk, because he said if he could have had a hearing before the Committee on Rules, not under oath, he would have been content not to have the investigation called for in his own resolution.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Oh, no; if the gentleman understood that he misunderstood me entirely.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to say that he told the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], chairman of the Committee on Rules, that if he would give him a hearing before the Rules Committee he would be satisfied without the investigation.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I tried to get something out of it; they would not grant the investigation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is the reason which has controlled the Rules Committee in these matters. It is time that we stop these investigations of matters with which Congress has absolutely nothing to do. [Applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I wish the Committee on Rules would get back to its original functions, instead of spending its time in investigations which should be made by other committees and in determining what bills this Congress is to consider and what it is not to consider. I wish the Committee on Rules would re-form the rules of this House and bring them down at least within 100 years of date. The condition of the rules of this House is such that only a few experts understand them.

That is the proper function of the Committee on Rules. I suggest, among a great many other changes to be accomplished, that we ought to have a system worked out under which the Members can find out when hearings are to take place before the different committees. Furthermore, Members of Congress ought to be able to find out beforehand what is coming up in the House, and when. We ought to be given some idea when to prepare ourselves and when to make our arrangements so as to be on hand. Otherwise, one of two things is unavoidable, so far as busy Members are concerned. Either we must neglect the routine work of our constituencies and our own study and preparation or else we must run the risk of being absent when really vital questions are voted upon.

Take the case of the Palmer child-labor bill, which passed the House of Representatives on Monday, February 15. Without any notice to the House, Mr. PALMER moved to suspend the rules and pass that bill. Those of us who were interested in the matter never had a chance to be on hand to vote or speak in its favor.

As every Member of this House knows full well, it is impossible for us to attend sessions regularly, and attend to the business of our constituencies at the same time. We can not be in two places at once. As you realize, Mr. Chairman, most of us do our work in our offices and in the departments, and appear on the floor only during the consideration of important matters, or matters in which our constituencies are interested, or matters coming from committees of which we are members. Some of the most energetic Members of Congress do not undertake to be on hand even for roll calls, unless the vote is likely to be close, or unless they have not been recorded at some stage of the question under consideration. For instance, take my own case. I often am obliged to content myself with voting only on one stage of a measure. That one vote, of course, is necessary in order to show where I stand. To attempt to vote on all roll calls would hamper me seriously and needlessly in the work which I undertake to accomplish.

The result of the present absurd state of the rules is the fourfold multiplication of this difficulty. Often and often I have hung around this Hall for hours with the expectation that some particular bill would be reached. Often and often I have found at the end of my long wait that the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill never had the slightest intention of bringing the matter up at that particular session.

As a matter of fact, when the Palmer child-labor bill was voted upon I was not attending to my other congressional duties. On the contrary, I was in the hands of the dentist undergoing very necessary treatment. If I had had the slightest idea that Mr. PALMER intended to present his bill under suspension of the rules, I never should have allowed the opportunity to escape me to be on hand to give him a helping hand. I had been given to understand that nothing except "unanimous consents" would be considered that day, and I was quite unaware of the situation until I read the RECORD the next morning.

However, although I did not have the opportunity to vote for it, I am very glad that the Palmer child-labor bill has passed the House. I sincerely hope that it will pass the Senate as well and speedily become a law. It is a much-needed piece of legislation.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] makes the same request. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that anybody can get the floor and make these requests? I understood that control of the time was with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts one-quarter of a minute.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Upon what subject?

Mr. ROGERS. On the subject of the remarks just made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], by incorporating a contract of employment of the Fulton Bag & Cotton Mills Co., of Atlanta, Ga., and also the rules for operatives in that mill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, continuing my remarks where I left off this morning when the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] refused to permit me to proceed for 5 minutes, I will now proceed for 10 minutes.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] had read a letter written by the Secretary of the Navy in regard to his letting a contract for the construction of a certain torpedo-boat destroyer to a bidder who was some $10,000 higher in his bid than the Seattle Construction Co. In that letter occurs this sentence:

> What I really did then was to award a boat to a Pennsylvania firm of shipbuilders, which had originally bid lower than the Seattle company, for $2,309 more than the revised figures of the Seattle company. In view of the inexperience of the Seattle company in this class of construction I could not have done otherwise, having in view the interests of the Government.

It was that statement in his letter that caused me to attempt to reply to him this morning, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] objected to my proceeding for five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the Secretary of the Navy ought to be very grateful if that matter is forgotten instead of injecting it here on the floor of the House. I hold in my hand two letters written by the Secretary of the Navy to Senator JONES, and in one of them he says that the William Cramp & Son Ship & Engine Building Co. made a bid of $820,000, and that the Seattle Construction & Dry Dock Co.'s bid was for $810,000, a difference of $10,000. In his letter this morning he would have you believe that it was considerably less than that, but it was not when the contract was let. On December 23, three days after he wrote the letter to Senator JONES, from which I have just read, he wrote the Senator another in which he said:

> Replying to your letter of the 21st instant, advising you of the award of contracts for destroyers Nos. 63 and 68, I have the honor to say that owing to the changes of type of machinery different from that first contemplated the price of the vessel to be built by the William Cramp & Son Ship & Engine Building Co. will be reduced to $812,000 instead of $820,000.

So that the reduction was an after consideration, according to his own letter, and three days after the contract had been let he notified Senator JONES that owing to some change in the machinery they had reduced their price. But the Seattle company had no opportunity to reduce its price or to consider the change that the Secretary permitted the other company to make.

He attempted to justify himself on the ground that the Seattle company had not had the experience sufficient to justify him in thinking they would complete their contract on time. The Seattle company has constructed one of the great battleships of this country—the Nebraska. It has constructed four or more submarines for this country, the most complicated vessels that any yard builds. It has constructed two submarines, recently completed, for Chile. All of these vessels were constructed according to contract.

I have here upon my desk the record, and it shows they delivered these submarines to our Navy practically on time. This record and its readiness and ability to furnish any bond asked take away the excuse that the Secretary of the Navy gives that it was because they could not perform their contract on time that they were not given it. The action of the Secretary in relation to matters of this kind has not always been marked with such care. The Lake Co. has had contracts let to it time and again, and, so far as I know, has never yet completed but one boat, and that is out of commission and never was fit for service. Of all the boats that have been let to that company, they have never completed one on time, and the only one it ever did complete is of no use. Yet in the face of that record they are again given contracts to construct a number of our submarines. Yet the Secretary of the Navy wants the country to believe, and so states in a letter that he sends to have publicly read from the Speaker's desk, because he must have known what was the purpose of it, that the reason he does not let the contract to the Seattle Construction Co. when it is the lowest bidder is because he is afraid they would not have that vessel constructed on time, a vessel of comparatively simple construction.

Mr. Chairman, it has been my pleasure to know the Secretary of the Navy well. Our relations have been friendly. I have taken occasion to defend him, and was glad to do it when I thought he was unjustly attacked, and I have received his personal thanks for so doing, but in this case the Secretary is certainly subject to criticism. He says that his experts advised him that he ought not to let this contract. That may be true, and I think that it is true, but I want to call the attention of the House to the situation in which the Secretary of the Navy places himself. He dickers back and forth with the different shipbuilding companies throughout the country, and then finally ends up by awarding the contract not to the lowest bidder but to one who has bid higher. During all these negotiations he considers the bid of the Seattle company. But after it finally submits the lowest bid, after several weeks spent in negotiations with it, he suddenly discovers that it should not have the contract. What were these so-called experts doing all that time? Why did they not tell the Secretary and stop him wasting his time and that of Senator JONES and myself? It took these experts a long time to wake up. What aroused them? If they advised the Secretary not to let the contract to the Seattle Construction Co., then during the weeks of negotiation they were not acting in good faith. The loss of the money to the country does not amount to very much. Ten thousand dollars is comparatively insignificant, but the principle involved is important, and I hope that the Secretary of the Navy, after he reads these few remarks, will understand how this transaction looks to others. If he does, and sins no more, I will be content.

I do not think there is any truth in the statement, but the statement has been made that on the Saturday after I delivered to him the lower bid of the Seattle Construction Co., instead of its being the influence of the experts that caused him to take the bid from the Seattle Construction Co. and give it to another company, that he was visited by certain influential politicians, and that, after his interview with them, he decided to give the contract to the Cramp Co., and take it from the lowest bidder in order to do it.

Now, whether that is true or not I do not know, but I do not believe that it is true; but it shows the position that he gets himself in by jockeying back and forth and letting the contract under the circumstances he did.

I made these statements before the committee and pointed out these facts, and the Secretary of the Navy was in the committee room within 20 minutes after I ended, and these statements were not corrected. He had better have made a statement then than to wait until now and send in a letter and have it read from the desk to reflect upon one of the leading companies of this country in order to justify himself. There is no justification for this action except that he said that he followed the judgment of his experts, and I am willing to give him the benefit of his statement; but if his experts advised him to do that they were acting either through ignorance or prejudice. I call the attention of the House to the situation. Are we going to appropriate millions of dollars for the building of a Navy and then have the contracts not let to the lowest bidder but upon the advice of so-called experts? If this is done, how long will it be until the great shipbuilding industry of this country will have their hands secretly upon men, the experts, who are in that department? If they do not reach and influence these men, there are those who will think they do. We all know what the result will be. It will lead to scandal and corruption. I hope the Secretary of the Navy will not place himself in that position again; but if he does I hope he will have the courage to stand up and bear the responsibility of the act and not attempt, by sending a letter to be read upon the floor of this House, to excuse himself by an unjust reflection upon a company that has always kept its contracts with this Government and with other Governments for which it has built vessels.

I hope that never again will the occasion arise where anyone can with even the shadow of justification say that a contract for the construction of a naval vessel is influenced, even in the slightest degree, by political considerations.

I repeat that I do not believe that there is anything wrong about this transaction, but it is open to criticism, and just criticism. The facts do not warrant the Secretary's action. I had concluded, however, to let the matter stand without further publicity, but the Secretary, it seems to me, injected himself into this controversy when he should have kept out. As I have already said, he ought to be glad to have the transaction forgotten.

Mr. Chairman, I ask to extend my remarks. I will also insert in the RECORD the letters referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letters are as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 21, 1914.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Answering your inquiry of the 16th instant concerning the proposals and awards of contract for the destroyers, Nos. 63 to 68, authorized by the act of the 30th of June last, I have the honor to inclose herewith a schedule made at the time of the opening—the 10th ultimo—which contains the names of the several bidders and their original offers.

Three of the bidders subsequently reduced the prices named by them to the following figures:

The Bath Iron Works, from $850,000 to $800,000;

The Seattle Construction & Dry Dock Co., from $860,000 to $810,000, for one or two boats; and

The William Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Building Co., from $853,000 to $820,000, for one boat.

On the 17th instant the department awarded contracts to—

The Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, for two boats, at $795,000 each, its original price;

The Bath Iron Works, for two boats, at $800,000 each, its modified price; and

The William Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Building Co., for one boat, at $820,000, its modified price.

The other of the six boats authorized will be built at the navy yard, Mare Island, whose estimated cost of construction is $620,487.

Sincerely, yours,

(Inclosure.) JOSEPHUS DANIELS, Secretary.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 23, 1914.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to my letter of the 21st instant, advising you as to the award of contracts for destroyers Nos. 63–68, I have the honor to say that, owing to the choice of a type of machinery different from that first contemplated, the price of the vessel to be built by the William Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Building Co. will be $812,309 instead of $820,000.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS, Secretary.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I rose primarily for the purpose of inserting in the RECORD some statistics concerning our imports and exports which bear upon an interrogatory which I propounded a few days ago to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] who was then addressing the House. That question and the speech——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman desire to extend his remarks?

Mr. GORDON. I have already obtained leave for that purpose; yes, sir.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I did not hear that the gentleman had obtained leave. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Leave has been granted.

Mr. GORDON. The question which I propounded and the subject upon which the gentleman from Michigan was addressing the House was the business condition of the country especially during the past six months, or since the outbreak of the European War, and the effect of the Underwood tariff law upon business conditions. The gentleman from Michigan insists, and it is quite generally contended upon the Republican side of the House, that the whole country has been suffering since the enactment of the Underwood tariff law from its evil consequences, and that the unemployment and adverse conditions which obtain, are the direct results of that tariff law. Upon that subject particularly, Mr. Chairman, I desire to insert some figures into the RECORD which I think are absolutely conclusive upon the question. Speaking generally, Mr. Chairman, I can not for my life understand the political philosophy of gentlemen who contend that you can improve business conditions by interfering with natural laws of trade, commerce, and industry.

In my political philosophy that is just as absurd as it is to contend generally that you can promote the prosperity of an individual or the people of a nation by increasing their taxes, and that is exactly what our Republican friends claim to do. They have been contending for the last 40 or 50 years that the way to make people rich is to increase their taxes. Now, that is a species of economic rottenness that has been instilled into the American people for so long a period that it seems to me it is time to refute it. My own judgment is that the history of the United States since the 3d day of August, 1914, has furnished a most complete, a most perfect, and most unanswerable refutation of the whole theory of those who contend that you can promote business prosperity by interfering with the natural laws of trade, commerce, and industry. The Underwood tariff law was just as effectually superseded on the outbreak of the European war, so far as our relations with all the great manufacturing and industrial nations of the world are concerned, as if Congress had upon that day passed a law multiplying duties upon imports by 10, for practically the European war has operated as a prohibitive tariff, and I undertake to say that the figures from the Department of Commerce, which I shall insert in the RECORD, effectually establish that beyond any possible question. Permit me to call attention to the figures, and I will only speak of the round figures, omitting the details and inserting the correct amount as shown by statistics in my remarks. I have here a table showing the imports and exports of merchandise for the last five months of 1913 and the last five months of 1914, and also a table showing in detail our exports for three years past to the countries of Europe and the other grand divisions of the world.

[1] Grand division figures (other than for Europe) are given only in round numbers for the six-month periods ending December, 1913 and 1914.

For the five months ending December 31, 1914, our imports free of duty amounted to $400,349,407, and for the same period of 1913 they had been $452,693,688—a loss of $52,344,281.

Our dutiable imports for this same period in 1914 were $248,333,224, and for the same period of 1913, $321,254,117—a loss of $72,920,896.

Our exports for the five months following the war were $912,641,885, and for the same period of 1913, $1,156,745,155—a loss of $244,103,267, notwithstanding the enormous increase in exports of foodstuffs during the latter period.

Our exports to Germany and Austria-Hungary alone for the six months ending December 31, 1913, amounted to $214,942,963, and for the same period of 1914 they dropped to $18,528,610, and of this sum $16,201,116 was for July, 1914, before the war began, and only $2,327,494 for the remaining five months of last year.

What is most significant and remarkable, as bearing upon the effect of the war upon industry in this country, is that the revival of the same, which is daily becoming more evident, is exactly coincident with and, in my judgment, entirely dependent upon the steady increase of trade and commerce in this country, as shown by reports of clearing-house associations, and the constant increase of our foreign commerce, exactly as the flow of blood through the arteries and veins of the human body indicates a revival in health and an approach to physical and mental vigor, while the interruption of the same results in stagnation, decay, and death to the victim.

Now, of course, our protection friends insist that the way a reduction of the tariff injures domestic industries is that it permits the importation of articles made abroad and thereby displaces similar articles made at home; therefore they invoke the taxing power of the Government for the purpose of excluding those importations. The value of the imports of dutiable articles during the five months ending December 31, 1913, amounted to $321,000,000. The value of the imports of dutiable articles for the same five months of the year 1914 amounted to $248,000,000. Under the tariff theory of our protection friends that should have been the greatest era of prosperity the people of this country have ever enjoyed.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. I will, sir.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Has the gentleman the figures of the total imports?

Mr. GORDON. I have, sir.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the Gentleman please state those?

Mr. GORDON. The total imports for that period, dutiable and nondutiable, were $773,000,000, and the imports for the same period, of dutiable and nondutiable goods, for 1914 were $648,000,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The difference is not so great.

Mr. GORDON. Not quite so great, but it is a very substantial difference. It is a difference which amounts to $125,000,000 in the five months.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. GORDON. I will.

Mr. FORDNEY. Give the imports for the first seven months of 1914 in connection with those, and then give the total for the entire calendar year.

Mr. GORDON. Of course, I have not those figures available here.

Mr. FORDNEY. Well, I have. It is only $73,000,000.

Mr. GORDON. Then you can insert them in your own speech.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to state it is only $3,000,000 difference for the whole year?

Mr. GORDON. I am not prepared to accept that statement or to refute it. As I say, I have not the figures available.

Mr. FORDNEY. To be exact, it is $3,300,000 for the calendar year less than the calendar year 1913.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman from Michigan, however, is seeking to include all of the free importations, which have increased. Of course, importations from South America have not fallen off as the importations from Europe have. But the point I desire to emphasize in this connection is, that the importations from the great industrial nations of the world, those and those alone, which actually attempt to and do compete with the American manufacturer, have declined in every single instance. The total value of imports of manufactured goods, wares, and merchandise for the calendar year 1914 was $71,056,867 less than in 1913.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is not that also true of goods manufactured in America? Have not the demand and sale in them declined, too?

Mr. GORDON. No, sir; I do not think it is true.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then you think the people are buying just as much?

Mr. GORDON. Oh, yes; and——

Mr. AUSTIN. And the manufacturing plants turning out just as much and selling just as much?

Mr. GORDON. No; they are not selling as much, because their exports were entirely cut off by this war. It cut off our exports to the amount of about $250,000,000 in five months.

Mr. AUSTIN. I mean to the local market; to the local consumer?

Mr. GORDON. No; I do not think there has been a very substantial difference between the five months ending in December, 1914, and the five months of the preceding year, 1913. I think, so far as our internal demands are concerned, they are substantially the same. That is my judgment about it, without having the figures available. Now, the specific figures, Mr. Chairman, show that in the calendar year of 1913 as compared with 1914 our imports declined in the iron and steel business to the amount of $5,000,000. We imported $5,000,000 less of iron and steel products in the year 1914 than we did in the year 1913.

Mr. AUSTIN. Do not the steel company officials state that the output of the American mills has fallen off 50 per cent?

Mr. GORDON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to have any of these statements of the managers of steel companies embalmed in my remarks. I do not think what they say is important. What I say is taken from the statistics furnished by the Government.

Our imports of cotton goods were $65,000,000 in 1913 and $30,000,000 in 1914. Our imports of chemicals were $114,000,000 in 1913 and $101,000,000 in 1914. Mr. Chairman, to produce statistics or figures in support of the contention that the Government can not improve the condition of its people by increasing their taxes is like attempting to offer proof in support of the multiplication table, but there has been so much of this political buncombe indulged in on the floor of this House by distinguished gentlemen of long years of service it seems to me it is time that some figures were furnished to refute the whole contention.

Now, in my own congressional district, Mr. Chairman, these contentions of our friends were not taken seriously in the recent campaign. There was not any substantial claim made such as we have heard here with such great elaboration upon the floor of this House, to wit, that the nonemployment of labor and the disarrangement of business following the European war was the result of anything else than that war. The foreign and domestic commerce of the United States aggregates, I believe, under normal conditions now something like $4,000,000,000 a year. You cut off that commerce arbitrarily in a night, as was done on the 3d of last August, and you subject public and private credit, trade, commerce, and industry to the greatest strain that can possibly be imposed upon it. This European war did subject public and private credit of the United States to the greatest strain known since the Civil War.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. GORDON. I do.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Has the gentleman from Ohio made any investigation as to the percentage of our manufactured products that have been exported during the years 1913 and 1914?

Mr. GORDON. I have made no computation other than is before me, and it shows the total value in exports and imports for the five months ending December 31, 1913 and 1914.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What I was wanting to direct the gentleman's attention to was the amount of our exports as compared with the amount of our manufactures, or the percentage of the product of manufacture that has gone into export rather than into our domestic consumption.

Mr. GORDON. No; I have not those figures before me. I have the total exports for the two years.

I think I was saying, Mr. Chairman, that this contention was not seriously made in that part of the country where I come from during the campaign last fall, but it was made apparently in some localities, and successfully made. It seems to me that in the face of the figures which are available to every Member of Congress, if some of my Democratic colleagues had obtained and published those figures they would have succeeded in convincing their constituents that, in so far as the effect upon business conditions of the Underwood law is concerned, the claims of our Republican opponents are wholly without any foundation in fact.

Now, it is contended that in the iron and steel business especially there existed a business depression prior to the breaking out of the European war, and that this was due to the Underwood tariff law. That there was some depression in the iron and steel business is shown by the statistics. The number of furnaces operating was lower, very much lower, than at present, and somewhat lower than normal. But I desire to call the attention of the membership of this House to this fact, that between 40 and 50 per cent of the products of the iron and steel manufactories of this country are consumed by the railroads. About the 1st of June, 1913, a large proportion of the railroads in the United States filed an application with the Interstate Commerce Commission for an increase in their rates. And one of the most astonishing examples of great minds moving in the same channel was furnished by the fact that immediately following the application for that increase the railroad companies throughout the United States ceased buying materials from the iron and steel mills and everybody else and commenced laying off men.

Now, I do not charge—because I have not the testimony to substantiate it—that there was a concert of action upon that question. But what I do know, and what every other intelligent observer knows, is, that, beginning with the filing of this application for an increase of rates, the railroads ceased buying material and commenced laying off men. I believe that any depression in the iron and steel business can easily be traced to that fact, and the nonemployment existing prior to the breaking out of the war was largely due to the same thing. That continued to almost the present time.

But what I would like to have some of our Republican friends do is to take the actual facts upon which there can be no issue and discuss them here upon their merits in so far as they relate to business conditions subsequent to the breaking out of the European war and before that date. To me it is as clear as any proposition can be established by human testimony. By cutting off our foreign trade many lines of business were compelled to close down, and did close down, throwing men out of employment.

But, as has been observed by one of my Republican colleagues, the effect of this war was exactly the same as the effect of a protective tariff. The only purpose of a protective tariff must be to restrict trade. If it does not do that, it is inoperative and ineffective. Now, as a trade restricter the figures from the Department of Commerce show that this war has exceeded anything known in our history since the embargo imposed during the War of 1812; and if there is any virtue in the contention that by imposing artificial restraints upon trade and commerce the material prosperity of the people may be promoted, it seems to me we have had an excellent opportunity to establish that fact during the past six and one-half months of our history.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. GORDON. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Assuming that the war in Europe operates as a protective tariff here, does not the gentleman think that the uncertain condition of that tariff would practically destroy any benefit which might naturally follow from it?

Mr. GORDON. No, I do not, Mr. Chairman. On the contrary, the certainty of the absolute prostration and destruction of industry in Europe as the result of this war is very much more permanently established than any protective tariff that you gentlemen have ever imposed, or can impose, because the history of this country shows that about every time the Republicans got into power and gave the tariff another boost, the people turned them out of office, showing that it is a very precarious situation that you gentlemen and your tariff schedules are in; whereas when you prostrate the industry of all the great manufacturing nations of the world, outside of our own, by abandoning the work and killing off the workmen, these nations will have to begin to build anew, and it is absolutely certain that if the war stopped to-morrow business in those countries could not be resumed for a year or more; and many years will be required for them to reach their former state of skill and efficiency.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman think the manufacturing business of Great Britain is prostrated now?

Mr. GORDON. Of course it is.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Now, when three-fourths of all the people engaged in the manufacture of woolen and cotton are women and children, what falling off is there?

Mr. GORDON. Why, as a matter of fact, commerce and trade and industry are absolutely prostrated in all these nations that are at war.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think the gentleman must be in error about that.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, no; I am not in error. There is no question about that. You talk about bread lines. Take the dispatches in the newspapers. Over there all the able-bodied men are away fighting. Who are running those manufacturing plants?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. There are about 50,000,000 people in Great Britain. One-fifth of them would be men, numbering 10,000,000. Now, I understand that only 1,000,000 of them are under arms, leaving 9,000,000 men, together with all the women and children, engaged in the usual avocations.

Mr. GORDON. Only men are under arms, technically, perhaps, but is it not apparent that the energies of those people have been diverted into new and different channels and away from their ordinary pursuits by this war? I have not been to Europe, and I do not expect to go there soon.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that all the men engaged in war are able-bodied, while a large proportion of those who are not at war are not able-bodied.

Mr. GORDON. Of course that is true. Under the protection philosophy, when they send all their able-bodied men to the war to fight, their industries ought to be in an excellent condition.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. GORDON. Certainly.

Mr. SWITZER. Is it not true that the manufacturing industries of Great Britain are now in a more prosperous condition than they were a year ago? Is not that a fact?

Mr. GORDON. I do not think that is a fact either in England or in any of those countries. I know that England controls the seas, and I know that exports to the United States have declined enormously, and I do not know why they do not need the money now as well as ever they did. Oh, no. I do not think war is a good thing, Mr. Chairman, for anybody. It is simply destructive and injurious to everybody. Of course, that violates the protection theory. The people of those countries that are now at war ought to be very prosperous, and if all the able-bodied men in those countries are killed off and they are compelled to depend for their labor upon the lame and the halt and the blind, it will, according to this restrictive philosophy, create enormous demands for labor, and everybody will be rich. I utterly and wholly repudiate the whole theory of that school of political economy. I do not think there is anything in it any more than there is in the contention of our Republican friends that you can make people rich by interfering with the natural laws of trade and commerce, or even by increasing their taxes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, did the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] use all of his time?

The CHAIRMAN. He consumed all of his time.

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] 10 minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, there is still pending before one branch of the American Congress a bill to continue the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country. When that bill was before this House it was very bitterly assailed by a number of gentlemen, most of whom I have no doubt were sincere in their criticisms, some of whom I apprehend were somewhat swayed by a natural but not very commendable party zeal.

I have no criticism to offer of the strict examination and analysis of appropriation bills. It seems to me that it is a very high and imperative duty of the American Congress to analyze appropriation bills with the strictest care, and I do not think we often err in our overperformance of that duty. But that is a totally different thing from an indiscriminate attack upon a line of governmental activity the purpose of which is to develop the trade and resources of the country. I believe we ought to curtail unnecessary expenses of the Government, especially in the increase of salaries, emoluments, and gratuities of various kinds that have been distributed under one pretext or another; but I think it is a false economy for us to refuse to extend the business facilities of this country.

I want to call the attention of my colleagues from the Central West, and the great Mississippi Valley particularly, to the absolutely imperative need of internal waterway transportation to that great producing section of our country. I am not going to comment upon other propositions, because I do not feel able to do so. I must leave that to the Rivers and Harbors Committee. But I do know something about the Mississippi and Missouri Valleys.

It has been stated recently, and I think correctly, that the opening of the Panama Canal will prove a disaster to the business conditions of the Mississippi Valley unless it is coupled with an extension of inland waterway navigation. Here is the situation in a nutshell: The rate from the Missouri River and the Mississippi River to the coast is 75 cents a hundred pounds first class. The rate from New York to the Pacific coast by way of the canal is 30 cents a hundred pounds first class, and other classes in proportion. The rate from the city of St. Louis to San Francisco by rail is 75 cents. The rate from New York to St. Louis is 35 cents by rail, and the rate from New York to San Francisco is 30 cents by sea, so that the combined rail and sea rate from St. Louis via New York to San Francisco is 10 cents cheaper than it is by rail from St. Louis to San Francisco. The rate from Kansas City to New York is 60 cents first class, or 90 cents from Kansas City to the coast via New York, and 75 cents by rail direct from Kansas City to the coast.

Mr. SIMS. Is that a class or a commodity rate?

Mr. BORLAND. That is the first-class rate, and you can figure everything else on that basis. But, gentlemen, the rate via the Missouri River Packet Transportation Co. to the Gulf and through the Panama Canal from Kansas City to San Francisco is 53 cents; 53 cents from Kansas City by its packet line by way of St. Louis and New Orleans and the Panama Canal to San Francisco, as against 75 cents all rail. What does that mean? It means that if it were not for the fact that a packet line is now making weekly trips the rate would be 75 cents instead of 53 cents. As a matter of fact, the packet line makes trips oftener than once a week, but the only basis upon which the Interstate Commerce Commission will figure is that there must be regular transportation by a line making trips as frequently as once a week. But for that the industries of Kansas City would be entirely prostrated by the opening of the Panama Canal, and with it would go all the territory surrounding it. Some of the greatest industries of that region are furnished from the agricultural country around it; the great packing-house products, the packed meat, the soap, tallow, lard, the flour and milling products, all kinds of breakfast foods that are manufactured there, everything of that kind drawn directly from the great agricultural regions represented by the gentlemen who come from the Middle West are all dependent upon the maintenance of that 53-cent rate out of Kansas City.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. Does this packet company make any money at that rate?

Mr. BORLAND. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They do not haul anything, do they?

Mr. BORLAND. I will answer the gentleman from Kansas in a moment. In reply to the gentleman from Texas I will say that that packet company does not make any money, for this reason: We have only proceeded with our improvement of the Missouri River one-third of the way down from Kansas City to St. Louis. We do not get a 6-foot channel clear through, but we have a line of steel barges which are adapted to a 6-foot draft—that is, 4½ feet when they are loaded. When the river shoals down in August and September, as it frequently does, to less than 4½ feet, they must load those barges light at a loss, or they must carry an extra barge to lighter the cargo over the shoal places. That condition has been getting better each year as we extend the improvements farther and farther down toward St. Louis, and now fully one-third of the way is open with not less than a 7-foot channel.

Now, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is among those who attacked the river and harbor appropriation bill the other day. Yet he comes from one of the richest trade territories in the United States, wholly dependent upon the maintenance of that rate for the protection of every industry located there. Its cement, its mining industry, its flour milling, its agricultural industry, every industry in that territory is dependent for a fair and equal opportunity for trade with the world on the maintenance of an open river. And yet, whether it be because of partisan zeal or without knowledge of the facts, I know not, the gentleman undertook to tell this House that it would be better to sink the money in Cow Creek in southern Kansas than to continue the improvement of that great waterway, the Missouri River.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think I said it would be just as well.

Mr. BORLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the gentleman from Missouri know how much corn and wheat and cement are shipped by water from Kansas City to San Francisco or any other point?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; and the gentleman can find it in my remarks made here about three weeks ago, when I put those figures into the RECORD. I can not take the time now to reeducate the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have not been able to find anybody who has knowledge of much freight of that sort.

Mr. BORLAND. Then the gentleman had better refer to the statement I put into the RECORD, because it is given there in detail much more completely than I could give it to him now.

Now let us see how the northern part of the Mississippi Valley fares. It costs $5 a ton less to bring canned goods from the Pacific coast through the Panama Canal to New York by rail and west to St. Paul than to ship them direct by rail from the Pacific coast to St. Paul. What is the result? Minneapolis, St. Paul, Davenport, Quincy, and other river towns are now building docks and terminals and getting ready to take advantage of the all-water route down the great river and through the Panama Canal.

St. Louis has a packet line to the Gulf which only averages 1 trip in 20 days, and for that reason St. Louis has been denied an all-water route and rate to the Pacific coast. Kansas City, having a packet line operating once a week or oftener, is given the all-water route and rate, and the result is that Kansas City now enjoys a 53-cent rate direct through, which is as low as St. Louis can get. In other words, the shorter distance from St. Louis to the sea has not been taken advantage of by St. Louis, but that handicap is going to be removed in the near future.

The gentleman from Kansas perhaps did not understand that when there is a water line operating as often as once a week, then, whether any great quantity of freight is carried by the water line or not, the Interstate Commerce Commission allows the making of a competitive rail rate, with the result that all the freight carried is carried just as cheaply as though it all went by water. This is the vital fact in connection with these river and harbor improvements, which the opponents of the river and harbor bill seem utterly unable to understand. During the last year the municipal docks at Kansas City were completed, steel unloading docks, entirely under the control of the municipality and absolutely free for the interchange of freight, and all up and down the river municipal docks and terminals are being completed, so that the through water route will be established.

Now, suppose you lock up that waterway, gentlemen. Suppose you strike down the whole river and harbor bill without discrimination as to the items. You have locked up the greatest producing section of this country. Our Ohio Valley friends are in the same condition. Our upper Mississippi Valley friends are in the same condition. Take a manufactory located in the Ohio Valley, a great soap factory, for instance; it is not prepared to meet, without water rates, its New Jersey and New York competitor, because in shipping to San Francisco it must ship by its competitor's doors in order to reach its customers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[Mr. BORLAND was granted leave to extend his remarks.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. EAGAN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, and had further insisted upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. GALLINGER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. GALLINGER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 2504. An act to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution."

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], who a few minutes ago said that on the whole the effect of the European war on American trade and commerce could not but be disastrous. I agree with him that no general and permanent economic benefit can accrue to the world by reason of a great war such as is now in progress. And yet, Mr. Chairman, some industries in America will at least temporarily benefit on account of the European war. There has been an increase in the demand and in the price of food products on account of the war. Our exports of these products, especially during these latter months, have exceeded all previous records.

For the seven months ending with January of this year our exports of breadstuffs and meats amounted to $377,400,000. This was an increase over a like period of the previous year of $188,000,000. We increased our exports of wheat 100,000,000 bushels; of oats, 38,000,000 bushels; of corn, 10,000,000 bushels; of fresh beef, 40,000,000 pounds; of canned beef, 34,500,000 pounds; of flour, 1,500,000 barrels.

Not only has the European war caused an increased demand for these food products, but other causes have contributed. Although our domestic wheat crop for 1914 was the largest on record, being 120,000,000 bushels larger than that of the preceding year, the wheat crop of the world was last year 440,000,000 bushels less than in 1913. This has caused both an unprecedented demand for the American crop and has caused the price to increase to a great figure.

While this has benefited the producers, it has been a great burden to consumers. The general depression of business throughout the country, with thousands of laboring men either completely deprived of a livelihood or compelled to work on part-time schedules or for decreased wages, has made the increased cost of these necessities a real hardship. So serious have seemed these conditions to many that a demand has arisen that the Government should place an embargo on these food products and absolutely forbid their export.

EMBARGOES.

It is urged that such a large depletion of our food supply will soon exhaust our surplus and endanger the amount necessary for home consumption. To determine the fact in this regard, the President directed the Agricultural Department to investigate and report conditions. The report shows that our supply is ample both for our own demands and for the probable foreign demand until our next crop shall be available.

It is likely that the high prices are, in part at least, speculative, and the present trend is downward and not upward. When it was reported that as a result of the probable opening of the Dardanelles from 100,000,000 to 200,000,000 more bushels of wheat would be made available the price broke 6 or 7 cents on the market.

In any event, a mere increase in price would not be a justification for an embargo. The disastrous effects of an embargo would be much greater than would result from increased prices, to whatever figure they might rise.

The effects of an embargo to a nation not at war are far-reaching and extremely injurious. Our experience with the experiment during Jefferson's administration ought to warn us never to repeat it. Mr. Henry Adams, in his History of the United States, thus describes its operation:

As the order was carried along the seacoast every artisan dropped his tools, every merchant closed his doors, every ship was dismantled. American produce—wheat, timber, cotton, tobacco, rice—dropped in value or became unsalable; every imported article rose in price; wages stopped; swarms of debtors became bankrupt; thousands of sailors hung idle around the wharves trying to find employment on coasters to escape to the West Indies or Nova Scotia. A reign of idleness began, and the men who were not already ruined felt that their ruin was only a matter of time.

Of course it is not claimed that such extremely disastrous results would now follow an embargo such as is proposed, but it is certain that serious and widespread injury to business would be certain to occur. It should be remembered that even Jefferson admitted that an embargo was economically indefensible.

The worst feature of an embargo is that it fails to accomplish the purpose intended. The purpose of the embargo of 1808 was to bring the European nations to terms by shutting off their supplies. England and France had impressed American seamen, and on every pretext had injured and almost destroyed our commerce. The object of the embargo was to punish them and bring them to terms. But although persisted in for years, the embargo was in every way a failure. It injured our commerce more than foreign aggression, and was one of the causes which brought on the War of 1812.

FARMERS NOT PROFITING.

The idea seems to be prevalent that the farmers have been holding their grain and are receiving the benefit of the present high prices. This is an error. Very few producers have storage facilities for their grain. Most of the product is sent at once from the field to the elevator or railway, and most of it is then sold. Some wheat was sold by the farmers this last year for 65 cents, more of it for 75 and 80 cents, and most of it for less than a dollar a bushel.

The prices of cattle and hogs have, in fact, declined since the beginning of the war. The dealers in grain and the packers have made most of the profits resulting from the increase in price paid for these products for export.

COTTON GROWERS SERIOUSLY INJURED.

While the European war has increased at least to some extent the demand for and enhanced the price of food products, it is a matter of national concern that the exports of cotton, as well as the price, have seriously declined in consequence of the war. For the period of seven months ending January, 1915, the total exports of cotton were but 4,105,525 bales, or a decrease of 2,500,000 bales from the amount exported during the same months of the preceding year.

With this has come a corresponding decrease in the price. The consequent loss to the planters has been great. Not only have they been unable to sell a large part of their crop at all, but they have been compelled to sell what could be sold at a greatly reduced price.

To remedy this condition many expedients have been proposed. It has been urged that the cotton should be bought by the Government at a fair price and held until normal conditions returned. A plan was proposed to issue currency to the owners based on the security of the cotton on a fair valuation. Various other plans of a similar character were presented.

A careful consideration of all these expedients led to the conclusion that any such action would be of questionable benefit to the cotton growers and not justified as a Government policy. Other plans designed to relieve the situation have been accepted, however, by the administration.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

One plan was the creation of a bureau of war-risk insurance by the Government. A nation at war is justified in guaranteeing its own merchant vessels against destruction by its enemies, but a nation at peace, desiring to preserve its own neutrality, is never justified in such action. It is admittedly economically indefensible. Even its advocates agree that its operation probably will result in loss. The earned premiums up until the destruction of the Evelyn and the Carib were $640,848. The Government's loss on these two ships alone is $659,103. The expenses to that time were $6,766; so that the Government so far is a loser to the extent of $25,021.

But that is of small consequence compared to the danger it brings of leading us into war. The Evelyn and the Carib would not have sailed into the war zone, would not have gone into the mine fields, but for the guaranty given them by the United States Government. The Government induced them to take the awful risk. The Government guaranteed that if they would sail into the forbidden territory it would see that if they were destroyed it would reimburse their loss.

If the business was profitable, marine insurance companies already in existence would be glad to take the risk. If it was safe, private enterprise would embark in the business. But because it was neither profitable nor safe the Government undertook it. The Government's action was designed to induce shipments that were extra hazardous, and for that reason its action is an inducement to private parties to undertake enterprises that from their very nature must necessarily bring about international difficulties and dangers. Our Government would be under obligations to press the claims of a private individual if his loss were occasioned by the violation of international law. To do so would involve no question of neutrality. But for the Government to press a claim it had itself guaranteed is to raise a question at once which is dangerous. If a ship is seized or destroyed by any of the belligerent nations which are now in what they consider a life-and-death struggle for existence, and any unfortunate incident occurs, if any indignity to American citizens or seamen should be shown, if any act which could be construed as an insult to our flag should happen, then, at once, we would be upon the brink of war.

The blowing up of the Maine led inevitably to the Spanish-American War. A fancied insult to a small party of American marines in Mexico, which was evidently not intended and for which apology was made, led to sending our fleet to blockade Mexican ports, to an invasion of Mexican territory with our armed forces, to capturing and holding for months their principal seaport, and to a war which though brief in time and small in loss of life was so only because Mexico could not defend her territory or resist our superior force.

War is so very, very easy to get into and so hard to get out of that a nation should do nothing, no matter how financially beneficial it may appear, that will increase the hazards of war. We can afford to suffer any merely material loss rather than go to war. For these reasons the war-risk insurance act was unwise and dangerous and ought to be at once repealed.

SHIP-PURCHASE BILL.

The ship-purchase bill, so strenuously pressed by the administration, is also an unwise and dangerous proposition. Like the war-risk insurance act, it, too, is economically indefensible. It could not effect a general reduction of rates, for the $40,000,000 provided would not purchase enough ships either to carry the cargoes themselves or materially to reduce by their competition the rates of the thousands of ships required and which are now engaged in the business.

It could not build up an American merchant marine, for it would prevent the investment of private capital, which would not go into competition with the Government, while to depend on Government extensions alone would mean the investment of hundreds of millions instead of forty millions.

The bill was pressed as an emergency measure, hence ships can not be built, for that would require 10 or 12 months. To buy ships of neutral nations would add nothing to the existing shipping facilities, for such ships are already engaged to their fullest capacity. The ships of belligerent nations are not available, for to purchase them would violate the rule by which all the belligerents have announced they will be governed—that ships of a belligerent nation can not be transferred to a neutral nation after war has been declared when the effect of the transfer would enable the owners to evade the consequences of the war. There were, in fact, no belligerent ships for sale, except German ships interned in our harbors. The proposition, then, resolves itself into whether we shall purchase the German interned ships.

At once when the plan was proposed the allies vigorously protested. Great Britain and France announced that they would not recognize the validity of the transfers. Even the sale of the Dacia by a German company to an American citizen was protested. How much more would it be considered a violation of the announced rule and of neutrality if the German ships should be purchased and operated by the Government itself.

The committee, in reporting the bill, admit that if the Government purchased the German ships there was danger that complications might arise, but believed the shipping board would act with caution. It consoled itself with the declaration that—

The President will have the State Department to advise him on all questions affecting our rights and duties as neutrals.

To some of us this is a not altogether satisfactory assurance. Secretary McAdoo admitted before the committee that if the United States operated the vessels outright "an awkward situation" might arise. But he argued that under the corporation plan of management the Government could relieve itself of responsibility. Unfortunately no one seems to think so except the Secretary.

It must be evident that the proposition is hazardous in the extreme. There is no necessity that we should take such a terrible risk. Cotton exports are continually increasing and the price is better. There is reason to believe it will continue to advance. The people of Europe need food first of all, and that has been their first demand. There have been and are now enough ships to carry all and more than all the grain and foodstuffs that the ports can handle, and we are satisfying the demand. When that demand is abated there will be plenty of ships for cotton, and let us hope an increased demand and enhanced prices. But we can not afford and we must not try to force cotton or anything else into German ports or any other ports at the risk of an almost certainty of war.

OUR RIGHTS AS NEUTRALS.

It is urged that our rights as neutrals are being violated; that our ocean-going trade is being seriously injured; that our vessels are being destroyed by the powers now at war, and that we must assert our rights. I agree to that proposition. But this we have already done. The administration has fully asserted our rights and has protested both vigorously and courteously against their violation. And for that I commend the administration. But suppose our right to the free use of the seas is transgressed, shall be go to war for that? No; because that always occurs whenever a great war is being carried on between great nations. Interference with trade and with the freedom of the seas is the inevitable result of all such wars.

In time of peace no nation has the right to stop merchant ships upon the high seas and search them upon any pretext. But in time of war it is the admitted, undoubted right of any nation engaged in war to stop the merchant ships of any neutral nation anywhere upon the high seas to ascertain whether they carry aid or contraband of war to the enemy. This is a right we have always claimed and freely exercise during our own wars. It is the abuse of the right rather than its exercise of which complaint is usually made. We complain, justly, I think, that our ships have been taken by British cruisers from their courses, convoyed to British ports, and there detained unnecessarily. If that be true, and I believe it is, we can hold the English nation responsible for all losses that thus occur, and she must respond in damages for them. This our President had declared we will do. As he says, there must be a day of reckoning, and our claim for damages will be fully commensurate with our losses. It will not be limited to a delayed shipment or a confiscated cargo, but will include all the indirect injury and damages that are occasioned by hampering our trade and restricting our commerce. But the time to press such claims and demand such settlement is not now. We can afford to wait, both because it is good policy to do so and because we can not afford to exasperate an angered nation fighting for its life. We can not afford to do any act that will probably or possibly lead to war if such act can without irreparable injury be avoided. In any event, it would be both unjustifiable and wicked for the United States to go to war because of a delayed shipment or a confiscated cargo.

England's fleets command the seas. Her long years of preparation and lavish expenditure have made her navy all powerful, and she is now securing her reward. It is to be expected that she will to the fullest degree press her advantage on her enemies. It is also to be expected that in so doing the commerce of neutral nations will suffer. It will be our duty to protest carefully and upon safe grounds against every encroachment on our rights, and when the day of reckoning comes to press vigorously our claims for settlement. But we can afford to wait for that day; and when it shall come, we have no present reason to doubt that full reparation will be made. If, however, it should be refused, we will then determine what course to pursue. We shall be in a position to demand our rights, and shall doubtless be in a position to insist on their recognition.

CONTRABAND OF WAR.

It is objected that the warring nations of Europe are making unwarranted additions to the lists of contraband of war. I agree to that. But there has never been any general agreement among nations as to what should be considered contraband of war; and, until that is done, contraband of war has no settled definition in international law. It is customary for nations at war to make declaration each for itself of what it will consider contraband of war. This has been done during the present war. If unreasonable and unwarranted additions have been made by any warring nation, and any neutral nation has suffered thereby, it is probable that the offending nation can be compelled to respond in damages. We have made our protest, and this is all we should do. Again it should be emphatically said there is here no cause for war.

THE CASE OF THE "WILHELMINA."

The President has protested, and I think with entire justification, against the action of Great Britain in seizing the American ship Wilhelmina, laden with a cargo of grain and foodstuffs, bound for a German port and consigned to German citizens. Great Britain has the power to stop the sending of foodstuffs to Germany by either declaring all foodstuffs contraband of war or by proclaiming a blockade of all German ports. Neither of these has been done. Under these circumstances citizens of the United States have the undoubted right to ship foodstuffs to German private citizens.

Great Britain seeks to justify her order on the ground that Germany has issued an order to control the food supplies of the Empire; that this order is really made to conserve the food supply of the army and navy; and that food supplies sent to private citizens will go into control of the Government, and are therefore liable to seizure the same as if consigned directly to the Government.

I am satisfied, from an examination of the order, that Great Britain's contention is not justified. It appears the order was only intended to prevent the food supply of Germany from being controlled by speculators, who were demanding exorbitant prices for the necessities of life from the people, and was intended to conserve the food supplies of the people rather than the army and navy. I believe the prize court will not feel justified in sustaining the rather strained plea of the English authorities.

In any event the Americans were within their rights, and the English authorities have given "definite assurance that the owners of the Wilhelmina, as well as the owners of her cargo, if found to be contraband would be equitably indemnified." If found not to be contraband, the vessel will be released to continue her voyage, with damages for her detention. So in this and like cases there will be found no cause for war.

Complaint is made in the press because Great Britain is constantly interfering with our vessels carrying cargoes to the German ports, yet does not declare a blockade. While we complain and have a right to complain of such interferences, we still do send many cargoes to German ports, and as long as no blockade is declared Great Britain is responsible in damages for every such interference. But if a blockade is declared, then all German ports will be closed and we can send no shipments whatever to Germany. As long as Great Britain does not declare a blockade it is to our advantage, and we are very foolish to complain that she does not, or to so act or protest as to lead her to make such declaration.

BRITISH SHIPS FLYING THE AMERICAN FLAG.

The British liner Lusitania sailed from the United States with a cargo and a large number of passengers bound for Liverpool. Nearing her destination and entering the war zone proclaimed by Germany and supposed to be infested with her deadly submarines, the captain, in response, it is claimed, to the request of the American passengers, hoisted the American flag, and putting on full steam safely reached the harbor. At once our Government protested, stating that it felt "certain anxiety in considering the possibility of any general use of the flag of the United States by British vessels traversing those waters, since the effect of such a policy might be to bring about a menace to the lives and vessels of United States citizens."

The British note in reply declares that the instance was one where, under the principles and usages of international law, a belligerent merchant vessel is permitted in time of war to use a neutral flag in an emergency for the purpose of escaping capture. It disclaims any intention of advising its merchant shipping "to use foreign flags as a general practice or to resort to them otherwise than for escaping capture or destruction."

At first many of our citizens believed this was a grave infraction of our rights which ought to be stopped at once. But an examination of the precedents shows that the British captain was well within his rights. Our own vessels during the Civil War many times used the British flag as a means of protection from capture by Confederate cruisers. During our war with Spain the scout cruiser Harvard, under Capt. Sigsbee, made good use of the Spanish flag off the harbor of San Juan. During the present war a German cruiser, the Emden, flew a neutral flag, not for defensive but for offensive use, and thus disguised entered the port of Penang and there destroyed British merchant vessels anchored within the harbor. The exploit is regarded as one of the most daring in all naval history.

In any event, our formal protest was against "any general use" of the flag of the United States, and since Great Britain has assured us that her merchant vessels will not use our flag as "a general practice," the object of our protest is accomplished. In this incident or in others of a like character that may follow there is no cause for war.

LOSS OF THE "EVELYN" AND "CARIB" AND THE USE OF SUBMARINE MINES.

The Evelyn and Carib, two merchant vessels carrying the flag of the United States, were struck by mines on the German side of the North Sea when nearing their destination. These vessels carried cargoes of cotton for German consumption. It is not yet determined whether the losses occurred on the high seas or whether the vessels unintentionally invaded the mine fields protecting the German ports. Many other neutral vessels have thus been destroyed, some 40 being listed belonging to Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Holland. In nearly all such cases the cargoes were intended for German consumption, and were in most instances, at least, destroyed by German mines. It can not, therefore, be concluded that such destruction of neutral ships and cargoes was intended or desired by the German nation.

It is to be regretted that the rules of international law regarding these terrible engines of destruction have not yet been definitely settled. The development of this method of warfare is confined to comparatively recent times. Submarine mines properly, so called, were not adopted as a regular means of defense until the American Civil War, when the Confederacy destroyed some of the blockading northern ships by means of them. In the Russo-Japanese War of 1904–1905 both belligerents used submarine mines on a large scale, and the results showed that innocent neutrals might suffer from them to a hitherto unsuspected extent. They have been used by all the belligerents in the present war and have caused the destruction of a large number of both war and merchant, enemy and neutral vessels. The usual form of such mines is an automatic contact submarine bomb, which when struck will explode through some internal action. They may be anchored to the bottom and adjusted to any required depth below the surface. An unanchored mine, or one which has broken its anchorage, may float anywhere at sea and become a peril to all commerce.

All the warring nations disclaim any strewing of the seas with unanchored mines, but the evidence is very much against such disclaimer. Of course in the case of an unattached mine, or one which has broken its moorings, there is no way of determining what nation is responsible for placing it.

It is considered entirely justifiable for a nation to defend any of its ports or coast line by mines placed within the 3-mile limit of its waters. It is also considered defensible to place mines within the territorial waters of an enemy to prevent the ingress or egress of its vessels. It is needless to say that both these methods have been used by the belligerents during the present war.

If the Evelyn and Carib invaded the mined fields protecting the German ports, or drifted thereon, it is likely there can be no recovery for the loss. But if it can be shown either that they were pursuing their course under the direction of the German authorities, or that they were destroyed outside the German territorial waters by German floating mines, in either case the German Government would be held responsible.

In any event there is nothing in these instances and there will be nothing in others like them to justify our going to war.

THE USE OF SUBMARINES.

A more serious question, however, has arisen with regard to the use of submarines. Germany in retaliation for what she declares is an effort to starve her people into submission, has issued the following "war-zone proclamation:

> The waters around Great Britain and Ireland, including the whole English Channel, are declared a war zone from and after February 18, 1915.
> Every enemy ship found in this war zone will be destroyed, even if it is impossible to avert dangers which threaten the crew and passengers.
> Also, neutral ships in the war zone are in danger, as in consequence of the misuse of neutral flags ordered by the British Government on January 31, and in view of the hazards of naval warfare, it can not always be avoided that attacks meant for enemy ships endanger neutral ships.

It is evident that the only way by which Germany can make effective such an order is by using her submarines. It is also evident that such indiscriminate use of submarines would constitute a grave menace to all neutral vessels endeavoring to use such waters.

Our Government at once filed a most vigorous protest against the declaration because of "the very serious possibilities of the course of action apparently contemplated." It declared that the destruction of an American vessel by a German submarine on the high seas would constitute "an indefensible violation of neutral rights, which it would be very hard indeed to reconcile with the friendly relations now happily subsisting between the two Governments."

In her reply Germany explains her order on the ground of military necessity, and disclaims any intention of purposely injuring neutral commerce. A subsequent statement sent out from Berlin declares:

> German submarines and warships will endeavor by every means in their power to avoid sinking American or other neutral ships, and will take every precaution to avoid a mistake being made. The proclamation of the waters around Great Britain as a war zone, like similar British measures which were taken as a precedent, is designed to warn neutrals that a ship venturing within the naval field of operations exposes itself in the same fashion as a civilian wandering on a land battle field to the risk of being struck by a chance shot.

It can not seriously be believed that Germany would intend to destroy a United States vessel by her submarines. It is not at all likely; in fact, it is almost impossible, that any such thing should occur. But if it did, what then? We would demand reparation and apology and would be entirely justified in doing so. There is no reason that can be suggested why Germany would refuse to do what the acknowledged principles of international law and every dictate of prudence and justice would require her to do. Even in this extreme case there would be no justification or excuse for war.

DUTY OF GOVERNMENT AND PEOPLE.

I have with some degree of particularity discussed these incidents which have already occured, regarding some of which we have just cause for complaint, but which are susceptible of peaceful settlement. We must demand and insist upon our rights, and this we have already done and will continue to do. But in the intercourse of nations, especially in times like these, cases are constantly arising where the rights of one nation are invaded by another. Such cases may be and usually are settled by diplomacy or by arbitration, not by war. All will agree that now especially we should exhaust every possible peaceful resource before we resort to war. Never before were its horrors so realized, never before was its utter worthlessness as a means of settling international difficulties so demonstrated as now.

While this is true we must recognize the fact that war exists in its most terrible form, and that its madness, its excesses, its utter unreason should be taken into consideration as affecting and modifying our every word and act during the progress of hostilities. We are justified in urging every right we possess as neutrals and in protesting every infringement of those rights. But in so doing we should be doubly certain that our demands are well grounded, and in pressing them for recognition and satisfaction we should be especially considerate and moderate.

The danger that confronts the administration is that in its efforts to restore prosperity, to increase our trade and extend our commerce, it may press our interests too hard and too far. It is difficult to exercise restraint when claiming and urging that which is regarded as an undoubted right. But it should be remembered that we are not now operating under normal conditions nor with nations capable of calmly considering insistent demands. If we should press an imperative demand and it should be met with an unqualified refusal, an impasse would at once arise that might be fatal to peace. If, however, we shall in the future as we have in the past promptly protest every infraction of our rights as neutrals and notify the offenders that they will be held responsible, there will come a day of reckoning, which we hope shall be a day of peace, when calm reason and enlightened judgment shall determine our rights and the method and extent of our redress.

There is danger also from the easily aroused resentment of the people. The war spirit is quick to excite and difficult to assuage. Incidents may arise which may easily be used to excite such resentment and arouse such war spirit. In spite of the efforts of the Government to ascertain the facts and arrange for a peaceful settlement the spirit of the people may demand instant action and redress. At such times the administration's policy will seem to run counter to the patriotic impulse of the people, when in fact it may be really serving their best interest. If under such circumstances the administration shall yield to the popular demand, the country will suffer the disastrous consequences of its own folly. What is most to be feared is a hastily formed public opinion, the passion of the multitude stirred and inflamed by selfish interests and urged to action by irresponsible enthusiasts. At such times it is easy to bring on war.

Under such circumstances it is the duty of every Representative and every citizen to endeavor to form a public opinion against war and to support the administration in its endeavor to avoid war, so that if an event occurs which the war makers and the sensation mongers shall use to stimulate the war spirit it may be met by a public opinion controlled by moderation and reason.

There is every reason to believe that it is the policy and purpose of all the nations now at war to deal fairly with this country. It is inconceivable that any of these Governments should desire that an affront be given us or that any wanton or unjustifiable act be done to our injury. But if some petty official or some half-crazed officer should insult our flag or commit some indignity upon our citizens a storm of indignation would arise in resentment among our people that would be difficult to abate. In such a case every citizen should carefully guard his utterance and withhold his judgment, that he may be able to aid and not hinder a fair and honorable settlement.

A nation should not be held responsible culpably for an act done by a subordinate which it disavows. A demand for reparation or apology should not be pressed in such a spirit as to excite a resentment which will prevent the favorable action which otherwise the offending nation would be glad to give. If in insisting on the recognition of our rights or pressing for reparation for wrongs which we may suffer we shall maintain that poise and dignity befitting a great and mighty nation, there is little danger that we will not obtain everything we are fairly and honorably entitled to claim. A powerful nation can afford to be magnanimous. A Christian nation should, above all, be just.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] five minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, a week ago to-day I made some observations in the House on the recent conduct of the portfolio of state in the course of which I took occasion to trace the history of the administration dealing with the Republic of Santo Domingo. I was accused at that time and since of being somewhat partisan in the course which my discussion took. I do not want to be partisan; I do not want even to be deemed partisan; on the contrary, I wish it to be understood that I laid before the House the facts of the case as fairly and squarely and conservatively as possible.

Much of the testimony upon which I relied had been furnished by Mr. Walker W. Vick, an eminent Democrat, upon whose authority and responsibility the recent investigation was undertaken. Since I made my speech of a week ago Mr. Vick, under date of February 22, has issued a statement to the leaders of the Democratic Party. As a Democrat speaking to Democrats, I think his word at least could not be regarded as partisan, and for the possible enlightenment and interest of the House I send this memorandum to the desk and ask that it be read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT OF WALKER W. VICK TO THE LEADERS OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

RUTHERFORD, N. J., February 22, 1915.

Because of my connection with President Wilson's campaigns and inaugural, my position as assistant secretary of the Democratic national committee, and my having held office under the administration I have been criticized in certain quarters for my responsibility in bringing about the investigation of James Mark Sullivan, minister to Santo Domingo. This criticism is based upon a misconception of the facts by some and misrepresentation of the facts by others.

I firmly believe house cleaning, when necessary, should be done within the party, and so thoroughly and effectively as to leave no opportunity for doubt as to Democratic good faith. The Santo Domingo scandal was a condition which had to be met frankly and squarely by the Democratic Party. I endeavored for about eight months to have the State Department give the matter the serious consideration it deserved. Ample facts indicative of the urgent necessity for thorough investigation were presented by many persons besides myself whose motives could not be questioned. Secretary Tumulty has testified I was acting upon instructions of the White House in making reports on the Sullivan situation. It is also true I laid certain facts before Secretary Bryan upon instructions of my superior officer, the Secretary of War. It is not true that I made charges against Minister Sullivan.

Apparently the State Department made no competent investigation before deciding to stand by Sullivan. The department's "whitewashing" of him created consternation among those having a knowledge of the situation. Mr. Sullivan's own reference to what he termed his "vindication" from the White House (press dispatch of September 30, 1914) and his boast that he was returning to Santo Domingo "to stay," left no other honorable course than the one I followed.

My voluntary resignation forwarded to the President June 9, 1914, was misrepresented in certain quarters, and it was asserted that I would have been removed had I not resigned. Efforts were made to besmirch my character by false affidavits and slanderous statements when Sullivan's defenders found they could not attack my official record.

While regretting the necessity, I felt my duty demanded the facts be laid before the President. This was done by letter of December 1, 1914. The appointment of Commissioner James Duval Phelan and steps for a competent investigation followed.

A comprehensive presentation of the case to the President required that the facts as I knew them should be supplemented with affidavits and other evidence, which I as an individual lacked resources to obtain. The New York World—a Democratic and administration paper—undertook its own investigation at my suggestion and with my cooperation. The results more than corroborated the facts as they had come to me. I refused to cooperate with others whose purposes I believed to have been inimical to the administration and the Democratic Party.

The testimony, as developed by Commissioner Phelan's investigation, speaks for itself. In presenting my testimony I have not resorted to personalities, but have stuck religiously to the issues involved; i. e., events leading up to the appointment of Mr. Sullivan, his fitness for the post, and his actions in office. The necessity for presenting Mr. Bryan's letter arose from the statement contained therein that Mr. Sullivan was "a strong, courageous, reliable fellow"—a prejudgment back of which Mr. Bryan had refused to go.

The record of the investigation shows convincingly Mr. Bryan has been imposed upon by men intent upon selling him and the Democratic Party for their own selfish ends.

It is a further duty of the Democratic Party to clean up the pernicious lobby whose activities in tariff, treaty, and other legislation have been only partly brought to light in the record of the Sullivan investigation. A Democratic investigation exposed the Republican lobby. As Democrats we can not afford to have the tables turned or allow the party to become stultified by "revenue-only" Democrats serving their own ends.

By compelling a thorough investigation of the Sullivan scandal I have rendered a public service to my country and discharged a duty to the administration and the party. I have no apologies to offer, but do not desire to be misunderstood or misrepresented. No one has given more loyal and devoted service to President Wilson and the party than I. I stand squarely upon my record of accomplishment and the sacrifices I have been compelled to make, financially and politically, because I would not shut my eyes to a situation that no honest man could ignore.

Very truly, yours, WALKER W. VICK.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] 10 minutes.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, one of the surprising facts relating to the existing European war is the entire failure of so many intelligent citizens of the United States to realize and appreciate its tremendous effects upon finance, commerce, and industry throughout the world; indeed, they do not grasp the real scope and extent of the war itself. Little do many people, especially in the peace countries, realize that we are passing through the most momentous epoch in the history of the human race. The world's population is about 1,620,000,000. A majority of this, or 925,000,000 persons, reside in the countries and colonies directly involved in the war. The total area of the globe, not including the polar regions, is about 52,000,000 square miles. The countries engaged in the war comprise an area of 28,500,000 square miles. All five continents are more or less involved in the actual fighting. The awful tide of militarism is at full flow.

The wars of Alexander, Cæsar, Hannibal, Frederick the Great, and Napoleon were but trivial engagements when compared with the present mighty European conflict. To-day huge armies aggregating nearly 15,000,000 men have been organized, equipped, and are in battle array. The flower of Europe's manhood has been summoned from field, forest, mine, and factory to make up this mighty host. Marshaled behind their respective colors, the great armies of France, Germany, Russia, Austria, and England are facing each other in deadly combat on battle lines aggregating 1,000 miles in length. Day and night, summer and winter, they are fighting on the land, on the sea, in the air, and under the sea. Already they have suffered a combined loss of more than 3,000,000 in killed, wounded, and captured. According to the best official figures obtainable, this war has cost $8,500,000,000 during its first six months, or at the rate of $17,000,000,000 per year, or $47,000,000 per day. This does not include lives lost nor property destroyed. The human imagination can not easily grasp the full meaning and scope of the war, much less its awful destructive effects.

The world's international trade is $40,000,000,000 per year, and of this total amount the warring countries and their colonies have $25,000,000,000. Under modern business development, aided by rapid communication over telephones, telegraphs, and cable lines and by transportation facilities between all commercial points, the world's business in a large measure has become one great structure. The commerce and finance of the different countries of the world have become closely associated and related and interdependent. The arteries of the world's business have thus become almost as intimately associated as the arteries of the human body.

What were some of the additional results when the flames of the European war suddenly burst forth on the 1st of August last? All our international exchange suddenly broke down. Our international credit likewise fell to the ground. For several months the shock of the war dominated the world's commercial affairs. The leading stock markets everywhere were closed, thus shutting off any market for the world's securities. Trade was not only universally disturbed, but paralyzed for the time being. Financial chaos reigned supreme. All transportation lines in Europe were utilized for the transportation of armies and army supplies, to the exclusion of commerce. At this time the United States owed Europe $4,500,000,000. Three hundred million dollars of this amount was practically due, and our European creditors were demanding payment in gold. They also threatened to dump upon us immense blocks of our stocks and bonds which they held. The world's international commerce disappeared from the seas at the rate of more than $3,000,000,000 per month. During the first five months of the war the international trade was cut down from $40,000,000,000 to $24,000,000,000. Before the war the trade of the United States with the countries at war comprised $1,600,000,000 (excluding colonies) of its total annual foreign trade of $3,900,000,000.

The war has driven the powerful German merchant marine, comprising 2,388 vessels, from the sea. The foreign trade of Germany, Hungary, and Belgium, which represented about 22 per cent of the trade of the world, has practically vanished. England has taken out of the foreign merchant-marine service 1,200 vessels of her total number of 4,235. Four hundred vessels engaged in the carrying trade between South America and Europe were suddenly withdrawn from this service following the outbreak of the war. Sweeping embargoes on the exportation to the United States and other countries of a large number of both raw and manufactured products have been imposed not only by the warring nations but by the Scandinavian countries, Switzerland, Italy, and other peace nations. The war dangers of navigation to merchant vessels, the high war insurance rates, the greatly augmented freight rates between shipping points throughout the world—in some cases representing an increase of 1,000 per cent—the extraordinary and unparalleled congestion of European ports, which in some cases has caused a delay in discharging cargoes of two to four months—these tremendous handicaps, applying as they do generally to the world's commerce, have disarranged, depressed, and demoralized the business of the world to an extent beyond computation. Yet it is most difficult for the citizens of peace countries to understand that because a given country is not actually engaged in the war it is nevertheless the victim of the awful handicaps of war with respect to trade, finance, and commerce. In the recent language of Senator BURTON, of Ohio:

> I want you to realize this fact: There is war, and this war has deranged the routes of trade. It has destroyed many of the agencies of transportation. It has diminished shipping facilities. It has introduced demoralization, partial destruction in almost every branch of commercial and industrial activity.

A few citations of facts and figures will better illustrate the staggering loss to the world's trade on account of the war. During the year 1914 the exports of England decreased more than $175,000,000, while imports decreased more than $355,000,000. Notwithstanding her enormous purchases of food stuffs, her imports for January show a loss of more than $3,000,000, while her exports for this month fell off $98,000,000. For the month of December last the imports of the United States from Great Britain declined from $20,000,000 to $14,000,000, while like imports from all the warring countries to the United States declined from $72,000,000 to $31,000,000. The foreign trade of France during the first four months of the war shows a loss almost as appalling as that of England, aggregating as it did $650,000,000. For the month of December last the exports of France to the United States fell from $17,500,000 to $7,000,000, while for the first five months of the war like imports from France declined more than 50 per cent, and continue to decline. Our export trade to Germany, Austria, and Belgium, heretofore amounting to more than $500,000,000, is practically wiped out. Belgium's international trade, amounting to more than $1,500,000,000, is gone; her fields are laid waste; her highways and bridges are destroyed; and scores of her towns and cities have been wiped out by the ravages of war; her richest people are in the bread line. The rich Argentine Republic is in the throes of a severe business depression. Since the war began, it is estimated that there were more than 80,000 idle persons in one city alone, and a corresponding proportion of unemployed in other parts of the country. Not only has her international commerce, which has been chiefly with Europe, greatly declined, but the failure of Europe on account of war necessities at home to furnish large supplies of capital, as heretofore, has left both the people and the Government almost prostrated. Many of her railroads and factories have greatly curtailed operations for lack of fuel and certain other supplies. The shipments of her cereals have been largely cut off for the reasons I have heretofore stated. The Government itself is in financial straits. The deplorable conditions of Argentina, which is the richest country in South America, well illustrate the unfortunate plight of all South American countries under European war conditions. Some of them can not even borrow money to pay interest on their public debts. They are almost in a general state of moratorium.

The fact is beyond controversy that the disastrous effects of the European war are world-wide. If we go to the Scandinavian countries we find that Sweden, for example, is severely suffering from the stress of the war. Prices of everything have greatly increased—many foodstuffs having doubled in value. Exports and imports are practically cut off. Fuel is most difficult to secure. Japan has been no exception with respect to general rise in prices and severe stagnation of business. During the first few months of the war this little country suffered a loss of import revenue of $41,000,000. In far-off China and Korea a general depression of business has come as a result of the European war. In many parts of the European colonies in Africa we find the same measure of distress in most lines of business and finance. It is needless to recount the terribly acute conditions of privation, high prices, and commercial distress existing in countries like Holland and Switzerland. Their proximity to the war zone augments the financial and commercial burden inflicted upon the peace countries throughout the world by the war. Spain is likewise in the grasp of a severe commercial and financial depression and has her full share of unemployed. A recent dispatch states that workingmen and their families are suffering much throughout Spain because of the increasing lack of employment. In some localities famine is threatened. Bread riots have occurred in many cities of Italy. Her destitution is well known.

Canada, which is at our very door, affords another typical illustration of the many business and industrial handicaps and misfortunes which are the common lot of practically every nation on the planet, whether actually engaged in war or not. Her business failures for the year 1914 were more than double those of the preceding year. Her exports decreased over $20,000,000 and her imports for 11 months show a loss of over $60,000,000. The building permits for only four cities show a shrinkage of over $29,000,000. Large orders for munitions of war have recently increased her hitherto declining exports. The losses of railroad earnings in Canada have been much greater relatively than similar losses in the United States. The depression in all lines of business in Canada is, and has, for the past two years, been more severe than any business disturbances in the United States. Some of the Provinces are in the act of establishing a moratorium for the benefit of debtors on account of their inability generally to meet their obligations. The United States is enjoying a great business boom in comparison with Canada's condition; the business of the latter is more prostrate than almost any other country on earth. The customs or tariff revenues of this little country, which only spends $190,000,000 annually, fell off $26,000,000 during the year 1914. A new war revenue act imposing a direct tax on almost every taxable article except foodstuffs, agricultural machinery, fuel, and similar items, has recently been proposed by the Government. They estimate that even with these new revenues the end of the present fiscal year will show a loss of revenue of $33,000,000 and a total deficit of $60,000,000. This does not include the special war expenditures of $100,000,000, which will be borrowed. I need scarcely add that the percentage of unemployed in Canada is in greater proportion than that in the United States.

To the American citizen, who seems unable to realize the existence of a war unless he should hear the drum tap or the cannon's roar, a brief sojourn in any other peace country of the world and the experience of worse conditions as to the unemployed, the earnings of railroads and other industrial organizations, the great decline in building permits and consequent low price of lumber, the loss of Government revenues, the severe high prices of articles of common use, the extreme scarcity of fuel and oftentimes of foodstuffs, and the general decline and depression in practically every important line of business, would enable such citizen much more greatly to appreciate and enjoy the blessings of American conditions; he would no longer shut his eyes to the existence of the terrible conflagration in Europe which ramifies until it directly embraces a majority of both the population and the area of the world and scatters its devastating influences amongst all bystander nations and their peoples from one end of the earth to the other. Neither would he, with this broad experience and new vision, be so blind and narrow as to hold the Government at Washington responsible for these world-wide conditions, which are utterly beyond the power of any Government, or any number of Governments combined, at this time effectively to control or materially to change.

Careful observation of the financial, commercial, and industrial conditions that have existed in each of the important countries of the world during the past two years, and especially during the European war, compels the conclusion that the American people have fared better and suffered less with respect to each important phase of their finance, trade, and industry than any other nation.

A glance at the controlling conditions and influences affecting business, finance, and material development in the United States during the past two years, and especially during the European war, and some comment upon the present soundness of each branch and the basis they afford for permanent nation-wide prosperity now rapidly coming in some lines and gradually in others might be of interest. The United States is wonderfully blessed with respect to practically all the needs and conveniences of a great people. We produce 42 per cent of the world's pig iron, about 25 per cent of its wheat, 42 per cent of its coal, 71 per cent of its corn, and 61 per cent of its cotton. Being so richly endowed in natural resources and peopled by the most intelligent, industrious, and skillful race on earth, the United States has correspondingly greater opportunities for progress in every line, and should and will under world-wide conditions, whether good or bad, fare better than any other country. Since 1912 there has been a world-wide reaction in the nature of depression in business and finance. The Balkan war was responsible for its origin. It created the serious fear throughout its existence that the great powers of Europe might any day become involved; the result was that the masses in those countries withdrew immense amounts of deposits from the banks and also converted their securities into cash. This action alone cut down the world's supply of available capital to the estimated amount of more than $450,000,000. This sudden reduction of the world's money supply, together with the financial demands incident to the Balkan war, the gradual rise in the world's standard of prices, and the immense outlay for European armaments, were the chief factors contributing to the depression which commenced in Europe in 1912. Its effects were first felt across the sea in South America, the countries of which had been financed by Europe for a generation. Their accustomed supply of capital was materially reduced, and then it was that those countries began to suffer from the business conditions I have described.

As is true of all other business depressions that have first arisen in Europe, this condition in a measure manifested itself in the United States during the year 1913. Agriculture is the basis of prosperity; 1913 was a bad crop year in the United States. Since 1912 large amounts of our then $5,000,000,000 indebtedness to Europe have been coming back in a constant stream for liquidation. This depressed our securities and discouraged further European investments here. A temporary halting and hesitation in business and finance were also a natural result of the enactment of the new currency law and the tariff-revision law by Congress. It was inevitable that business should adjust itself to the new conditions created by these two highly beneficial pieces of constructive legislation. The reconstruction of our banking system, which gave the country assurance of sound and up-to-date banking and of an elastic currency system, through the agency of the recent wonderful currency legislation, marked by far the most important progress in the financial policy of this Government during the past 50 years. Enabling the country, as it does, to prevent panics and to cope with any financial crisis, the passage of this great piece of legislation so much needed was a most encouraging business factor. The enactment of the new tariff law was in response to a long and persistent demand of the people generally for relief from an antiquated, harsh, inequitable, and class system of taxation. Perhaps no more fair and equitable tax law can be found in the statutes of any nation, as future experience will thoroughly demonstrate. After the business of the world had practically adjusted itself to the new conditions created by these laws and the Nation was in the act of turning into the lane of unexampled and permanent prosperity, the awful European war, in all its destructive effects, suddenly projected itself upon the world.

Other nations have been struggling under these terrible war effects as I have described. The soundness of all business conditions in this country and the long period of liquidation through which it had passed placed the United States in the best possible attitude to weather the European storm. Notwithstanding the mountain of facts I have pointed out showing the universal effects of the war, certain individuals and groups of individuals in this country have attempted to set up the false cry that we have not materially suffered from the war, but that the new tariff law is responsible for such business disturbances as we have had; that such law is a failure, both as a revenue producer and as a sound economic measure. These persons would deceive the American people by falsely attributing unfavorable business developments to the new tariff, but giving the war credit for all favorable developments. This false propaganda is the merest pretense, intended to discredit the great constructive legislative measures enacted by this administration. Theirs is the voice of selfish protectionist greed, seeking to capitalize the country's misfortunes, due to the war, for standpat political and protective tariff purposes. The attempt to start this outrageous and false propaganda at this serious and critical period through which the country is passing is conduct most despicable. It is placing politics and greed high above patriotism. The empty and bald assertion, wholly unsupported by any tangible facts, that the new tariff law is a revenue failure during normal times is refuted by a glance at its revenue yield during the nine months of its existence prior to the war. The law took effect October 3, 1913. On that date $85,500,000 had been collected during the fiscal year 1913–14. It was estimated that during the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, the new law would yield an additional $184,500,000, making a total yield from customs for the fiscal year of $270,000,000. This estimated yield was far exceeded. The new law, in fact, yielded $206,500,000 instead of the estimated $184,500,000, making a total customs yield for the fiscal year of $292,000,000. The total tariff and income-tax yield combined fully met the estimates, while the total revenue yield for that fiscal year from the tariff, the income tax that had accrued, and the internal revenue proper was in excess of nearly $15,000,000 over the same combined revenue yield of the Payne law for the previous year. Several million dollars of the income tax accruing was not paid into the Treasury until after the 1st of July, 1914.

As was true of all other countries, the war dealt a severe blow to our imports and to customs receipts. They have been gradually declining each month since the outbreak of the war. A continued decline rather than an increase may be expected while the war continues. In no other peace nation has any individual been so bereft of a sense of patriotism and fairness as to charge the decline in customs revenues on account of the war to inadequate tariff legislation. The fact that the ravages of the war are gradually choking international commerce would lead to the conclusion that our customs receipts for the present fiscal year may fall as low as $205,000,000. However, this contingency can properly be met, if necessary, by an issuance of Panama Canal bonds during the next fiscal year. The Treasury, during the fiscal years 1914 and 1915, has paid out of the general fund on account of canal obligations the amount of $55,000,000 to date. There have been five issues of these canal bonds since 1907, aggregating $138,600,000, and their proceeds placed in the Treasury for general expenditure. There were two issues during the life of the Payne tariff law, and without which it would have brought a deficit three of the four years of its existence. Whatever decline of revenues this Nation may suffer during the present trying period, it will suffer a smaller proportionate loss and have a smaller revenue deficit, if any, than any other peace country on earth. Every patriotic American citizen should frankly realize these facts, and, instead of attempting to play politics, all should cooperate in a joint effort to enable our country to weather these war conditions as best it can. We should thank God that they are no worse, and that, though handicapped by the war's effects, we are not at war.

The bitter standpat Republican calamity howler has suggested that the balance of international trade during the first eight months of the existence of the new tariff law showed a loss against the United States to the extent of $313,000,000 compared with previous year, and that this minor fact demonstrated the law's failure. The balance of trade against the United States between the years 1908 and 1910 was $478,000,000. By this process of reasoning the Payne law can be proven to have been a far greater failure. This kind of balderdash, however, has ceased, for the reason that for some time the balance of trade in favor of the United States indicates an annual showing of more than $1,000,000,000. Germany and other countries also suffered a loss of exports at the time the Republicans complain of.

The hidebound protectionist has also been making the most astounding and reckless statements relative to the amount and value of our imports under the new tariff law. He would create the erroneous impression that our imports have been enormous and are calculated to destroy the manufacturing industries of the country. The truth is that the imports of manufactures for the calendar year 1913 were valued at $753,689,000, while the imports for the year 1914 were $682,632,000, yet the average manufacturer is being taught to imagine that he is about to be overwhelmed with foreign imports of manufactures. The facts are that our total imports for the calendar year 1913 were valued at $1,792,596,000, while those for the year 1914 were valued at $1,789,276,000. Practically the only increase of imports under the new tariff law have been confined to the one item of foodstuffs and food animals. The new tariff law will remove or greatly reduce the tariff tax on crude materials for use in manufacturing. I append to my remarks a compilation showing the principal classes of articles imported during these two years and their values, which clearly exposes the Republican fallacy that the new law is productive of any real injury to manufacturers, and that, on the contrary, it enables them to get cheaper raw materials.

Suppose that the Payne tariff were in operation during these troublous war times and even prior thereto. It would not have aided business prior to the war any more than the Dingley law in the panic of 1907. Furthermore, with the Payne law in operation without an income tax during this war the customs losses would have been correspondingly greater and Congress would have had to enact a war-tax law that would yield about $70,000,000 more than the present war tax is estimated to yield. But why the folly and inconsistency of prating about the protective tariff at this time? The war has constructed around this country a tariff wall higher than all the protective tariffs combined could build. With this complete and unheard-of degree of protection from foreign competition, why are we having so-called hard times in certain lines if the war has nothing to do with our business conditions? Why does not protection assert itself?

Perhaps there has been more stagnation in the iron and steel industry during the past two years than any other; but no person with the slightest regard for truth and fairness will attribute this condition to the new tariff. The whole truth is that the imports of all iron and steel and manufactures thereof for the calendar year 1913 were $33,601,000, while for the calendar year 1914 they were only $28,615,000, or $5,000,000 less under the Underwood tariff than under the Payne tariff. It may be further observed that the imports of dutiable iron and steel products for the year 1913 exceeded in value those for the year 1914 more than $10,000,000. The iron and steel industry first experienced a halting of business more than a year ago, when the railroads of the country began to reduce their normal purchases. Another serious handicap arising about this time was the inability of foreign countries, to which we have been in the habit of exporting iron and steel products, to purchase the usual amounts by reason of their general business depression, to which I have already referred. It will undoubtedly not be contended that our tariff caused these foreign business depressions. With diminished imports of iron and steel products under the new tariff law, to argue that this law has hurt that industry would be downright deception.

The inability of foreign customers to purchase the usual amounts of our iron and steel products is convincingly shown by the fact that our exports of these products to foreign countries for the year 1914 showed a loss of $94,000,000. One of the principal causes of the great decline in the purchase of iron and steel products by railroads in this country was that so many of our railroads fell a prey to financial pirates and railroad wreckers during recent years. The unfortunate experience and plight of the Rock Island system, the New York, New Haven & Hartford system, and the St. Louis & San Francisco; the serious financial entanglements of the Missouri Pacific, Denver & Rio Grande, Western Pacific, Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton, Pere Marquette, and Wabash-Pittsburgh Terminal, are good illustrations of the deadly work of the financial railroad looters. Many of the finest railroad properties in the country have been thus wrecked. These conditions of railroad business outlawry greatly impaired investment confidence both here and in Europe, with the result that European investors have dumped back upon us immense blocks of railroad securities. These terribly destructive influences have since been halted, and the railroads of the country are now facing a constructive era with normal conditions.

A few woolen manufacturers, including the American Woolen Trust, find it difficult to reconcile themselves to the loss of the immense tariff graft which they enjoyed for 40 years under previous tariff laws, and they complain at the present law. Every wealthy mill owner who has an old or unimproved or run-down mill, or who has installed incompetent relatives as managers of their plants, cries loudly for protective tariff rates that will protect their products from foreign competition. They would have our 90,000,000 people pay higher prices for clothes, blankets, etc., in order to maintain this indefensible degree of protection. The present tariff law may, as every honest tariff law should, place at a disadvantage old or obsolete textile mills without up-to-date machinery and equipment and without ordinary efficiency in their operation. Practically the only complaint against the present law comes from these sources. It would be outrageous to tax the American people for a purpose so selfish and indefensible. Our woolen manufacturers have, perhaps, forgotten that a greater depression existed in their industry in the years 1890 and 1891 under the McKinley law than during the past 18 months. Furthermore, their pretended claim of injury under the new law is refuted by the fact that they have been making immense purchases of raw wool. Their purchases for the fiscal year of 1914 were greater than for several years and amounted to 542,000,000 pounds, as compared with 495,000,000 pounds for the previous year. These facts speak louder than their idle tariff complaints. The mills are evidently not idle and do not expect to be idle in the future. The sheep raisers, whom these woolen manufacturers had deluded for a generation by the false representation that free wool would lower prices and destroy the sheep industry, almost went into spasms when the new tariff law passed. Yet, as Democrats have long contended as a sound economic proposition, free wool has not hurt the sheep industry here, but has given the sheep grower the stable prices of the world's market instead of the fluctuating and manipulated American market at Boston. Their eyes should now be opened in the light of wool prices since the new tariff. The truth is that the wool supply of the world is gradually decreasing. For the year 1914 the world's supply fell off 100,000,000 pounds from the year 1912.

The number of sheep in the aggregate is gradually decreasing throughout the world. For several years the price of wool in the world's market at London has generally been higher than that of the American market at Boston. Under the new law our American sheep raisers have begun to export certain classes of wool where they can get the best world's prices, instead of being compelled, as heretofore, to accept arbitrary prices in the United States. Trade laws as to wool, as well as trade laws generally, are created by and respond to world-wide conditions, and can not be controlled by legislation. In response to the new tariff law, the woolen manufacturers immediately marked down prices in many lines, the benefits of which were in sight of the American consumer; but before they had disposed of their high-priced stocks on hand the war came on, and under its entire protection they have marked prices up again. This fact is also true of the cotton trade. I append tables fully explanatory of woolen conditions under the new tariff law. These tables clearly show the ability of our domestic manufacturers, with the advantage of existing tariff margins, to maintain their industry at a reasonable profit without injury from foreign importations, although they will, after the war, be required to make reasonable reductions of former high and extortionate prices.

The cotton schedule of the new tariff law will compel the sale of cotton goods to the people at reasonable prices, and at the same time afford no just complaint by the cotton mills. The increase of cotton-goods importations during the first nine months of the year 1914 was only a little over $2,000,000, or less than 5 per cent. We have been exporting from $20,000,000 to $40,000,000 of cotton goods to many countries of the world. We grow our own cotton, and ship and sell to foreign mills an immense proportion of their product of consumption. It is absurd to contend, especially under conditions of war and conditions that must exist for many years following the war, that foreign mills can pay the high ocean freights on raw cotton and high insurance back and forth across the ocean and undersell our own manufacturers, either in the United States or elsewhere. This economic condition must exist in any event for many years to come.

The great blow inflicted upon the textile and all other industries in Europe by the war, the destruction of mills in Poland, in Alsace-Lorraine, in France, and Belgium, the complete disorganization of their best mills by the demands of the armies for their skilled employees—these and like conditions will not only leave the textile market of the United States almost undisputed to our domestic manufacturers, but likewise will open to them the markets of the world if they will but exercise reasonable energy and enterprise to secure them. It is true that we are temporarily handicapped with respect to dyestuffs, the chief amount of which we have heretofore procured from Germany. American ingenuity, however, can soon solve this problem. The imports of cotton cloth for the year 1914, taken in the aggregate, is in no wise calculated seriously to injure American cotton mills, although there was a substantial increase in certain lines. Our estimated consumption of cotton cloth, including duck, for the year 1914 is $546,323,000, while our imports for this year were $11,000,000, or 2.01 per cent of our consumption. Naturally there has been uncertainty of cotton prices and instability of the cotton market under war conditions, and the mills have only sought to meet the immediate needs and buyers of mill products have only purchased temporary supplies. Nineteen hundred and fourteen was a hard year for the cotton grower. The war greatly delayed and reduced the usual European purchases. The crop of 1914 was next to the largest crop in the history of the industry in the United States. In addition to these handicaps, the cotton-export countries of England have been unable to purchase the usual amounts of cotton goods, and on this account alone the output of English mills has been greatly reduced. However, our cotton exports are only 2,000,000 bales behind those of the year 1913; and notwithstanding the serious war conditions, the prices are higher than at this date in 1900, 1902, and 1905. There is no reason why present cotton prices will not at least be maintained. In view of the world's manifest needs, only the great European war could have materially cut down prices of raw cotton at this time. No tariff considerations could possibly affect this condition. The future for the American cotton manufacturer is clearing and presents splendid prospects. If the cotton-mill men will make reasonable effort to meet the new conditions by correcting bad factory management, selling methods, by improving efficiency, and so forth, instead of listening to the siren song of standpat Republicans and waiting for another high tariff, they will during the next few years make wonderful strides in the development of the cotton textile industry.

After the reduction of the duties, sugar prices in this country responded in the way of substantial reductions. When the war began, however, England's supply of sugar, which had measurably come from Austria, was cut off, and she at once made large purchases from this and other countries, and the Austrian supply being eliminated from the world's market, the result was that prices have again risen. This is but another illustration of the sound economic law of the world's supply and demand, which can not be materially influenced by any kind of local legislation. This law has likewise applied to food products. There is a shortage of food in the world at present. The result is that crops are bringing higher prices than ordinarily prevail. No tariff or like artificial considerations can affect them. The price of wheat, for instance, is high, more on account of the demand than the supply. The closing of the Dardanelles shut off the export of wheat from Russia. The war will greatly reduce the normal European crops for the year 1915. The American people can feel assured of good prices for all the foodstuffs they can possibly produce during this year. Our $50,000,000 of tobacco exports have been greatly handicapped and reduced by the war, with the result that there is stagnation and depression in tobacco.

Republican calamity howlers have heretofore said that the new tariff would create low prices and ruin manufacturers and that it should be increased. Now they say the Democrats have not carried out their promise by creating low prices under the new tariff. They are trying to ride two or three horses by announcing to the wheat grower, the wool grower, the sugar producer, and the cattle raiser that the high prices of their products are due to the war, while they hypocritically tell the coal operator, the cotton grower, the tobacco raiser, the lumber owner, and others suffering stagnation of business that the Underwood tariff is solely responsible. They seek to mystify and mislead the American consumer by pointing to the present general high range of war prices and attempt to divert attention from these war effects by attributing them to the new tariff. There is no trick they are not resorting to in this respect. No arguments could be more pure humbug and essentially dishonest than these. Apart from the facts and conditions I have cited with respect to prices and values, it should be remembered that during the past 20 years there has been a gradual rise in the scale of prices the world over. The law of supply and demand as to labor and the products of labor and capital, and also the great increase in the gold supply of the world are most important factors in this connection. In 1893 the gold output of the world was only $130,650,000. It has been gradually increasing until in 1914 it reached the enormous sum of $455,305,000. The gold output of the United States alone for 1914 was $92,800,000. The United States has a larger stock of gold than any other country, amounting to $1,824,000,000.

The tariff bugaboo is also paraded before the coal operator, although the facts show no remote relation between the tariff and the present coal-trade conditions. To-day many countries in South America have curtailed railroad and manufacturing activities for lack of coal. Sweden and some of the continental countries are in greater distress. The scarcity of ships and the enormous freight rates and insurance make it impossible to export coal on profitable terms. The lack of the normal consumption by the railroads of this country has also been a factor in its trade effects. Standpatters have sought to arouse the lumber people by specious tariff pleas, when they well know that the tariff has not affected, and could not affect, the decline in the building business during the past two years, which has occurred in every country. Our great exports of pine to South America have been cut off, both by scarcity of vessels, high freights, and by the inability of those countries to purchase on account of business stagnation. The railroads have not made their usual purchases for construction work for the reasons already given. A standpat gentleman wails continuously because British Columbia, a little Province that recently borrowed $2,500,000 from the United States, has sent a few shingles into the Northwest to enable the settlers to protect themselves from the rain and snows of the winter, and wants a wholesale tariff revision for the benefit of a few lumber kings and rich mill owners.

When under the stress of political adversity, the standpat Republican high protectionist rolls his eyes heavenward and pretends to clamor for a tariff commission. In the light of the real attitude of the Republican Party toward tariff commissions in the past, this ruse is as amusing as it is hypocritical. Both the Republican Party and the protected manufacturers have always really opposed a tariff commission except as a political expedient. They well know that an impartial report of a commission would prescribe tariff rates substantially as those contained in the present new law. Furthermore, from four to eight years would be required in which to enact a new tariff law based upon the findings of a commission. No greedy manufacturer would stand for this delay. If restored to power the Republicans at the behest of the manufacturers would brush aside tariff-commission suggestions and deal with the tariff in the old way, as they did in 1909.

Republicans paid no attention to the report of the tariff commission in 1883, nor to President Taft's recent tariff board. The report of the latter showed that wages were not a reason for high duties. So long as protection for protection's sake constitutes one of the fundamental issues between the two political parties no commission can settle the question. The situation is that whenever the manufacturers control Congress they demand and receive all the protection graft in sight; but when the people's representatives, unhampered, are in control, such extortion is eliminated from our tariff laws, as was done in the Underwood law. Prior to the Civil War the doctrine of protection had been repudiated by all parties, including the Republican, and driven from the field of economic discussion. Its complete overthrow was again accomplished in the passage of the Underwood law. Monopoly had hitherto controlled production, distribution, and prices in this country. Neither the accustomed manufacturers' lobby nor special interests had a hand in writing this law, which was framed in the interest of all the people. Save for the war the Underwood law would have yielded ample revenue to meet the reasonable expenditures of the Government. And I strongly favor rigid economy. The income-tax law alone will yield $100,000,000 or more in normal business times. Under the war conditions the Underwood law will still yield a larger revenue than would the Payne law had it continued in operation, for the reason that while dutiable imports have fallen off under the new law, which is designed to encourage increased imports, they would have declined far more under the high and, in many instances, prohibitive tariff rates in the Payne law. The new law has removed most of the arbitrary restraints imposed upon legitimate trade and commerce by the class provisions of former laws. It marks the end of subsidies, bounties, and special privileges, all of which have been uppermost in the minds of those responsible for protective legislation. Having been in a hothouse so long it is but natural that some of our manufacturers and their standpat representatives in Congress would whine and cry for their former privileges. We have already heard harangues in this House which sounded not unlike the pleas of leaders of the Industrial Workers of the World and made in an effort to magnify our disturbed business and to cast odium upon recent tariff and other constructive legislation.

These people are still demanding high tariff protection against Belgium, whose remaining inhabitants are chiefly widows and orphans, and which is practically a barren waste, with no hope of even partial recovery for a generation; against France, most of whose able-bodied and skilled workmen have closed her factories and workshops and gone to the war, from which a majority may never return; against Germany, whom this war will leave so utterly prostrate as to require many years to even approach the restoration of her former commercial conditions; against England, whose citizens have likewise gone to war and abandoned indefinitely the work of maintaining her commerce, with the result that her business decline and demoralization from the war will become so great that the work of the next generation can scarcely repair it. Imagine the Steel Trust, the Woolen Trust, the Harvester Trust, the Sugar Trust, and other giant octopuses—creatures of special privilege in this country—loudly crying, like puny children, for protection against widows, orphans, and the old men who are left to maintain the tottering industries in the principal European countries, while most of their able-bodied citizens are being shot and killed or wounded in the war!

The fact should not be overlooked, but carefully weighed, that during the past two years the United States has only had trade reaction and depression in spots and in certain lines of business. The further fact should be kept in mind that the Underwood tariff law was designed to afford an increase of dutiable imports of manufactures of every kind to the extent of reasonable and fair competition. This condition bid fair to occur, as designed, at the outbreak of the war. On the other hand, manufacturers have been given free raw material, making it possible for them to compete with other nations in any part of the world.

The war not only greatly augments their opportunities, but offers to the American people engaged in every important line of finance, industry, and commerce the most unlimited possibilities offered any country in all history. Already many lines of business have commenced their onward march. The United States is the great storehouse from which both the warring and the peace countries must draw an immense portion of manufactures, foodstuffs, and raw materials. To meet these unlimited requirements will tax the ability, energy, and enterprise of the American people. I have the utmost faith that the great body of our business men will throw off any lethargy they have acquired under the reign of special privilege and do their part toward making this country the center of both the finance and the commerce of the world. The United States, however, can not be lifted to this exalted plane of power and wealth and greatness if any considerable number of our business men give heed to the constant mutterings and calamity howling of blind partisans, demagogues, and agitators, who in the main seek the restoration of special privilege. These prophets of evil are abroad in the land attempting on every occasion to insult the President of the United States and the United States itself, just as other copperheads have appeared and shrieked during former critical times. Despite their efforts, under our existing sound financial and commercial conditions—and they never were sounder—business in practically every line is either gradually or rapidly improving and developing. Soon this improvement will become complete, and then permanent and boundless prosperity through this country will bless not only the American people, but the world.

APPENDIX A.

Comparisons of receipts from customs and income tax of corporations and individuals, paid into Treasury during fiscal years named below.

	For year ended June 30, 1914.	For year ended June 30, 1913.
Customs	$292,320,014.51	$318,891,395.86
Corporation and income tax	71,381,274.74	35,006,299.84
Total	363,701,289.25	252,897,695.70

APPENDIX B.

COMPARISON OF THE IMPORTS INTO THE UNITED STATES DURING THE CALENDAR YEARS 1913 AND 1914.

The total imports (dutiable and free) during the calendar year 1913 amounted to $1,792,596,480, as compared with $1,789,276,001 during the same period of 1914. The total imports for 1914 were $3,320,479, or two-tenths of 1 per cent less than those for 1913.

The following table shows the imports by groups:

Comparison showing the imports of crude materials, foodstuffs, manufactures, and miscellaneous imports, 1913 and 1914.

[Compiled from the December Monthly Summary of the Foreign Commerce of the United States.]

Group.	1913	1914	Decrease or increase in 1914.	Per cent change in 1914.
Crude materials for use in manufacturing	$604,962,567	$597,920,626	[1] $7,041,941	[1] 1.2
Foodstuffs and food animals	419,137,662	491,208,544	[2] 72,070,882	[2] 17.2
Manufactures	753,689,536	682,632,669	[1] 71,056,867	[1] 9.4
All other	14,806,715	17,514,162	[2] 2,707,447	[2] 15.4
Total	1,792,596,480	1,789,276,001	[1] 3,320,479	[1] .2

[1] Decrease. [2] Increase.

1. That the total imports in 1914 were $3,320,479 less than those in 1913.
2. That the imports of foodstuffs in 1914 were $72,070,882 greater than in 1913.
3. That the imports of crude materials in 1914 were $7,041,941 less than those of 1913, and the imports of manufactures were $71,056,867 less than those of 1913.

A compilation showing all the articles in which the total value of the imports was greater than $5,000,000 during the calendar years 1913 and 1914 will account for $1,666,549,307 of the 1913 imports and $1,670,391,442 of those for 1914, and show pretty well the tendencies of the import trade.

The following table is a comparison of the imports in 1913 and 1914 of all the articles in which the total import value has exceeded $5,000,000:

Comparison of articles imported into the United States during the calendar years 1913 and 1914, in which the total import value exceeded $5,000,000.

APPENDIX E.

[From Bradstreet's, New York, Saturday, Jan. 9, 1915.]

In view of the wide range of hostilities, with all its consequences upon the finance, trade, and industry alike of belligerents and neutrals, it seems like ancient history to speak now of the starting point of the present trouble in the autumn of 1912. And yet the toppling of the laboriously built-up structure of commerce seems to date from October of that year. Certainly since then the commercial history of the world has been a tale of liquidation, of the ending of booms, of a tightening of credit, resulting in a virtual collapse, in which all continents have shared or by which they have been unfavorably affected. Last year the word "moratorium" ceased to be a mere dictionary term and became a living actuality to the world. Nothing like the present conflict has desolated mankind since the days of Napoleon and, before him, since the time of Frederick the Great; but the interdependence of world relations to-day makes the results of war all the more severe and far-reaching.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] entertained the House the other day with a speech on the tariff. As usual, he concluded his remarks with an appeal for the restoration of the duty on sugar. I confess, however, that I was somewhat disappointed that the gentleman did not have more to say about the farmer who raises the beets from which the sugar factories extract the sugar.

In view of the fact that many of the beet-sugar companies of this country will this year earn dividends of 100 per cent on the capital invested, while many of the sugar-beet farmers will not make expenses, it seems to me that the gentleman may very properly be charged with having wasted sympathy on the Sugar Trust and with having denied it to those who are entitled to it in generous measure.

I do not intend to discuss the sugar tariff to-day. We will cross that bridge when we come to it.

I have arisen for the purpose of calling the attention of the country to the fact that the Sugar Trust, which controls most of the refineries on the Atlantic coast, and which dominates the great majority of the beet-sugar factories of the Middle West and far West, is depriving the farmers of just compensation for their beets, and thereby materially interfering with the development of the beet-sugar industry.

TRUST CLOSES FACTORIES.

There are seven beet-sugar factories in my district. Three were operated during the last season and four were closed down. The three which were operated have modern equipment and are favorably located with reference to the production of beets. At least three of those which were closed down have antiquated machinery, and can not produce sugar economically.

Despite this fact, however, all these factories could have been run at a profit if the Sugar Trust would have consented to pay a fair price for the farmers' beets. Why did the sugar companies prefer to permit their ancient machinery to rust rather than allow the farmer to benefit from the high prices which have resulted from the European war?

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yeld?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. The reason why is that for this last year's crop they should have and must have contracted for the beets a year ago, before you gave them any notice that there was going to be a war in Europe.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman made that statement, but that does not apply to next year's crop.

Mr. FORDNEY. No; but will you give them any——

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I have yielded to the gentleman, and I have only 10 minutes. I can not yield any more. I trust the gentleman will pardon me. The farmers of my district are prepared to supply ample beets for every one of these factories, but they insist that they shall share in the benefits which flow from the high price of sugar.

HIGH PRICES FOR SUGAR.

Granulated sugar is now selling in eastern markets at $5.75 per hundred pounds. It commands $6.25 per hundred pounds in the Denver market, and corresponding prices in the other markets of the country. Six dollars per hundred pounds would probably be a good average price.

The farmers of the Arkansas Valley in my district have organized and have demanded $6 per ton for beets testing from 12 to 16 per cent, and 33⅓ cents increase for every 1 per cent or fraction thereof above 16 per cent.

This means that the farmers are demanding that they receive about 2 cents a pound for the sugar in their beets, the same sugar that the factory is selling for from 5¾ to 6¼ cents a pound.

FARMERS' MODERATE DEMANDS.

In view of the fact that the leading sugar experts in this country have testified time and time again that it costs less than 1 cent a pound to extract sugar from beets, the farmers' demands do not seem unreasonable; in fact, they are so very reasonable that one is amazed at their moderation.

I hold in my hand, and I will make it a part of these remarks, a statement prepared by the Otero County (Colo.) Beet Growers' Association, and signed by the president and secretary.

This statement deals with the Rocky Ford (Colo.) sugar factory, and shows that during the season just closed the factory handled 201,600 tons of beets. In a public statement the factory management claimed that it paid an average of $7.44 per ton for these beets. We have it on the word of the farmers who produced the beets that this statement is false, and that, as a matter of fact, the average price was $5.30. The total that the farmers received from this factory for their beets was $1,068,480. It is estimated that it cost the factory $3 a ton to handle these beets. This item covers the expense of manufacturing, freight, cartage, and so forth.

The total cost of the factory was therefore $1,673,280.

FACTORY'S ENORMOUS PROFITS.

According to the factory's own statement its output for the season amounted to 500,000 bags of 100 pounds each.

The farmers figure that the factory received $5.25 per sack for this sugar, a very moderate estimate as I have shown, because the current price for sugar is from 50 cents to a dollar higher than that figure. Let us accept the farmers' figure, however, of $5.25 per sack, and we find that the sugar company received $2,625,000 for the sugar. It is estimated that it received $164,308 for various by-products, or a total of $2,789,308.

If we deduct from this latter sum the amount paid the farmers for their beets and the total cost to the factory for handling the beets, we find that the company's net profit was $1,116,028.

This is on an investment of about $1,000,000.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Was the production in 1914 of sugar beets in Colorado much below that of 1913?

Mr. KEATING. No; it was approximately the same. I have not the exact figures at hand.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. That was so throughout the country also, was it not?

Mr. KEATING. I have not the figures at hand. I do not think the reduction was very great.

FARMERS' FIGURES ACCURATE.

I have studied the sugar question with some care, and I unhesitatingly approve as accurate the figures submitted by the Otero County Beet Growers' Association. The only complaint I have to make concerning them is that they underestimate rather than overestimate the sugar company's profits.

In this same statement the farmers set forth the cost of raising beets, and they assure us that the men who produced the beets which enabled the Rocky Ford sugar factory to earn this tremendous profit actually suffered a loss of $128,320 on the season's crop.

In view of this fact the farmers demand that the sugar company shall increase the price paid for beets, and they insist that if their demands are not granted they will plant other crops on their lands. As I have frequently stated on this floor, the farmers of Colorado are extremely fortunate, in that they are not at the mercy of the Sugar Trust. When the trust undertakes to deprive them of a fair return on their product, they are in a position to turn to other crops, and this is what they now announce they are prepared to do.

STATEMENT BY OTERO GROWERS.

At this point in my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I desire to insert the following statement from the Otero County Beet Growers' Association as it appeared in the Rocky Ford Tribune of recent date:

MORE FIGURES CONCERNING THE BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

In recent issues of the Rocky Ford Tribune and Enterprise certain facts and figures were given by the local beet-sugar factory which we would like to extend and note the result.

First. They say that they have paid the farmers in this locality $1,500,000, harvested 201,600 tons of beets from 17,000 acres, and manufactured 500,000 bags of sugar.

Second. If we divide 1,500,000 by 201,600, we have $7.44 as average price paid for beets. This is misleading. We think $5.30 is much nearer the average. If we multiply 201,600 by $5.30, we have $1,068,480 as the actual amount received. Now let us see what it cost the farmers to get this $1,068,480.

The figures which I shall use in computing the cost of beets per acre to raise and market are those arrived at by the convention held at Denver, December 5, 1914, by delegates from the States of Montana, Nebraska, Wyoming, and Colorado.

They discussed every item of expense carefully, taking the sworn statement of the Longmont factory, which belongs to the Great Western Sugar Co., as a basis of comparison, and the report of the committee was $70.40 per acre.

Hon. T. M. Robertson, chief of the Federal Department of Commerce, was present at the reading of the report. He had come from Washington with many records on beet culture and cost of production especially to attend this convention. He compared his data with that of the farmers, and was agreeably surprised to find that they tallied so closely with those arrived at by the convention. We have the schedule in full.

So if we multiply the 17,000 acres by $70.40 we have $1,196,800 as the cost to the farmer to get $1,068,480, an actual loss to the farmer of $128,320. This kind of financiering will impoverish any community.

In order to be fair let us figure the factory's gain or loss.

We are told in that publication that they manufactured 500,000 bags of sugar. Our merchants are now paying $5.65 per bag for sugar, but to be conservative let us figure the price at $5.25. Multiplying 500,000 by this we have $2,625,000 for sale of sugar. Now, to this we desire to add some other items. We were told at the factory that 53 per cent of the weight of the beet returned in pulp; 53 per cent of 201,600 is 106,848 tons of pulp. This pulp is sold at 25 cents, 50 cents, and 75 cents per ton; taking the average, 50 cents, this pulp is worth $53,428. We find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS'S speech made in the United States Senate Monday, September 15, 1913, on the beet-sugar industry and the tariff that 5 per cent of the sirup to every ton of beets is sold by the factories for feeding purposes; at the local factory it is sold at $11 per ton.

Five per cent of 201,600 is 10,080 tons; at $11 per ton, is $110,880; adding the value of these by-products together we have $164,308; add this to the sale of sugar, we have $2,789,308 as the total income, not to mention the brown sugar they still have on hand.

Now let us figure the sugar company's expense. Two hundred and one thousand six hundred tons of beets, at $5.30, is $1,068,480 paid the farmer. In the above CONGRESSIONAL RECORD previously referred to, on page 10, we find that $2.50 covered the actual expense of manufacturing a ton of beets into sugar, and that they expected to reduce this cost to $2, or lower, and we find that $3 will pay every item of expense—manufacturing, freight, cartage, etc.—according to this record, and from other information which we have at hand we think it is very conservative.

Now, if we multiply 201,600 by $3 we have $604,800 as cost of manufacturing the beets into sugar.

If we add this to the $1,068,480 paid the farmer, we have the sugar company's total cost, which is $1,673,280, as the total cost to the factory. Now, if we subtract this amount from the total income, we can readily see what they have left. The total income was $2,789,308; from this subtract $1,675,280, and we have $1,116,028; this looks like a good income from a $1,000,000 investment.

In view of the above conditions and the probable advanced prices of sugar for the next year, on account of the European war, the beet growers of Otero County and the Arkansas Valley have organized and have asked from our sugar factories an advance in price to $6 per ton for beets testing from 12 to 16 per cent, and 33⅓ cents increase for every 1 per cent or fraction thereof above 16 per cent.

Also 20 per cent of the pulp to the weight of the beets delivered.

So far we have had no reply from the representatives of the local factory. They seem to be inclined to ignore our organization and are sending their field men out to the growers to try to persuade them to sign contracts.

In view of the present prices of wheat and the possibility of still advance prices over the present on account of the conflict in Europe many of our growers are contemplating sowing wheat. And for the purpose of talking over this phase of the matter and to ascertain as nearly as possible how much will be needed so we can ship it in by the carload lots meetings will be held at the following places and dates: Weitzer, Monday evening, 7.30, February 1; Newdale, Wednesday evening, February 3; Fowler, Thursday evening, February 4; Holbrook, Friday evening, February 5; Las Animas, Monday evening, February 8. All growers are requested to attend.

FARMERS' HARD STRUGGLE.

Mr. Chairman, this struggle between the farmers of Colorado and the Sugar Trust is not of recent origin. From the moment that the trust secured control of the Great Western Sugar Co. and other beet-sugar concerns it has endeavored to force the farmers to raise beets at a loss. The farmers have been wise enough, however, to organize, and they have gradually forced up the price, until prior to the passage of the Underwood tariff bill they were receiving an average of about $5.50 per ton for 15 per cent beets.

When the Underwood bill became a law the Sugar Trust, through its champions in Congress and through the newspapers and magazines which it could reach, proclaimed that the beet-sugar industry was in serious danger of destruction, and that the farmer must be prepared to accept a lower price for his beets.

Accordingly, contracts were offered to the farmers which provided for a reduction of about 50 cents a ton in the price of beets. This was the situation when the European war broke out, and the price of granulated sugar rapidly advanced 2 or 3 cents a pound. Realizing that the sugar companies were in a position to make enormous profits, the farmers pleaded for a restoration of the old schedule. At first their demand was peremptorily refused, but after a time the sugar companies were made to see the light and return to the prices paid prior to the enactment of the Underwood law.

PRESIDENT AIDS GROWERS.

The friends of the Sugar Trust have paraded this action as an evidence of the trust's generous treatment of the farmer. I think it is time that the facts were placed in the RECORD, in order that they may be available when future Congresses discuss the sugar question.

I herewith submit certain documents which I believe conclusively prove that our Democratic President, through the Department of Justice, was directly responsible for the trust changing its position and granting the demands of the farmers.

In order that these documents which I am making a part of my remarks may be better understood it will be necessary for me to indulge in a short explanation.

When, following the passage of the Underwood bill, the Great Western and other sugar companies announced that they would insist upon cutting the price paid the farmers for their beets, I took the liberty of calling President Wilson's attention to the situation, and requested that an investigation of the beet-sugar industry be instituted by the Department of Commerce, with a view to ascertaining if the beet-sugar companies were justified in taking the action which they contemplated. I have reason to believe that other western Representatives and

Senators made similar suggestions, and these appeals were seconded by letters from some of the sugar-beet growers.

MR. GIESLER'S LETTER.

Among others, Mr. J. D. Giesler, of Johnstown, Colo., under date of February 14, 1914, wrote the President, submitting data sustaining his charge that there was nothing to justify the proposed cut in the price of beets. The President referred Mr. Giesler's letter to the Department of Justice, and the documents which I hold in my hand show that the department acted promptly on Mr. Giesler's complaint.

About September 10, 1914, Hon. James R. Knapp, special assistant to the United States attorney for the district of New York, had an interview with Hon. Charles W. Waterman, the attorney for and one of the directors of the Great Western Sugar Co. The result of that interview can best be told in Mr. Knapp's own language, which I quote as follows from a report made by Mr. Knapp to Hon. H. Snowden Marshall, United States attorney, New York:

I pointed out the fact to him (Mr. Waterman) that the European war having brought about a large increase in the price of refined sugar in this country, the Great Western Sugar Co. could amply afford to pay for their beets this season the same amount they had been paying in the past; that a failure to do so would tend to demonstrate that the Great Western Sugar Co. was using the power which it had by reason of its being the only beet company in northeastern Colorado to depress the price when conditions seemed to warrant it, but not to raise the price when conditions, on the other hand, warranted an increase. I informed him that, personally, I believed his company might find itself in danger of an additional prosecution, inasmuch as the Government was seriously investigating conditions in the western beet-sugar companies and was ready to take such steps as the facts should warrant. I suggested to him very forcibly that I believed it would be the duty of the Great Western Sugar Co. to take some action in the line of raising the price of beets to the farmers by reason of the changed conditions occurring because of the war, and asked him to consider this very seriously. According to the letter from Mr. Giesler, an announcement of an increase of price of 50 cents per ton by the Great Western Sugar Co. took place on September 30, 1914.

HOW THE TRUST LOVES THE FARMER.

Mr. Chairman, it will be seen from the foregoing that the Sugar Trust's love for the beet-sugar farmer did not develop until after Uncle Sam, through a Democratic President and a Democratic Department of Justice, had flourished his big stick.

Right here I think it is proper to state that, so far as I know, none of the champions of the tariff on sugar have ever publicly protested against the sugar companies' robbery of the sugar-beet farmer. Their only interest in the latter seems to be to use him as the instrument by which they may secure tremendously profitable special privileges for the trust. After the privileges have been secured, in the form of excessive tariff rates, the poor farmer is permitted to shift for himself.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in order to make the record complete, I beg leave to print Mr. Giesler's letter to Hon. H. Snowden Marshall and Mr. Marshall's response.

MR. GIESLER'S LETTER.

THE JOHNSTOWN MILLING AND ELEVATOR CO.,
Johnstown, Colo., October 8, 1914.

Mr. H. SNOWDEN MARSHALL,
New York, N. Y.

MY DEAR SIR: On or about February 14, 1914, I wrote President Wilson a letter with data complaining against the Great Western Sugar Co. for this 1914 contract they gave the farmer to grow beets, and the same was forwarded to the Department of Justice, and under date of March 2, 1914, it was turned over to you, and on April the 21st you received a letter and data from me. On April 25 you wrote me with initial JRK and JDR.

Later on you asked Mr. Fitch to call on me, and he did, and we got a lot of evidence from the farmers in different localities, and now I wish to call your attention to the fact that the sugar factory people have authorized the press to say that they will pay for the 1914 crop of beets the same as they paid for the 1913, and annul the 1914 contract. They claim this to be a voluntary act of the Great Western Sugar Co. to the farmers, and makes them the good fellows. Some of us believe that your investigation that you are making or some one of the Department has brought a pressure to bear that has caused the Great Western to make this advance, rather than stand an investigation.

They claim they can afford to do it on account of the war prices, otherwise the tariff would hold them to the 1914 contract.

J. D. GIESLER.

OCTOBER 13, 1914.

J. D. GIESLER, Esq.,
Care of the Johnstown Milling & Elevator Co.,
Johnstown, Colo.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated October 8, 1914, and beg to advise you that Mr. Knapp, who has charge of the sugar case, will return on Friday next, whereupon your letter will be referred to him for further reply.

Yours, respectfully,

H. SNOWDEN MARSHALL,
United States Attorney.

FORCING THE TRUST TO TERMS.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit the report to Hon. James R. Knapp, special assistant to Hon. H. Snowden Marshall, in which Mr. Knapp tells of his very interesting interview with the attorney for the Great Western Sugar Co., and of how it resulted so beneficially to the beet-sugar growers of the West:

REPORT TO H. SNOWDEN MARSHALL, UNITED STATES ATTORNEY, BY JAMES R. KNAPP, SPECIAL ASSISTANT, ON MATTER OF CONTRACTS FOR BEETS BY GREAT WESTERN SUGAR CO. FOR CROP OF 1914.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
UNITED STATES ATTORNEY'S OFFICE,
New York, October 20, 1914.

SIR: This report is made to put you in information of facts relative to a letter of J. S. Giesler, of October 8, 1914, to you inquiring concerning the reasons for the increase of the price of beets by the Great Western Sugar Co.

Mr. Giesler made a complaint to the President in February in a letter, stating that the Great Western Sugar Co. had reduced the price of beets to the farmers in Colorado, giving as the reason the 25 per cent reduction in tariff, and claiming this was a subterfuge and an act of suppression. This letter was referred by the Attorney General to you for investigation, and by you to me. I procured the matter to be investigated by the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, the actual work being performed by Special Agent William S. Fitch at Denver, Colo., and vicinity. His investigation extended over a period of a month or more, during which time he interviewed many farmers and local people in Colorado, securing copies of contracts, etc. The facts were that the Great Western Sugar Co. announced in January, 1914, that the prices which were to be paid for beets for the season of 1914 would be paid on a sliding scale contract, at a reduction of 25 cents per ton below the price in those contracts which had been in existence for some years prior to that time; that the reason for doing this was the 25 per cent reduction in tariff, with the statement that "as it appears now unless a radically favorable readjustment should occur, which seems unlikely, present conditions will render it impossible for the company to operate after the year 1914." The opinion among the farmers interviewed was, in a great many instances, that this reduction in the price of beets would make it impossible for the farmers to raise beets, and many believed that the cut was not justified by the reduction in tariff. These views were not unanimous, nor was there sufficient evidence to satisfy me that the company could, with the evidence at hand, be proven to have made a cut in the price not justified by the conditions, or furnish a basis for any prosecution or use of this testimony other than possibly as cumulative evidence in the Sherman law case against the American Sugar Refining Co. and others for what it might be worth, to show the control which the Great Western Sugar Co. had over the farmers in Colorado.

About September 10, 1914, I had an interview with Mr. Charles W. Waterman, the attorney for and one of the directors of the Great Western Sugar Co. I informed him of the fact that there was widespread dissatisfaction among the farmers in Colorado by reason of the cut in the prices of beets, and that the Government was investigating those conditions.

I pointed out the fact to him that the European war having brought about a large increase in the price of refined sugar in this country, the Great Western Sugar Co. could amply afford to pay for their beets this season the same amount they had been paying in the past; that a failure to do so would tend to demonstrate that the Great Western Sugar Co. was using the power which it had by reason of its being the only beet company in northeastern Colorado to depress the price when conditions seemed to warrant it, but not to raise the price when conditions, on the other hand, warranted an increase. I informed him that, personally, I believed that his company might find itself in danger of an additional prosecution, inasmuch as the Government was seriously investigating conditions in the western beet-sugar companies, and was ready to take such steps as the facts should warrant. I suggested to him very forcibly that I believed it would be the duty of the Great Western Sugar Co. to take some action in the line of raising the price of beets to the farmers by reason of the changed conditions occurring because of the war, and asked him to consider this very seriously. According to the letter from Mr. Giesler, an announcement of an increase of price of 50 cents per ton by the Great Western Sugar Co. took place on September 30, 1914.

I sailed for England on September 12 for the taking of testimony in the sugar case, and therefore received no announcement from Mr. Waterman of his decision on the suggestion made by me. I am unable to state, therefore, whether the rise in the price of beets is because of the action taken by the Government, but think that the coincidence of facts and times warrant the inference that the action of the Government was in part, at least, responsible for the rise in prices.

Respectfully,

JAMES R. KNAPP,
Special Assistant to United States Attorney.

SOME "INSIDE" FACTS.

Prior to the last campaign I received a very interesting letter from a Colorado gentleman, who owns a generous block of stock in the Great Western Sugar Co. It contains much interesting inside information concerning the profits of this branch of the great Sugar Trust. I think it should become a part of the permanent record, and with the permission of the House I will insert it as follows in my remarks:

Hon. EDWARD KEATING, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

The information that I have secured is from a report issued by the Great Western Sugar Co., and which report was intended for a select few. This report is in the hands of their chosen brokers and is veiled in great secrecy, the brokers having been informed that should they give out the said report or statement in any way for publication, or if they should permit copies of the same to be made that they would forfeit all claim to receiving any such report for themselves in the future (from the company or any of its officers).

It has been very difficult to obtain this information except as it was possible for me to memorize the various items. I fear that I can not give as full and accurate a statement regarding it as I would have been able to do had I been allowed to copy the statement. However, you can absolutely rely on the figures to the extent that I can remember the items.

GREAT WESTERN'S ASSETS.

The Great Western Sugar Co. statement shows that on March 1, 1914, they had on hand cash totaling $3,001,000. In addition to this they had at that time $7,868,000 worth of sugar. The sugar on hand was invoiced at the cost of production, which cost included every item of expense, such as storage, carrying charges, interest on the money, etc. Presuming that the sugar was sold at the price quoted in the public press as coming from the officers of this company, a sum equal to $10,500,000 or more was realized when the sugar was disposed of in the open market. In addition the Great Western Sugar Co. statement carried an item of nearly $900,000 for pulp and molasses. The pulp being sold to the farmers and also being used for feeding cattle, this statement shows that the cattle owned by the Great Western Sugar Co. are invoiced at $506,000. In addition to all this the company's statement shows that they have beet seed and other material on hand to the amount of almost $900,000, and this report still further shows that they have several hundred thousand dollars of collectible bills outstanding.

This is only part of their report and does not include the earnings or cash reserve of the beet-sugar factories located at Billings, Mont., and Scottsbluff, Nebr., nor does it contain any statement concerning the earnings of the Great Western Railway.

We might, if we wished, extend this statement by giving some of the particulars concerning other operations of this company, such as its effort to create sentiment against the Underwood tariff bill and the reduction of the tariff on sugar. For instance, it has been charged in the Denver newspapers that certain sums had been paid out of the earnings of this company for the employment of lobbyists and others, for maintaining headquarters, and for the dissemination of literature looking to the manufacture of favorable sentiment. In addition to all this they have always embraced the opportunity to deceive the public as to the earning power of the Great Western Sugar Co. During the past two years they have been repeatedly buying space in various newspapers, equaling two whole pages, displaying pictures of the factories that would be closed down when the Underwood tariff went into effect.

NO FACTORY CLOSED.

Up to date no factory belonging to this company has closed its doors. On the contrary, for the sugar campaign beginning about October 1, 1913, and ending with the last of February, 1914, this company made a profit of at least $2,000,000 over and above its dividend requirements.

Taking their own figures, they paid to the farmer $5.50 per ton for his sugar beets, from which they received about 270 pounds of sugar. Multiplying the 270 pounds by $3.75 per hundred, the price at which the company "invoices" the sugar which it sells on the open market for as high as $6.25, we find they receive $10.32 for the sugar extracted from 1 ton of beets.

In addition they sell back the pulp which is the residue of the beets after the sugar has been extracted, receiving from the farmer from 50 cents to $1 per ton therefor, or else they feed it to their own stock upon which they fatten for the market. The proceeds from the sale of this pulp about pays for all factory operation; therefore the net earnings on each ton of sugar beets is the difference between the $5.50 paid to the farmer and the amount received from the consumer. At $3.75, the "invoice" price, this amount would be $10.32; but at $6, the prevailing market price, it would be $16.20.

CONCEALING ITS EARNINGS.

In giving the foregoing figures I forgot to mention that the Great Western Sugar Co. statement shows that in addition to their enormous holdings of cash and other properties that they have between five and six million dollars invested in other companies.

We could go on elaborating on these various items to a much greater extent, but will conclude by saying the officers of the company tell those on the inside not to urge any increase in dividends nor to ask for any statements until the tariff agitation is over, for by doing so they would destroy any hope for the retention of a tariff. Telling them the people of Colorado would not support them if they knew the inside story, and now Mr. Congressman KEATING, as they accuse you and your colleagues of disloyalty to one of the leading industries of this State, I would suggest that you dare and defy the officers of this Great Western Sugar Co. to make a clear, full, and itemized complete report of their earnings and disbursements for the period from 1903 up to and including 1914.

And if they accept your challenge they must admit and confess they have not only deceived the producing farmer but also the consumer, to say nothing of the investing public, and they are still continuing that policy of deception, to the detriment of Colorado and for the one purpose of placing a burden on a long-suffering public.

It is generally accepted that if the earnings of the subsidiary companies were included in the profits of the parent company there would be somewhere in the neighborhood of $26,000,000 earned during the past 10 years after the payment of dividends of 7 per cent on about $13,500,000 of preferred stock and 5 per cent on about $10,800,000 of common stock.

Mr. Chairman, I have not used the name of the gentleman who wrote the above letter. For business reasons it is best that he should not be drawn into this controversy, but I desire to state to the Members of the House that he is one of Colorado's well-known citizens, and a fearless, truthful man.

MORE "CONFIDENTIAL" REPORTS.

We are not compelled, however, Mr. Chairman, to depend upon anonymous communications for confirmation of most of the statements contained in the letter I have quoted. I beg leave to submit two confidential reports sent out to their customers by the Moody Manual Co., of 33 Broadway, New York. Many of the Members of the House are undoubtedly familiar with the Moody Manual Co. It furnishes its customers with what it describes as a "Daily Digest Service." This is supposed to be very confidential information concerning the financial conditions of great corporations whose stocks are dealt in on the exchanges of the country.

Here is the report concerning the Great Western Sugar Co. which the Moody Manual Co. sent out on October 13, 1914. I want to call particular attention to the second paragraph of this report, where it is stated that "the reduction of the sugar tariff gave a body blow to the beet-sugar industry, and earnings suffered a big decrease. We doubt if Great Western earned its 5 per cent dividend last year." The Moody Manual Co. believed this statement when it sent it out to its subscribers on October 13, 1914, but it was compelled to make a flat denial of it on October 22, 1914, as will be seen from the second report, which I submit herewith. The following is the Moody Manual Co.'s report of October 13, 1914:

[Moody Manual Co.—Daily Digest Service.]

THE GREAT WESTERN SUGAR CO.

In 1912 we gave our subscribers some surprising figures never before published, showing high book values for the common stock of the above-named company. A few months later, evidence brought out incidentally in court showed our figures to have been even too conservative, and that in 1910 the actual surplus was nearly $9,000,000 on the $16,544,000 common stock, indicating earnings for the first five years' operation of around 18 per cent annually on the common. In 1911 our information was that 43 per cent was earned.

The reduction of the sugar tariff gave a body blow to the beet-sugar industry, and earnings suffered a big decrease. We doubt if Great Western earned its 5 per cent dividend last year, and the stock fell below 40. Conditions arising from the war have given new hope to the industry, however, through the cutting down of European supplies and the resulting rise in prices, and the common stock, the principal market for which is in Denver, has rallied to about 50.

Europe produces about half the world's supply of sugar. (Estimates are 40 per cent to 50 per cent.) A shortage of 12 per cent of the world's production caused granulated to sell around 7½ cents a pound. The coming Cuban crop is expected to be heavy, but the best authorities expect a material cutting down not only of this year's but of next year's European crop, and that a relatively high price level will continue for two years, by which time the tariff outlook may change.

As usual, no official figures are available, but we have estimates from well-informed sources that the company will make from 3,500,000 to 4,500,000 bags of sugar during this season, now under way. Its earnings will, of course, depend upon the price during the next few months, but it is easily seen that each extra cent a pound will equal probably 40 per cent on the outstanding common, and that earning at present prices—6½ cents—may run up to 80 per cent on the stock.

Despite the newspaper talk of a possible shortage of beet seed, we understand that Great Western has been anticipating such an emergency, and has made provision for its seed supply for 1915 and 1916.

P. S.—All reports are rendered in strict confidence and for the use of subscribers only. Rumors, unauthenticated information, and opinions are presented only as such by this service, acting as the subscriber's agent, for his interest and information, and without guaranty as to their correctness. All reports should be judged by the light of the subscriber's own knowledge and information.

"REMARKABLE EARNINGS."

And, Mr. Chairman, here is the Moody Manual Co.'s report of October 22, in which even this conservative concern confesses amazement at the enormous earnings of the Great Western Sugar Co. at a time when the Underwood tariff was supposed to have destroyed all sugar industry.

GREAT WESTERN SUGAR CO.,
October 22, 1914.

Since our letter of October 13 on this company the price of raw sugar has declined considerably, with a drop in the refined which at the moment is expected to go even lower.

Subscribers should therefore bear in mind that the estimates of our previous letter was based on 6½-cent refined sugar, New York, and those interested in these shares should therefore watch carefully the market for the commodity during the next few months.

It goes without saying, however, that Great Western can stand a considerable drop in prices on the product of this year's campaign and still show remarkable earnings for the year.

In our letter of October 13 we stated that we doubted whether Great Western earned its 5 per cent common dividend last year. Since that time we have gained additional information which leads us to believe that the actual profits of the company were considerably in excess of the amount needed to pay the 5 per cent common dividend, a better showing than we really believed to be the case. The estimate which we now have seems to show that several hundred thousand dollars was earned above the common dividend. How much, if any, of this was charged off we are unable to say.

(Same P. S. as on other letter.)

SUGAR "LOBBY" RETURNS.

Mr. Chairman, as I stated in the beginning, it is not my intention to-day to discuss the sugar tariff. As the Members of this House know, the Underwood tariff bill reduced the tariff on sugar 25 per cent, and provided that sugar should be placed on the free list on May 1, 1916. I take it that no Democratic Congress will attempt to repeal the sugar schedule of the Underwood bill. I do not think the Sugar Trust itself expects to succeed in its designs so long as the Democratic Party is in control of this Government. Its object is to manufacture a public sentiment which will restore the Republican Party to power and sustain that party in reenacting the robber sugar tariff.

To this end the Sugar Trust has reestablished its corrupt lobby in the city of Washington. That lobby is producing newspaper and magazine articles and speeches for public men who will agree to deliver them.

One of the principal arguments used by the representatives of the trust is that the consumer is not benefited from the reduction of the sugar tariff. I wish to take enough time to brand that statement as absolutely false.

During my campaign in Colorado in the fall of 1912 I took occasion to ascertain the retail price of sugar in the various towns I visited. I found that grocers were selling from 12 to 14 pounds of sugar for $1. After the Underwood bill was enacted those same grocers sold 20, 21, and even 22 pounds of sugar for $1. The consumer of sugar, therefore, received from 6 to 8 pounds more of sugar for his dollar than he had received prior to the change in the tariff.

Inquiry at any grocery in the city of Washington will confirm these figures.

I would like to go into this feature of the subject more thoroughly, but time will not permit, and I must content myself with merely nailing the falsehood.

In normal times the consumer will receive the full benefit of the removal of the tariff on sugar, and this statement is fully sustained by the country's experience during those periods when it has enjoyed the blessings of "free sugar."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman said that he and others had asked the President to order an investigation?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Through the Department of Commerce? Does the gentleman know whether such an investigation was made?

Mr. KEATING. Yes; I understand the Department of Justice sent an agent or agents throughout the West.

Mr. MANN. The Department of Justice?

Mr. KEATING. I mean the Department of Commerce. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MANN. Is it not true the Bureau of Corporations in the Department of Commerce has made quite an extensive investigation of the sugar situation and completed it some time ago?

Mr. KEATING. It may have completed the investigation, but it has not prepared a report.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know why they did not prepare the report?

Mr. KEATING. I understand they are at work on the report now.

Mr. MANN. I understand the report has been completed for some time, but it does not show the facts they wanted, hence they will not publish it until they change it. I do not object to the gentleman's request.

Mr. KEATING. I do not want the gentleman's statement to go in without contradiction, because that is not based on the facts. I was at the Bureau of Corporations a week or so ago——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KEATING. And the report has not been completed in the sense that it can be given to the public.

Mr. MANN. I know; it will not be completed until it is changed.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can not use my time.

Mr. MOORE. But the gentleman from Colorado has made a request.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman has no time. His time has expired.

Mr. MOORE. I ask the gentleman to permit me to make a proper inquiry of the gentleman who has made this request for unanimous consent. I want to know if he knows anything about the investigation of manufactures in Montgomery County, Pa., and why that report was withheld.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND].

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, apropos of the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] a few moments ago upon the subject of the influence of the Panama Canal on freight rates, I desire to call attention to a recent decision rendered by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the matter of commodity rates to Pacific coast terminals and intermediate points. This decision is important because of its bearing upon the broad question of the effect of the Panama Canal upon freight rates throughout the United States. The application of the carriers was for relief from the provisions of the fourth section, known as the long-and-short-haul clause, of the act to regulate commerce, from the operation of which section the commission has authority to relieve carriers.

NEW ERA IN TRANSPORTATION BETWEEN ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC COASTS.

In this decision, allowing a reduction of rates between certain Atlantic and Pacific coast terminals lower than to intermediate points, and less than now prevailing, the commission makes this significant statement:

> We are witnessing the beginning of a new era in transportation between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. To secure any considerable percentage of this coast-to-coast traffic, rates on many commodities must be established by the rail lines materially lower than those now existing.

The commission further observes in another part of the report:

> If the railroads are able to make such rates from the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific coast as will hold to their lines some portion of this traffic with profit to themselves, they should be permitted so to do. The acceptance of this traffic will add something to their net revenues, and to that extent decrease, and not increase, the burden that must be borne by other traffic. It will also give the shippers to the coast points the benefit of an additional and competitive service.

REDUCTIONS AT COAST TERMINALS REFLECTED THROUGHOUT INTERIOR.

This decision fully sustains the position of those who have contended that all reductions in freight rates between Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific ports would be reflected throughout the interior of the country.

In the minority report which I submitted to this House on March 20, 1912, advocating free tolls for American coastwise ships, this statement was made:

> Any reduction in rail freight rates forced by sea competition between, say, New York and San Francisco is contemporaneously applied between Chicago, St. Paul, St. Louis, Kansas City, and, in fact, every city of the Middle West on the one hand and every Pacific coast city or town on the other. This always has been so; it always will be so.

In the same minority report, referring to the fear expressed by certain localities in the Middle West that the coast terminals would reap all the benefit of reduced rates to the disadvantage of interior points, this observation was made:

> There might be some ground for this assumption were it not for the fact that rail freight rates between the Middle West and the Pacific coast never exceed those between the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards, and are frequently lower.

In proof that this has worked out exactly as predicted, the Interstate Commerce Commission, in its decision of January 29, to which reference has already been made, declared:

> That if further relief be not afforded to the carriers upon this traffic, the present policy of the carriers of maintaining rates from intermediate territory to the Pacific coast no higher than from the Atlantic seaboard will be defeated.

INTERIOR LOCALITIES RECEIVING BENEFITS.

The application of the railroads before the commission for a reduction of transcontinental rates to enable them to compete with the canal was supported by representatives from Duluth, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago, St. Louis, and other Missouri River cities—the very localities that contended that they would derive no benefit from the Panama Canal.

Of particular interest to these interior points was another statement made by the commission in their report, which I now quote:

> In so far as any reasonable and lawful reduction of rates will permit, the benefits of this increased service through the canal should be extended to all of the people. It may be said also that a policy of greater liberality on the part of the rail carrier to these interior towns will result in benefit to themselves. Every carload of freight brought from the east and distributed from these interior cities instead of from the coast will effect for the carriers a saving in expense and an addition to their net revenues. The present coast-to-coast rates of the rail lines and the problem of holding a reasonable proportion of the business to these interior points to the rail lines can only be met on the part of the carriers with rates which will afford the interior points reasonable opportunity to distribute merchandise in contiguous territory.

QUESTION OF TOLL RATES TEMPORARILY SETTLED.

Congress has, temporarily at least, declared against a policy of free tolls for American coastwise ships, and I do not desire to enter into a discussion of that question. I might comment upon the fact, however, that attached to the repeal law was a proviso that the act should not be held as a waiver or relinquishment of any right the United States might have under the treaty with Great Britain to discriminate in favor of its vessels by exempting vessels of the United States or its citizens from the payment of tolls. This means that the subject is open for future discussion. Likewise I can not refrain from referring to the legislative bill now pending in the House making an appropriation, and properly, for the celebration of the opening of the Panama Canal. This bill provides that the President is authorized to use vessels of the United States Army transport service and of the Panama Railroad, and that in passing through the canal they shall be exempt from payment of Panama Canal tolls. We have not been enlightened as to whether permission has been obtained from Great Britain for this exemption.

In the second minority report which I submitted to the House upon this subject, March 14, 1914, in opposition to the repeal bill, the question of shipments through the canal and into the interior was discussed, as the following quotation from that report will show:

> Nor are reductions in rail rates the only advantage which the people from the great interior of our country are to reap. Much of the commerce of the great Mississippi Valley will flow down the rivers which drain it to the Gulf and thence through the canal to the Pacific coast. Likewise Pacific coast products will to a large extent eventually be distributed through the Middle West via her waterways. Every burden placed upon traffic through the canal impairs its usefulness as a competitive route

TRAFFIC THROUGH CANAL TO INTERIOR POINTS.

There is no question that under a free-toll policy applied to domestic commerce there would now be a greater movement of canal traffic to and from interior points. Even under present conditions some traffic has moved from interior points, but not to any large extent. The Interstate Commerce Commission directs attention to shipments of cast-iron pipe from Birmingham, Ala., by rail to New Orleans and then through the canal to the Pacific coast. Structural iron originating at various points in Pennsylvania has likewise used the waterway. Other points cited are Wheeling, W. Va., and various localities in Ohio.

Statements have also been made that there have been shipments between Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Detroit, and St. Paul through the canal to Pacific coast points. Experience since the canal opened clearly demonstrates that the lower the toll the more far-reaching would be the benefit to the consumer and shipper of the United States. As time passes this will become more evident.

MANY INDEPENDENT STEAMSHIP LINES OPERATING THROUGH CANAL, CONTRARY TO PREDICTIONS.

When the Panama Canal bill was pending some of us advocated and had inserted in that law a provision that no railroad-owned ship competing with its rail lines for traffic could operate through the Panama Canal; those opposed to that legislation declared that if such a provision were incorporated there would be no ships, or at least very few, constructed or even leased for the Panama Canal service. On the other hand, those of us who urged this legislation in the interest of the shippers of the United States contended that if the inhibition were in the law it would result in a greater number of independent steamship lines operating through the canal than if we granted railroad-owned ships access to the waterway.

The experience of five and a half months has demonstrated that the predictions of those of us who advocated this legislation have been more than fulfilled. There are to-day 50 American coastwise ships regularly operating through the Panama Canal. There are at least six independent steamship lines. One of those lines operates 26 ships, with sailings every five days, and the smallest line operates at least 1 ship every 30 days. Several sailing vessels have passed through the canal. It will be interesting to learn if sailing craft can operate through the waterway at a profit.

COAST TO COAST TRAFFIC FAR EXCEEDING ESTIMATES.

I have been making some investigation as to the amount of freight which has been carried through the canal during the five and a half months that it has been open to traffic. The canal was unofficially opened August 15, and up to the 1st day of February, the latest date for which accurate figures are available, the total coast-to-coast traffic amounted to 916,158 net register tons. Taking this as a basis, the total for the first year should reach 2,000,890 net register tons. When the canal legislation was pending Prof. Emery R. Johnson, special commissioner on Panama Canal traffic and tolls, submitted figures, the result of months of careful and exhaustive study, and he estimated that the coastwise traffic for the first year would total 1,160,000 tons. The actual tonnage is exceeding by 72½ per cent Prof. Johnson's estimate, and when we consider the general business depression throughout the country this is, indeed, greater than any of us had hoped for.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I will.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman is not surprised at Dr. Johnson's mistake in view of the various other blunders he made before the committee and in public speeches?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I think, in all fairness, we should give Dr. Johnson credit of availing himself of all the data obtainable, as far as traffic is concerned; and while on some questions we may not agree with him, his statistics on traffic were the most reliable presented and the result of painstaking effort.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Dr. Johnson is a gentleman of considerable prominence in the educational world, is he not, and a man who has made some reputation as a statistician?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Inasmuch as the gentleman lives in Pennsylvania, I am willing to admit that all my colleague from that State says is true.

Mr. MOORE. And he was selected by the proper authority to do this work.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. He was selected, as I recall, by President Taft to do this work.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Have you time?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I have but little time remaining, otherwise I would gladly yield to my distinguished colleague.

Mr. MANN. Then I will not interrupt the gentleman.

FOREIGN TRAFFIC FALLING BELOW ESTIMATES.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. We now come to the foreign traffic. The total for the first five and a half months has reached only 1,276,698 net registered tons. At this ratio the total for the year would reach 2,785,522 tons, 6,544,478 tons below the estimate of the Government expert. In other words, there has been a falling off of 234 per cent in foreign business as estimated, due without question to the European war, which has prevented such lines as the Royal Mail, Hamburg-American, North German-Lloyd, and various French lines from utilizing the canal as they had planned.

Under these conditions, with the foreign trade necessarily falling far below all estimates, the canal tolls will more than pay the cost of maintenance and operation.

CANAL DEMONSTRATING VALUE AS REGULATOR OF FREIGHT RATES.

The canal has only been open to traffic, as already stated, for about six months, and during that time has demonstrated, I believe, to a greater extent even than its advocates ever predicted, its value as a regulator of transcontinental freight rates. The water carriers have reduced their rates, shortened the time for transportation, and increased the frequency of their sailings.

While the railroads must readjust rates, I do not feel that they will, eventually at least, suffer much injury. More freight will move because of low rates. Certain commodities will go by water and others by rail. The railroads will obtain the benefit of back hauls on much of the canal traffic. This is already the case.

ADVOCATES OF CANAL FORTIFICATION VINDICATED.

This is a most interesting subject, and I regret that my time is limited. Before closing, however, I desire to call attention to the fact that events of the European war have completely vindicated the position taken by those of us in this House who insisted upon the fortification of the canal and fought for the necessary appropriations. We were told that neutralization would be sufficient protection for this important waterway, of such tremendous military advantage to this Nation. The neutrality of Belgium was guaranteed. Other instances might be cited showing how little dependence can be placed in the protection afforded by neutrality. When war breaks out the awakening comes, and it is then too late. Congress acted wisely in fortifying the canal.

I am proud to have been a Member of this body during a period when practically all the legislation providing for the construction and operation of the Panama Canal was enacted. It is a satisfaction to have taken somewhat of a prominent part in the framing of much of this legislation. It is also gratifying to feel that recent events and the results shown since the canal opened are, in a measure at least, justifying the position I have taken. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD].

The CHAIRMAN. How much time?

Mr. BARTLETT. How much time is remaining to this side?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-seven minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri 10 minutes.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], in some remarks he made on the floor of the House several days ago, made some strictures on the Postmaster General, and charged that department with mismanagement and failure to improve the financial conditions in the service as they should be improved. He charged especially that there had been serious loss as the result of the parcel post. It should be remembered that the Postmaster General is in no way responsible for the parcel-post law. That was passed by this Congress, and it was his duty to see that the law was rigidly enforced. It is charged that he failed to do that which was for the best interests of the department when he changed the limit of weight that might be carried in parcels from 11 pounds to 50 pounds. A careful investigation of that question has shown by the report that has been recently sent out by the Postmaster General that only seven-tenths of 1 per cent of the parcels that had been carried weighed above 11 pounds. In other words, that only 7 out of 1,000 parcels weigh more than 11 pounds. So there could be no serious loss as a result of the carriage of packages above 11 pounds, and the gentleman is mistaken in making any serious criticism upon the Post Office Department because of the parcel-post law. It is the duty of the Postmaster General to carry out the law, and the regulation which he made he had a right to make, and there has been no serious loss as a result of it.

In another part of his speech the gentleman from Minnesota stated, in substance, that the effect of the Underwood tariff could be plainly seen upon the postal receipts of the country. At that time there was something of a colloquy between the gentleman and myself with reference to the cause of the postal deficit, and as the result of that colloquy the Third Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Dockery, sent me a letter which explains the condition fully with reference to the management of that department. He admits that there will be a deficit in the postal account during the current fiscal year, and that that deficit is due, as was stated in that colloquy, to the fact that the European war had come upon us and had the effect of demoralizing to a very great extent the postal conditions.

I will read the letter that was sent to me by Mr. Dockery. It is as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, February 26, 1915.

Hon. JAMES T. LLOYD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LLOYD: My attention has been called to the remarks of Representative STEENERSON, of Minnesota, on the subject of postal finances, during the debate of the pension appropriation bill in the House of Representatives on the 18th instant, in which debate you participated. Commenting on a statement made by Congressman UNDERWOOD during the debate of the naval bill, that there will probably be a deficit in the postal revenues for the current fiscal year due to conditions brought about, to a large extent, by reason of the war in Europe, Mr. STEENERSON disputed the reasons given for the decrease in receipts, and said that "Whenever the shadow of free trade has come upon the country under Democratic administrations the postal receipts have fallen off."

I am duly appreciative of Mr. STEENERSON'S expressions of personal friendship and regard. I am also fully appreciative of and admire his usual attitude of fair dealing and impartiality. For this reason I am constrained to ask that you bring to his attention certain facts relating to postal finances which fully support and justify Mr. UNDERWOOD'S statement as to the time when the decline in postal receipts began.

That there will be a deficiency in postal revenues in the fiscal year 1915 is no longer doubted. What the amount of the deficit will be no one can say at this time. Even if peace should be declared immediately in Europe it is doubtful if general financial conditions abroad could become normal and be reflected in improved business conditions there before June 30, when our current fiscal year ends.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I believe that under the Constitution it is not proper for an official of an executive department to criticize a Member of Congress for what he has said in debate on the floor of the House. I therefore object to the reading of this letter as a violation of the Constitution.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in this letter that reflects upon the character of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Minnesota any authority which he cares to present?

Mr. STEENERSON. The Constitution itself says so. "That for any speech or debate in either House he shall not be questioned in any other place." (Sec. 6, Art. I.)

Mr. BARTLETT. The Constitution says he "shall not be held accountable for." It does not say that he "shall not be criticized."

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, in view of the fact that Assistant Postmaster General Dockery is a good friend of mine, and I have a great esteem for him, and although I think it violates all proprieties, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. LLOYD. The letter says further:

As is well known, the accounts for the Post Office Department are audited by an officer of the Treasury, the Auditor for the Post Office Department. His reports constitute the official statements of postal finances. An examination of the reports of this official shows that during the first 15 months of this administration—that is to say, from April, 1913, to June, 1914—the postal revenues increased at the rate of 8.25 per cent over the period from April, 1912, to June, 1913. The average yearly increase in postal revenues for the 10 consecutive fiscal years from 1905 to 1914, inclusive, was 7.15 per cent. Postal receipts have not decreased, therefore, as a result of the application of the principles of so-called free trade, as embodied in the tariff law under which the Government is now operating.

The evidence that the present decrease in receipts has been brought about by reason of the European war is, if possible, even more conclusive. In marked contrast to previous substantial increases in postal revenues, an estimate prepared by the Auditor for the Post Office Department shows an increase in postal revenues for the quarter ended September 30, 1914, of only 2.41 per cent. The accounts of the Postal Service are rendered quarterly. It is therefore impracticable to give audited results by months for the purpose of showing the immediate effect on postal receipts of the European war, which, as is well known, began in the latter days of July, 1914. Statements of monthly receipts are received by the department, however, from the 50 largest post offices at which approximately 50 per cent of the postal revenues are collected. For the month of July, 1914, immediately preceding the outbreak of the war, these returns showed an increase of 4.7 per cent, even in the face of incessant rumblings of disturbed conditions which later came to a climax. In the month of August, however, not only was this increase lost, but a decrease of 1.2 per cent was shown. Reports for every month since that time have shown continuous and greater decreases.

Deficits in the returns from the postal establishment have not been unusual. They have been the rule rather than the exception. Prior to 1913 the last actual surplus was announced by Postmaster General Gresham in 1883. For the 27 years from 1884 to 1910, inclusive, there were continuous deficits, ranging from $2,961,169.91 in the fiscal year 1902 to $17,479,770.47 in the fiscal year 1909. These deficits amounted in the aggregate to $210,544,802.90, a yearly average of $7,797,955.66. In marked contrast to this average yearly deficit, Postmaster General Burleson was able to announce a real surplus in the postal revenue for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913, after providing for the liquidation of all outstanding indebtedness, of approximately $3,800,000, which has been actually paid into the Treasury for the general uses of the Government. For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, he was able to announce a second real surplus of approximately $3,500,000, which will also be paid into the general fund of the Treasury. The surplus for the fiscal year 1914 was accomplished despite the fact that it was necessary to expend large sums of money for the purpose of rehabilitating the service, which had been seriously impaired by the introduction of ill-conceived economies.

From the foregoing fiscal exhibit two facts are so apparent that he who runs may read, and no fair-minded citizen can, after investigation, dispute them: First, that the decline in postal receipts began with the outbreak of the European war; second, that both the fiscal years 1913 and 1914 furnished an actual, bona fide postal surplus after the payment of all obligations.

It is not, therefore, as declared by my friend Representative STEENERSON, "the shadow of free trade" which has occasioned the decline in postal revenues, but the appalling shadow of the most stupendous catastrophe in all human history. One-half the world is now engaged in destructive war—destructive of life, resources, trade, and commerce without precedent—resulting in the reduction of the ordinary revenues of every civilized nation of the world. These events demonstrate conclusively the commercial interdependence of nations, and that that which affects one to a greater or lesser degree affects all.

Is it any wonder, then, with this world-wide industrial halt in peaceful trade, that business in our own country should be intimidated and that we should be confronted with diminishing revenues? Industrial activity is the very basis of revenue for all nations, and when it is arrested there follows with the certainty of the law of gravity dwindling revenues of every kind and character, except those derived from war loans. Neither denunciation nor denial can disturb this immutable fact.

Appended hereto is a table showing the surpluses and deficiencies and the percentages of increase in postal revenues for the fiscal years 1905 to 1914, inclusive, as reported by the Auditor for the Post Office Department.

Very respectfully,

A. M. DOCKERY,
Third Assistant Postmaster General.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I should like five minutes more.

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. GILLETT. Can I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he promised me 15 minutes, and I understand he has only 17 left?

Mr. BARTLETT. That is so; and therefore I yield to the gentleman from Missouri two minutes.

Mr. LLOYD. I submit herewith the table referred to in Mr. Dockery's letter:

Table showing the surpluses and deficiencies and percentage of increase in postal revenues for the fiscal years 1905 to 1914, inclusive, as reported by the Auditor for the Post Office Department.

Fiscal year.	Audited surplus.	Audited deficiency.	Percentage of increase.
1905		$14,594,387.12	6.44
1906		10,542,941.76	9.88
1907		6,692,031.47	9.32
1908		16,910,278.99	4.39
1909		17,479,770.47	6.31
1910		5,881,481.95	10.10
1911	$219,118.12		6.14
1912		1,785,523.10	3.72
1913	4,510,650.91		8.05
Average percentage of increase for 10 consecutive years			7.15

Mr. Chairman, no man who has been connected with the Post Office Department in recent years is a more careful, cautious, and painstaking business man than Mr. Dockery, and certainly no one can successfully maintain the charge that the Postmaster General is extravagant in the administration of his office.

The statement of the Third Assistant Postmaster General ought to convince anyone that the declining postal receipts are not due to the Underwood tariff law, but have come with the European war.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. LLOYD. I also ask leave to revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. And to revise his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield me that one minute?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the statement that my colleague [Mr. HOWARD], who represents the fifth district of Georgia, is not present to-day. He is confined to his room by illness. I make this statement so that it may go along with the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota withdraws the point of no quorum.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER] yields 15 minutes to him also.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak on the question of rural credits. I expected to have made this talk on yesterday. The first thing that I had intended to have said in my speech was that all hope for rural-credits legislation in this Congress had vanished. However, I am glad to say to-day that, owing to the action which was taken in the Senate yesterday, there is at least some hope that the Sixty-third Congress will go down in history as the one which enacted the first rural-credits legislation on the part of the National Government.

I am sure that no greater distinction could be given to any Congress than to have that honor. On yesterday the Agricultural appropriation bill was amended in the Senate by adding thereto a bill known as the McCumber rural-credits bill, which the Senator from North Dakota introduced some time ago. I am glad that it was a Republican Senator that took the initiative and thus brought about conditions which may result in legislation along this line within the next few days, and I trust and hope that the leaders in this House on both sides, and that the rank and file of the membership of the House of Representatives of the United States, will all exert their greatest endeavors to secure this legislation.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will yield gladly to my colleague from Nebraska.

Mr. SLOAN. Do I understand that the distinguished Senator from North Dakota is bringing this in for the purpose of securing the redemption of at least one pledge of the Baltimore platform?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Well, I think the country should be congratulated that it has a Republican Senator who had the ingenuity and the skill and the interest of the people so much at heart that he saw the opportunity and seized upon it, and of course in that way would help the Democratic Party to redeem its promise to enact rural-credits legislation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it was not my purpose so much to criticize the Democratic administration for failure to act upon this important subject, though I think it is subject to severe criticism on that account. It is my purpose rather to criticize what I regard as the administration's plan of rural credits. I think there is an administration plan of rural credits pending before this House at the present time. That plan is not the McCumber bill, which was placed as an amendment upon the Agricultural appropriation bill. There was a commission appointed by the President under the authority of Congress which went abroad to study rural credits. That commission went abroad, came home, and made a report, and there was introduced in both Houses of Congress a bill which is said to represent the idea and plan of that commission. That bill is known as the Moss-Fletcher bill, introduced into the House by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss], who is recognized as perhaps the best authority in this House upon rural credits, and has given profound study to the subject. That bill came from the commission that was appointed by the President. More than that, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] on the floor of this House defended the administration plan of opposition to the use of Government credit or of the Government's funds in aid of the establishment of a rural-credit system; so that this bill can, I think, be fairly said to be one of the administration bills.

Then there is the Bulkley-Hollis bill, introduced in this House by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], who has also given great study to this question and is an authority on the subject. The same bill was introduced in the Senate by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]. Now, this comes from the subcommittee of the House Committee on Banking and Currency and the Senate Committee on Finance, so that the Bulkley-Hollis bill represents the official majority, so to speak, of the Democratic majority in Congress.

Mr. PLATT and Mr. SLOAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield, and to whom?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I yield first to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman contend that the Bulkley-Hollis bill is an administration measure?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I contend that it is an administration bill, if we consider the fact that Congress, or the Democratic majority in Congress, is to be regarded as a part of the national Democratic administration.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman know that the Bulkley-Hollis bill was held up in the Committee on Banking and Currency because it does not meet the wishes of the President and because of its Government-aid features, where the Government is authorized to subscribe to the land banks and also to subscribe to not exceeding $50,000,000 of land bonds?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I am aware of that fact, and I am aware of the fact also that the chairman of the subcommittee of the Finance Committee of the Senate has reintroduced the Bulkley-Hollis bill with the Government-aid feature eliminated.

Mr. PLATT. So far as the bonds are concerned, but not so far as subscriptions to the land banks are concerned.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. But that is a very minor detail.

THREE ESSENTIALS.

In adopting a plan of land credits three things should be kept in mind, namely:

First. The nature and character of the institution created and empowered to manage, conduct, and control the system of land credit to be put in operation.

Second. The system of land credit adopted must be such as will provide adequate credit for the agricultural interests of the United States.

Third. The system of land credit created must furnish credit at a low rate of interest.

My conclusion is that neither the Moss-Fletcher bill nor the Bulkley-Hollis bill meet these three essential requirements.

Without any spirit of partisanship, but solely with the view of contributing my mite toward the proper settlement of this great problem, I wish to submit some observations to establish the foregoing proposition.

CHARACTER OF INSTITUTION.

My first objection to both of these bills is to the kind, the character, and the nature of the banking corporations created to operate our land-credit system. Each of these bills places the land-credit system of the United States in the control of privately owned, dividend-paying, surplus-accumulating, profit-sharing banking corporations, conducted not in the slightest degree for the general public good, but purely for private gain. These banking institutions are in no way placed under obligation to make their chief end and purpose the promotion of agricultural development and the betterment of the financial condition of the 40,000,000 people residing on the farms of the United States. These bills propose to create a system of national land banks, endowed with special privileges and granted exceptional and extraordinary exemptions without requiring that their chief end shall be to carry out a great national policy designed to strengthen the very fabric of our National Government and promote the general welfare of all the people of the United States.

ADEQUATE CREDIT NOT ASSURED.

Neither of these bills assures adequate land credit for the farmers of the United States. Both of them authorize the land banks created thereby to issue and sell bonds or debentures based upon farm mortgages as security therefor. Under the Moss-Fletcher bill the total bonds issued must not be more than 15 times the capital stock of the bank issuing the bonds. The limit of bonds under the Bulkley-Hollis bill is 20 times the capital stock of the bank issuing the bonds. The loans to be made are thus limited by the capital stock of the banks which may be organized under the system. The Moss-Fletcher bill authorizes the formation of land banks with capital stock of not less than $100,000. There is no limit to the number of such banks which may be organized. There is, however, no absolute assurance that a single bank would be organized under this bill. Certainly there is no reasonable probability that a sufficient number of such banks would be organized within any reasonable time to supply the demand for land credit in the United States. The Bulkley-Hollis bill authorizes the organization of local banks with not less than $10,000 capital stock and 12 district Federal land banks with capital stock of not less than $500,000 each. In case the public fails to take the full amount of this stock the Secretary of the Treasury, for the United States, is authorized to subscribe the balance. This would insure at least $6,000,000 of capital stock for these 12 Federal land banks. There is no assurance, however, that these banks would ever have capital stock in excess of $6,000,000. With this amount of capital stock, these banks could make loans amounting in the aggregate to only $120,000,000. The land-mortgage indebtedness of the United States now reaches at least $3,000,000,000. It would require banks with at least $200,000,000 in capital stock to take up this existing farm-mortgage indebtedness of $3,000,000,000. Yet under the Moss-Fletcher bill no definite amount of bank capital is assured, and under the Bulkley-Hollis bill only $6,000,000 of capital is certain. When we consider the fact that the national banks for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, paid average dividends on their stock of 11.39 per cent and set aside large additional surplus, we must be forced to conclude that $200,000,000 will not be invested in the capital stock of land banks with dividends limited to 6 per cent per annum. I am, therefore, forced to the conclusion that the land banks created by these two administration bills will be nothing more than experimental land-credit stations, dotting here and there the vast field of land credit covering in the United States 3,000,000 square miles of territory.

LOW RATE OF INTEREST NOT ASSURED.

Neither of these bills assures a low rate of interest on farm loans.

There is no provision in either of these bills which either fixes the rate to be charged or which provides for a maximum rate.

The Moss-Fletcher bill in no way limits the rate of interest which the land banks may charge, except by the provision which requires that the interest on loans shall not exceed the interest on land bonds by more than 1 per cent per annum.

The Bulkley-Hollis bill has a number of provisions relating to the interest charge. In substance these provisions are as follows:

(a) The interest rate of mortgages must not exceed the legal rate current in the State in which the mortgage land is situated.

(b) The "normal" rate of interest must not exceed the rate of interest on the last bond issue by more than 1 per cent per annum.

(c) The commissioner of land credits is authorized to fix a "specific" rate of interest for any district.

(d) The Federal Reserve Board is authorized to "review and alter" the interest rate.

I submit that none of these provisions are sufficient to guarantee a low rate of interest on farm loans in the United States.

There are no provisions in the bills which offer any substantial inducement to the land banks to make loans at a low rate of interest.

Under these bills the banks are allowed 1 per cent per annum above the interest rate on the bonds as a margin on which to do business; that is to say, the interest rate on mortgages must not exceed the interest rate on the bonds by more than 1 per cent per annum. Under this provision the banks will have nothing whatever to gain by loaning at a low rate of interest. Indeed, it might be to the advantage of the banks to loan at a high rate of interest, because they would thereby be permitted to sell bonds at a higher rate, and bonds at a high rate will sell more readily than bonds at a low rate. The western and southern banks must sell their bonds in competition with banks in the eastern and central parts of the United States, which are located nearer the centers of credit. To meet this competition, there will be a tendency with competing banks to place bonds on the market with a high rate of interest; but to do this they must loan at a higher rate, because, under the law, there must be only 1 per cent difference between the interest rate on mortgages and the interest rate on bonds. To illustrate: Suppose the law declared that no loan should be made at an interest rate in excess of 5 per cent per annum, and that the banks were perfectly free to sell their land bonds at any rate they chose, and were at liberty to make any profit they could. In such case the banks would be vitally interested in issuing and selling bonds at the very lowest rate of interest. Under such arrangement the banks would use every effort to issue a bond that would have a high standing with investors and could be sold readily at a low rate of interest. If privately controlled banks shall be given control of our land-credit system they should be placed in a position where the interests of the stockholders of the bank require that the bonds should sell at a low rate of interest. Universally we get the best service from men when their own interests require them to work for the public good.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SLOAN. Calling attention to the activity of the author of the Fletcher bill in another body in the last 40 days on the shipping bill, does it not appear that the administration's rural-credits bill is entirely set aside and abandoned, under the theory that ships on the ocean are of more importance to this country than credits on the land?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I regret that it does appear that the present administration is far more interested in the commercial interests, so to speak, than in the interests of the farmers of the United States. Now, Mr. Chairman, I must proceed or I will not be able to finish what I intended.

Bonds issued by 12 different banks under the Bulkley-Hollis bill or bonds issued by a hundred or more banks under the Moss-Fletcher bill scattered here and there throughout the United States will not sell on the market at as low a rate of interest as bonds issued by a single bank, with capital stock approximately as great as the combined capital stocks of all the smaller banks. In every land-credit system the rate of interest is governed almost entirely by the rate of interest the bonds issued bear.

The rate of interest on mortgages must always be above the rate of interest on the bonds, unless operating expenses are otherwise provided for. The mortgage must draw sufficient interest to pay the interest on the bond and a small additional per cent to pay interest on capital employed and to defray operating expenses. Land-mortgage bonds should therefore be issued by institutions of such financial strength as will command the confidence of the investing public. We should not overlook the fact that this is even more important here than in European countries. We have a vast area of country. European countries have small area. Our country is comparatively sparsely settled. European countries are thickly settled. Germany, composed of some 26 States or Provinces, with nearly 70,000,000 population, has less area than the State of Texas. Land bonds issued by landschafts and other land-credit institutions of Germany, usually find a market in the very community in which the land is situated. Not so in this country. By far the greater part of the bonds issued by the land banks must be sold to investors residing one, two, or three thousand miles distant, who know little of the bank, the products of the country, or the character of the people. Very naturally men will hesitate to risk their savings in banks of this kind. But a single great bank would command the confidence of investors. It would quickly attain a national standing and its name would become familiar throughout the country. Land securities issued by such a bank would sell more readily and at a lower rate of interest than securities issued by numerous small banks, about which the public generally could have but little knowledge. France, in enacting a law to establish her land-credit system, started with the idea of having many land banks with authority to issue bonds. After a brief trial she abandoned the idea. The smaller banks were purchased by the one great land-credit institution—the Crédit Foncier. Mr. Herrick, in his Rural Credits, referring to the plan adopted by France, says:

> France decided that centralization and unity of action were better than competition, and proceeded to establish a large central institution, with agencies throughout the nation, which should make loans upon the same general conditions and issue debentures of standard types.

Emperor Napoleon III promulgated a decree which extended the powers of the Land Bank of Paris, conferred upon it the title La Société du Crédit Foncier de France, and "authorized it to absorb the other companies which had been formed."

Mr. Herrick, in Rural Credits, page 114, referring to the Credit Foncier, says, "It is the only mortgage-bond company of consequence lending on land situated in France."

Even in Germany it has been found necessary to create a central landschaft to aid the local landschafts in selling their bonds. In discussing the difficulty of local institutions in disposing of their bonds, Mr. Herrick, in Rural Credits, page 188, says:

> The need or advantage of having a central organization for standardizing their business methods and strengthening their credit by mutual assistance became apparent as soon as the landschafts had spread over

Germany. Between 1870 and 1875 the market price of the debentures of several of the associations was low and unstable. Inasmuch as their business methods were practically the same, and the guaranties offered were as good as those of others whose debentures were selling at a satisfactory figure, it was evident that the difference was due to distance from the money centers and adverse local conditions.

In devising plans for its formation, Prussia not only opened up the financial channels which all converge at Berlin, but utilized the principle of cooperation, and encouraged the landschafts themselves to unite into a large association with power to issue debentures upon their combined guaranty, and thus to create a security so safe and sound that it would have all Europe for its market.

I have discussed this matter somewhat fully, because I have come to the conclusion that the farmers of the United States will make a fatal mistake if they are led to sanction a land-credit system that is based upon the credit and standing of small banks scattered throughout the vast territory of the United States. To have many banks issuing land-mortgage bonds will cost the farmers millions of dollars every year in higher rates of interest.

All experience demonstrates that in every line and character of business conducted by governments, corporations, associations, partnerships or individuals the strong government, the large concern, the big institution, the wealthy individual, can always borrow money upon the best terms and at the lowest rate of interest. The United States can borrow money cheaper than it can be borrowed by the small Republics of Central and South America. The Standard Oil Co. and the United States Steel Co. have better credit than their small independent competitors. The Wanamaker and Marshall Field department stores can command money at a lower rate of interest than the small concerns located on obscure streets in Philadelphia or Chicago. All of which illustrates the strength of credit that comes from centralization and unity. The farmers have the best security in the world. But that security may be materially weakened by the character of the institutions which offer this security to investors. For this reason I am opposed to permitting numerous small banks to issue mortgage bonds upon land securities. Twelve bond-issuing banks will be better than 100, but 1 such bank will be better than 12.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield before he proceeds?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will gladly yield for a question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There have been five or six Republican Presidents before the present administration. Which one of those Republican Presidents has ever recommended any relief for the farmers along the line now suggested?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Back under the Republican administrations the farmers in this country were so prosperous that they did not need rural credit so badly as they do now. [Laughter.]

The banks created by these bills to operate our land-credit system can not be operated economically, and economical operation is absolutely essential to a low rate of interest. Under both the Moss-Fletcher bill and the Bulkley-Hollis bill the banks are allowed to loan at a rate of interest 1 per cent higher than the rate of interest on the bonds. Under the Bulkley-Hollis bill the commissioner of land credits may fix a "specific" rate of interest in a district, allowing the banks to loan at a higher rate than 1 per cent above the rate of interest on the bonds. The authors of these bills estimate that it will require at least 1 per cent per annum on loans to pay the operating expense. This is practically double the amount allowed European land-credit banks. The land bonds of the landschaft of Germany generally bear the same rate of interest of the mortgage. The borrower pays no more interest than the bond issued on his mortgage. This can be done by the landschaft, because the operating expenses of the landschaft are insignificant. But these bills propose to allow the land banks 1 per cent annually on loans to operate the banks. Think what this means! On a loan of $2,000 the borrower contributes $20 every year to the banks for their services. In five years he will have contributed $100. In 10 years $200 of the earnings have gone, not to the purchasers of the bonds, who really furnish the money for the loan, but to the banks, who act as middlemen between the borrower and the investor. Herrick, on page 122 in Rural Credits, referring to the interest rates on loans by the Crédit Foncier, says:

> The rate of interest on money loaned must not exceed by more than six-tenths of 1 per cent the rate of the debentures by which it was raised, except in Algeria and Tunis.

Why should the farmers of the United States pay 1 per cent per annum as purely administrative charges when the farmers of Europe on the average pay less than one-half that amount? The payment of an extra one-half of 1 per cent per annum for administrative expenses on total loans of $3,000,000,000 in 10 years would amount to $150,000,000.

Costly operating expenses, heavy administration charges, are inconsistent and incompatible with a low rate of interest. The borrower foots the entire bill. The farmers who mortgage their farms through interest payments support the system. All authorities agree that the low rate of interest on land mortgages made through the landschaft of Germany is due to the fact that these institutions are conducted with little expense. Both of these bills bring into existence a large number of privately owned, dividend-paying, profit-making banks. The capital invested in these banks must be provided with dividends. A surplus must be created, ostensibly to give strength and safety to the bank, but in effect the surplus simply adds value to the bank stock through contributions made by borrowers. The banks must erect expensive buildings or pay high rent for places in which to do business. The banking houses must be furnished and equipped; the active officers must be paid good salaries; employees must be provided with fair wages; an army of people must be supported. The mortgagors, through interest payments, are taxed to pay the bill. Every unnecessary dividend-paying, profit-sharing, surplus-creating bank employed to operate our land-credit system adds to the rate of interest the farmers must pay for every dollar borrowed.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not a fact that President Taft started the whole rural-credit movement by beginning an investigation in Europe through our diplomatic representatives there?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. The fact is that Mr. Taft was the first President to call attention to this subject, and that his ambassador whom he sent abroad to France, who has conferred so much honor upon this Nation, gave special study to that question, and he has come home with a message to the people of the United States, and has written a book that it would be well for the present administration and all of us to read.

Mr. MURRAY. Will the gentleman yield for a correction there?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Briefly.

Mr. MURRAY. To get the record straight, does not my colleague know that it was Teddy who started this?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I do not know that.

Mr. MURRAY. He appointed a rural commission to go out and study the condition of the farmers, and on the report of that commission followed it up——

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I can not yield any further.

Mr. SLOAN. I want to congratulate the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. MURRAY, on having selected a President who can be defended.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will yield for a question.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Is it expected that the farmers will get as much relief under this rural-credits bill as the people of the country have received under the Underwood tariff bill? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I hope they will receive more.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes; for a question.

Mr. SLOAN. Does the gentleman think that a maximum rate that would obtain and be proper in one section of the country would be proper in another section, where the commercial and agricultural conditions differed largely?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I think a rate that is good in Ohio, good in Iowa, and good in Nebraska should be good in Maine or in Oklahoma. The farm that is mortgaged is the security. If our lands in Oklahoma are worth only $50 per acre, 50 per cent of its value would represent $25 an acre, the amount to be loaned thereon. If the splendid lands of Nebraska are worth $100 an acre, you can get a $50 loan per acre on your land. This idea that the farmers of the East or the central United States should be able to borrow money cheaper than the farmers of the far West is not sound, and that is my objection to these administration bills; they would discriminate against the West.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I notice in the McCumber bill interest is fixed at 5 per cent. Does the gentleman think that would be of any benefit to the farmer?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I think it would be. I believe the farmers of the United States, under a proper system of land credits, can borrow money cheaper than 5 per cent.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman thinks the rate fixed in the McCumber amendment, then, is too high?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. That is my judgment; but in my bill I fix a lower rate.

Mr. TOWNER. The time limit on loans is 10 years. Does the gentleman think that that is too short a period?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I think it is too short; but the average farmer of the United States that has a farm, I think, would be satisfied with a 10-year loan, as 5 years is generally regarded as a long-time loan.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Is it not a fact that the best authority that we have recourse to states that the average rate of interest on farm credits is 8¼ per cent, and a reduction to 5 per cent on the major part of all the loans would certainly be of great assistance?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Unquestionably so.

Mr. MURRAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. MURRAY. I presume the gentleman has read the McCumber bill?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I have.

Mr. MURRAY. In the third paragraph of that bill it provides that certain sums of money are appropriated, and that the national banks and State banks desiring to avail themselves of the privilege become the agents of the department. Does not that leave it wholly with the banks to determine whether the farmers shall borrow any money at all or not?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I think it does. That should be amended so as to require national banks to act, and leave it optional with the State banks.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes; briefly.

Mr. CARTER. Does the McCumber amendment provide for any limitation as to the amount that may be issued in bonds?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. No; and I think that is a correct principle. I believe that to limit the bonds to fifteen times the capital is unwise, because it is not the capital of the banks but the man's farm that furnishes the security, and the landschaft of Germany have no capital stock, and, all things considered, the landschaft is the best system of farm loans in the world.

Mr. CARTER And the McCumber amendment provides for 4 per cent interest.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Five per cent, but for 4½ per cent bonds.

Mr. CARTER. And exempts them from taxation and also provides they shall not be sold for more than par value. Have we not already a billion dollars United States 3 per cent bonds?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I do not think we have a billion.

Mr. CARTER. Well, a large amount. What effect does the gentleman think the issuance of 4½ per cent bonds, not to be sold for more than par value, would have on the 3 per cent obligations that are already in existence?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I do not think I could answer the gentleman fully in my limited time, but I think the rate on the land bonds should be below 4½ rate of interest. Now, Mr. Chairman, I must hurry through.

SYNOPSIS OF H. R. 21474.

Mr. Chairman, on the 16th day of February I introduced H. R. 21474, entitled "A bill to provide better credit facilities and lower interest for farmers."

The provisions of this bill do not express the extent to which I am willing to go in the use of the Government credit or the Government's funds to provide our farmers with adequate credit at a low rate of interest. I am in favor of using either the funds or the credit of the Government to any extent that may be necessary to create an adequate system of agricultural credit. However, in drawing this bill I have attempted to present a plan which will provide adequate credit and a low rate of interest without the use of the Government's credit or the Government's funds, except in supervision and in a very limited way to inaugurate the system.

My bill creates a single institution—the national land bank—which has no capital stock, declares no dividends, accumulates no surplus for the benefit of shareholders, distributes no profits to its managers, and is not run for private gain, but for the public good. The directors are appointed by the President. With the object of providing for economical machinery of administration all national banks are required and all State banks are permitted to act as agencies in transmitting and closing loans, such banks to be paid by the national land bank and not by farmers. To obtain an operating fund the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to accept deposits from the public, to the amount of $10,000,000, and pay 3 per cent thereon, which the bank repays to the Government. These deposits run for 10 years. The secretary is directed to deposit any amount not deposited by the public. This $10,000,000, which may be increased to $20,000,000, is transferred to the national land bank as an operating fund. The amount is loaned on farm mortgages, bonds are issued thereon, and these bonds are sold, and the loan fund is thus replenished to the original amount, and reloaned again and again, and thus kept revolving without limit.

Loans above 10 years are required to be paid in small annual installments, provision is made for a reserve fund to meet any losses, bonds are made available for various kinds of investment funds, and mortgages and bonds are exempted from taxation. Every care is taken to provide a perfectly sound and safe system of land credit, capable of unlimited expansion. The bill fixes the rate of interest on mortgages at 3½ per cent on loans above 10 years, and 4 per cent on loans under 10 years. The bonds bear a rate of interest one-half of 1 per cent less than mortgages. The entire business is conducted and ample reserve funds accumulated by a margin of one-half of 1 per cent of the interest charge. Economy of administration, the elimination of excessive commissions and fees, charges and profits by agents, middle men and go-betweens of all kinds will be the most important factors in securing cheap interest for our farmers.

Mr. Chairman, what I have said has not been in the spirit of criticism. I am deeply interested in this question. I shall feel more than repaid if anything I have said will awaken any additional interest in the subject. We can not properly deal with the rural-credit proposition unless we have a clear vision of the future. We have spent more than $300,000,000 on the Panama Canal for the benefit of the world's commerce. In the past 10 years we have spent $300,000,000 for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. We are adding to our appropriations by many millions of dollars annually to increase our Navy, enlarge our Army, and to otherwise strengthen our means of national defense. We have appropriated $40,000,000 to build a railroad for Alaska—in a remote territory in which there are but a mere handful of people. We are appropriating annually thirty or forty millions of dollars to erect magnificent public buildings to ornament and beautify our towns and cities in every section of the country. Indeed, the greater part of the time of the National Congress is spent in devising and enacting revenue bills to bring the money into the Treasury and in passing appropriation bills to take it out of the Treasury. Yes, sir; we hesitate and halt before the proposition to use to the slightest extent the Government credit or the Government's funds to establish a system of farm credits, the main purpose of which is to increase the food supply of the Nation.

The mighty struggle going on now between the great nations of Europe is an object lesson we can not forget. It is becoming not a question of great generals, not a question of braver soldiers, not a question of dreadnaughts, submarines, and air crafts, but a question of food, of hunger, of starvation—not for the armies, but for the men, women, and children at home.

Who knows when this country may unhappily be compelled to engage in a like struggle? Who can tell when the honor of that flag and the very life of our Republic may depend upon our ability to feed our own people?

Fifty years from now we will have 250,000,000 people living in the United States. These people must be fed. May the lesson of the present hour enable us to prepare for the future.

Whatever else we may do, we should pursue a national policy that will insure an ample supply of food for our people. My hope and prayer is that the time may never come when from the lack of food products we shall see our people humiliated, our flag dishonored, our national existence endangered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to print certain exhibits.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Under this leave to extend my remarks I herewith print a copy of H. R. 21474, introduced by me February 16, 1915. The bill is as follows:

EXHIBIT A.

A bill to provide better credit facilities and lower interest for farmers.

Be it enacted, etc., That the national land bank is hereby created, and under such name is hereby declared to be a corporate body of the District of Columbia, and by such name shall be known and have perpetual succession with the powers, limitations, and restrictions herein contained, unless otherwise provided by Congress.

OBJECT OF CORPORATION.

SEC. 2. That the object of the national land bank shall be to provide for the general welfare of the people of the United States through the development and expansion of agriculture and to establish better credit facilities and cheaper interest for the farmers of the United States.

MANAGEMENT.

SEC. 3. That the national land bank shall be controlled and managed by a board of directors, consisting of five persons. The board of directors shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The terms of office of the directors shall be for four years, except that the persons first appointed on said board shall hold their offices for one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively.

ORGANIZATION.

SEC. 4. That within 30 days after their confirmation the directors, under the call of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall convene, take the oath of office, and proceed to organize and enter upon their duties. The Secretary of the Treasury shall provide the said national land bank with suitable rooms in which to conduct the business of the bank until otherwise provided by law.

The national land bank shall be under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall have the same authority over said bank as he has by law over national banking associations so far as such laws are applicable and do not conflict with specific provisions herein, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall have and exercise such additional authority as shall be herein given him.

BANK OFFICERS.

SEC. 5. That the President shall designate one of the directors as the president of said bank and one as the secretary-treasurer thereof. All of the directors shall devote their time exclusively to the duties of their offices and in conducting the business of said bank. The president shall receive a salary of $6,000 per annum, the secretary-treasurer shall receive an annual salary of $5,000 per annum, and the other directors shall each receive a salary of $3,000 per annum.

The directors of said bank are authorized, under the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to employ such clerks, assistants, inspectors, and other employees as shall from time to time be necessary to conduct its business.

That for the first 10 years after the organization of such bank the salaries of the officers, directors, and all other employees of said bank shall be paid by the United States, and thereafter the same shall be paid by the bank, unless otherwise provided by Congress.

ADVISORY BOARD.

SEC. 6. That the governors of the several States shall appoint one person from each State, who shall constitute the advisory board of the national land bank. Should the governor of any State fail to make such appointment, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make the appointment. No person shall be a member of such advisory board who is not a bona fide farmer. But no person shall be eligible as a member of said advisory board who is an applicant for a loan from said bank, or has received a loan from said bank, and no loan shall be granted to a member of the advisory board. The members of the advisory board shall receive no salaries, but they shall be paid their actual expenses when attending meetings of said board, and shall be allowed $10 per day for time actually employed in attending meetings of said board. The advisory board shall meet annually at Washington, D. C., unless otherwise directed by the Secretary of the Treasury. It shall be the duty of members of the advisory board to aid the directors of the national land bank by furnishing information relating to their respective States pertaining to the loan business, to present matters in behalf of applicants for loans in their respective States, and at the meetings of the board they shall discuss propositions for the betterment of the service rendered by the land credit system hereby established, and by resolutions may make such recommendations as in their judgment will contribute to the success of the business of the national land bank. The president of the bank shall be ex officio chairman of the advisory board, and a member of the advisory board shall be elected as the vice chairman of said board.

POWERS OF THE NATIONAL LAND BANK.

SEC. 7. That the national land bank shall have power—

1. To adopt and use a corporate seal to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, a description of which seal, together with an impression thereof and a certificate of approval thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State.

2. To make contracts.

3. To sue and be sued, complain and defend in any court of law or equity as fully as natural persons.

4. To exercise, by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents subject to law, all the general and specific powers herein granted and such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business herein described.

BANKS AUTHORIZED AGENCIES.

SEC. 8. That all national banks are hereby required and all State banks, including trust companies and savings banks, are hereby authorized to act as agencies of the national land bank to receive and transmit applications for loans, to furnish information as to the value of lands covered by applications for loans, or as to other matters pertaining to said loans, to receive from the national land bank the proceeds of any loan and pay the same to mortgagors, to sell national farm-loan bonds, and to do such other acts as shall be authorized by the national land bank, under the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

For services rendered by any bank in connection with any loan under the foregoing section the national land bank is authorized to pay to such bank any sum not to exceed one-fifth of 1 per cent on the face value thereof and a like amount for negotiating and securing the sale of nation farm-loan bonds.

It shall be unlawful for any bank, or officer or employee thereof, to make any charge or to receive or accept any pay whatsoever from the mortgagor for any service rendered in securing a loan from the national land bank.

It shall be unlawful for any director, clerk, officer, or employee of the national land bank, either directly or indirectly, to secure loans under the provisions of this act, or to be interested financially therein, or to purchase or own or have any interest whatever in any bond or other security issued under the provisions of this act, or to be in any way directly interested in any of the business transactions of the national land bank.

DEPOSITORIES.

SEC. 9. That prior to accepting any deposits as hereinafter provided the national land bank shall select one or more banks or trust companies, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, a depository or depositories in which the said national land bank shall deposit all its funds of every kind or character, and no part or portion of such funds shall be withdrawn from such depository or depositories except on check or order signed by the secretary-treasurer, countersigned by the president of such bank. Under the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury additional depositories may be designated. Every bank acting as a depository for the funds of the national land bank shall pay to such bank upon such deposits 3 per cent annual interest, based upon the average monthly balances. Every bank acting as such depository shall secure the deposits of the national land bank by delivering to the Secretary of the Treasury, in trust for the use and benefit of the national land bank, national farm-loan bonds in such amount or amounts as shall be required by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That for the first year after the organization of the national land bank other securities, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, may be accepted in lieu of national farm-land bonds.

NATIONAL FARM-LOAN FUND.

SEC. 10. That to secure a working fund on which the national land bank shall conduct its business, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to receive deposits amounting in the aggregate to not less than $10,000,000, upon which he shall pay 3 per cent annual interest: Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury the maximum limit of said deposits may be increased from time to time to $20,000,000. Said deposits shall be set apart as a separate fund, and is hereby designated as the "national farm-loan fund."

Certificates of deposits, under form to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be given to depositors, and said certificates shall be transferable in such manner as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and in the discretion of the Secretary may be made payable to bearer. Said deposits shall be payable at the end of 10 years or earlier, at the option of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be exempt from all Federal, State, and local taxation. Such certificates of deposits shall be available for all purposes for which national land bank bonds may be used as hereafter provided. Sixty days' notice shall be given of the time when such deposits will be first received and the terms upon which they shall be made.

During the first 60 days after the time fixed for receiving deposits, no deposits shall be accepted except from farmers, or persons actively engaged in agriculture or horticulture, and deposits shall be accepted in the order of time in which they are received. In granting loans the national land bank shall allow depositors the preference in point of time over all other applicants, provided that no depositor shall be granted a loan unless he meets all the conditions required generally of other applicants. Should any depositor secure a loan from said bank and shall thereafter pay the same in full, he shall be entitled, at his option, to have his deposit paid to him. If at the end of the 60 days after the time advertised upon which deposits would be received $10,000,000 have not been deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury, he shall accept deposits from the public generally, and if at the end of 60 days after notice is given that deposits will be accepted from the public generally the full amount of $10,000,000 shall not have been deposited, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to deposit in said fund the balance of said $10,000,000, and the amount necessary for such purpose is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and said deposit shall be upon the same terms as deposits made by individuals.

Thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall deposit the said $10,000,000 in one or more of the depositories of the national land bank to the credit of said national land bank, which shall proceed to loan the same as herein provided.

The national land bank shall reimburse the United States for the amount of money expended in interest payments on the national farm-land fund, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to fix the date and conditions upon which such payments shall be made, and require a fund to be set aside for such purpose.

SINKING FUND.

SEC. 11. That all amortization payments shall be set apart into a separate fund, to be known as the sinking fund, and shall be used for no purpose except for the payment, redemption, and retirement of the bonds issued by said bank. The sinking fund shall be deposited in one of the depositories of the national land bank, and said depository shall pay 3 per cent annual interest thereon, which interest shall be credited to said fund, and the depository shall deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury, in trust, for the use and benefit of the national land bank, national land bank bonds, equal in face value to the amount of the sinking fund, to secure the payment of said fund.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe rules and regulations which shall control the method and manner of selecting bonds issued by the national land bank for the payment or retirement thereof.

RESERVE FUND.

SEC. 12. That for the purpose of creating a fund to guarantee the prompt payment of bonds and interest thereon issued under this act a special fund is created as follows: One-fifth of 1 per cent of all interest paid on notes and mortgages until the same amounts to $10,000,000 shall be set apart as a separate fund and shall be known as the reserve fund: Provided, That by order of the Secretary of the Treasury said reserve fund shall be increased from time to time, in the above manner, to such amount as may be necessary to provide ample security for the payment of said bonds and interest and to fully meet any and all losses by reason of the nonpayment of mortgages and notes secured thereby.

The reserve fund shall be placed in one or more of the depositories of the national land bank and held as a trust fund to be used in the payment of any bond or interest thereon when due in case at any time the regular payment on notes and mortgages shall be insufficient therefor.

The depository or depositories holding the reserve fund shall pay on such deposit 3 per cent annual interest, based upon the average monthly balances in said fund, and the interest derived therefrom shall be credited to and placed in the reserve fund and shall become a part thereof.

The banks receiving any portion of the reserve fund as deposits shall secure the same by depositing with the Secretary of the Treasury national farm-loan bonds of face value equal to such deposits.

Should any portion of the reserve fund be used to pay the interest or any part of the principal on any note secured by mortgage upon which there has been a default in the payment of any part of the principal or interest, any payment made on such note or mortgage thereafter or collection thereon shall be applied first to reimburse the reserve fund in the amount of money used to make good the default aforesaid, and the balance of such payments or collections shall be placed in the national farm-loan fund.

LOANS AND INTEREST.

SEC. 13. That when the national farm-loan fund shall amount to $10,000,000 the national farm-land bank shall proceed to loan said fund to bona fide farmers of the United States or to citizens of the United States desirous of becoming actual farmers. All such loans shall be made under the restrictions and limitations hereinafter set forth and upon such other restrictions and limitations and under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury under the authority herein given. Loans shall be classified as follows: Class A shall include all loans exceeding 10 years and less than 35 years, class B shall include all loans for not less than 3 years and for not more than 10 years, and class C shall include all loans exceeding 35 years and less than 65 years. Class C loans shall be designed to aid tenants, farm laborers, and persons residing in towns and cities desirous of becoming farm owners to purchase and pay for farms, and the national land bank, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby directed to arrange the terms and conditions of such loans, not in conflict with any provision herein, on such plan as will increase the number of farmers in the United States, develop more intensive methods of farming, reduce the number of tenants, check the movement of our population from the farms to our cities, increase the number of farm-home owners, and maintain an increase in the production of food products corresponding to the increase of population. Loans in class C may be equal to two-thirds of the value of the land mortgaged, but loans in class C shall be made only upon lands of a highly productive character.

The national land bank shall give due notice of the times and terms upon which loans will be made. In making loans the same shall be equitably apportioned among the States and the funds fairly distributed as between the two classes of loans. Loans in class A shall be made at not to exceed 3½ per cent per annum interest and an annual amortization fee paid on the principal sufficient to pay the same at the expiration of the loan. Loans in class B shall be made at not to exceed 4 per cent annual interest, without any amortization fee, but the borrower shall have the privilege of paying any portion of the principal at the time of any interest payment.

NATIONAL FARM-LAND BONDS.

SEC. 14. That whenever the national land bank shall have made loans in any class to the amount of $500,000 or more it shall deposit the mortgages and notes secured thereby with the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall issue a certificate to the national farm-land bank certifying to the fact that such notes and mortgages have been delivered to him as security for the bonds to be issued thereon and authorizing the national land bank to issue to the amount of the face value of said mortgages and notes secured thereby bonds in series corresponding to the classes of loans, and said bonds shall be issued in the name of the national land bank and shall be known as "national farm-loan bonds." Class A and class C bonds shall bear 3 per cent interest, payable annually, and class B bonds shall bear 3½ per cent interest, payable annually. The national land bank, under the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe the form of such bonds, and the same shall be printed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Said bonds shall be issued in denominations of from $25 to $1,000 each, and the said national land bank shall sell said bonds for the face value thereof to any persons applying therefor, preference being given to those desiring small investments. He may sell the same direct to the purchaser or utilize banks or other agencies therefor, but in no case shall he allow more than one-fifth of 1 per cent upon the par value thereof as commission for selling said bonds. The proceeds from the sale of said bonds and the principal and interest paid on notes and mortgages shall be covered into the national farm-loan fund and used in making additional loans and in the payment of interest on bonds or in the payment of such bonds at maturity, or for such other purposes as may be provided for herein.

BONDS.

SEC. 15. That all national farm-loan bonds issued under this act shall be payable at a date specified and shall be subject to call at par at any interest period after the date of issue or after a specified time by such proper notice and advertisement as may be provided by the Secretary of the Treasury.

All national farm-loan bonds issued under this act shall be protected by deposits with the Secretary of the Treasury, as security therefor, of at least an equal amount on the face value of first mortgage or first deed of trust farm loans and notes secured thereby.

That as the amortization payments are credited upon the first mortgage or first deed of trust farm loans deposited as security the national farm-loan bonds issued by the national land bank and secured thereby shall be called and paid, or purchased in the open market and retired to the extent of the credits made upon such first mortgage or first deed of trust farm loans held as security for the same.

When any mortgage and notes secured thereby upon which bonds have been issued shall be paid before due, the national land bank shall, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury, withdraw the same and deliver the same to the mortgagor and release said mortgage on the record: Provided, That before withdrawing said notes and mortgages he shall deliver to the Secretary in lieu thereof notes and mortgages of at least equal face value falling due not earlier than the notes and mortgages so withdrawn.

PRIVILEGES GRANTED TO NATIONAL FARM-LOAN BONDS.

SEC. 16. That national farm-loan bonds issued under this act shall be available for the following purposes:

First. As security for the deposit of postal-savings funds in all banks authorized to receive such deposits.

Second. As a legal investment for time deposits of national banking associations, as provided in the Federal reserve act, and for the funds accumulated in savings banks organized and doing business in the District of Columbia.

Third. As a legal investment for trust funds and estates under the charge of or administered by any of the courts of the United States.

Fourth. As security for loans from national banking associations to individuals or corporations for not exceeding five years, to an amount aggregating not over 25 per cent of the capital and surplus, or to one-third of the time deposits of the national banking associations making such loan. Such loans to be made and held by the national banking association making the same as being within the provisions of section 24 of the Federal reserve act, so as to permit national banking associations to lend to individuals or corporations on their obligations, secured by their national farm-loan mortgage bonds in place of making the loan directly on farm lands, as provided for in said section.

Fifth. As collateral security for short-time loans made by any national banking association to individuals or corporations to the same extent as bonds issued by public utility, transportation, industrial, or commercial corporations.

Sixth. As a legal investment for the funds of savings banks operating in any State, and of trust funds and estates held by or under the control of the courts of that State, as a legal investment for the reserves of insurance companies incorporated under or operating under the laws of that State, and as collateral security for short-time loans by any State bank when not in conflict with the laws of such State: Provided, That the national land bank shall make loans only in such States wherein, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, the laws of such State relative to the recording of titles and the enforcement of mortgage liens are such as to afford all reasonable and proper protection to mortgagors.

NOTES AND BONDS EXEMPT FROM TAXATION.

SEC. 17. That all the funds, deposits, moneys, notes, mortgages, and bonds belonging to the national land bank, issued under this act, and the income therefrom, shall be exempt from all Federal, State, and local taxation, and such notes, mortgages, and bonds are hereby declared to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, authorized and issued to provide for the general welfare of the country.

LOANS.

SEC. 18. That every loan made under the provisions of this act shall be secured by a first mortgage or first deed of trust on farm land.

Loans may be made to complete the purchase of agricultural lands mortgaged, to improve and equip such lands for agricultural purposes, and to pay either personal or mortgage indebtedness of applicants.

No loan, except in class C, shall be made in excess of 50 per cent of the value of the land mortgaged to secure the same if said land be improved, and not in excess of 40 per cent of the value of the land in other cases; the value of said land to be determined by appraisal under the provisions of this act.

In every loan made the notes and mortgage secured thereby shall contain a provision for the amortization of such loan, or a provision that the principal sum due shall be reduced by annual or semiannual payments.

Any loan may be paid off in whole or in part by the borrower at any interest period, and the same may be paid in cash or by the delivery of national farm-loan bonds to the amount due on said loan.

EXAMINATION.

SEC. 19. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually, and at such other times as he may deem it necessary, have an examination made of the national land bank. Such examination shall be made by a national bank examiner, and the purpose of such examination shall be to ascertain the conditions of the business of said bank, the value of its notes and mortgages held as security for bonds issued thereon, the safety of its business methods, and to obtain such other information as in the judgment of the Secretary may be necessary to insure a wise and safe administration of said bank, protect the interests of both mortgagors and bondholders, give confidence in securities issued by the bank, and promote the success of the system of farm credits established by this act. The Secretary in his annual report to Congress shall make such recommendations for additional legislation pertaining to said bureau as he may think wise.

RULES AND REGULATIONS.

SEC. 20. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make rules and regulations and adopt plans for the carrying out of all the provisions of this act, and the same when not in conflict with the provisions of this act shall have the force and effect of law; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as will safeguard the business transactions of the national land bank, protect the interests of bondholders, guard against financial losses, and promote efficiency and economy in the business conducted by said bank.

ANNUAL REPORTS OF COMMISSIONER.

SEC. 21. That the national land bank shall make an annual report to Congress, covering fully the business of the preceding fiscal year, showing the amount of loans made, their distribution in the various States, the amount of bonds issued, the conditions of the national farm-loan fund, the sinking fund, and the reserve fund, and such other information as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, called for by Congress, or which may be deemed proper by the bank.

DISPOSAL OF REAL ESTATE.

SEC. 22. That when any mortgagor shall make default in the payment of the principal, interest, amortization fee, or any other obligation due on his notes and mortgages, the national land bank is authorized and directed to enforce collection thereof, by suit or otherwise, and is authorized to make and hold title to any land taken through foreclosure proceedings or otherwise, and shall dispose of said land at public or private sale within reasonable time, and shall in no case hold title to any tract of land to exceed five years, and in the enforcement of collection of notes and mortgages is authorized to accept less than the face value thereof in full payment when in the judgment of the directors of such bank such would be best.

INSURANCE OF BUILDINGS.

SEC. 23. That all mortgagors shall be required to keep the buildings upon the land mortgaged insured in some reliable company, the loss, if any, to be paid thereon to inure to the benefit of the mortgagee.

INSPECTORS AND APPRAISEMENT.

SEC. 24. That every applicant for loan shall state under oath the fair cash value of the land proposed to be mortgaged, and shall file therewith a certificate from the proper officer showing the assessed valuation of said land at the assessment last prior thereto. He shall also file a statement by two of his neighbors, duly verified under oath, giving their judgment of the value of said land. The bank transmitting said application shall state whether or not the appraisement made by the applicant and his neighbors represents the fair cash value of said land.

The national land bank shall appoint from time to time such inspectors as are necessary to make inspection and appraisement of all lands before loans shall be closed thereon. Said inspectors shall be paid such salaries as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding $1,500 per annum, and a reasonable allowance for traveling expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

For expenses of the Revenue-Cutter Service, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914, $7,398.58.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice various items in this bill for the Revenue-Cutter

Service and the Life-Saving Service, in addition to the Coast-Guard Service. The title is what attracts my attention. Of course the Revenue-Cutter Service and the Life-Saving Service are no longer known by those names.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But under the law appropriations for this year for the two services are available for the Coast-Guard Service. The passage of the Coast-Guard bill gave certain mandatory increases in salaries.

Mr. MANN. I am not asking about the items.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the deficiency appropriations are made in the language of the original appropriations.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but that law provided that appropriations thereafter made for the fiscal year should be available for the Coast-Guard Service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not thereafter made, but appropriations for this fiscal year are available for the Coast-Guard Service; but in making the appropriations for deficiencies they are made in the same terms as the original appropriations.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And this is the way the accounts run on the books of the Treasury, and out of these particular items certain sums are paid. It prevents the opening of new accounts until the beginning of the next fiscal year, when the different form of appropriation becomes effective.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman can get it past the accounting officers, all right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All I have to worry about is getting it past the House. [Laughter.] Getting it past the accounting officer is something for the chaps who want the money to worry about.

Mr. MANN. I should be rather surprised if an appropriation made now for a service under a title which has been abolished was available, where the law itself provided that appropriations already made should be available for the new service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no appropriation under other titles in which there is a deficiency. The appropriations available at this time for the Coast-Guard Service are carried in accounts in the manner in which these deficiencies are carried, and these are to supply deficiencies.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but they are carried now under the Coast-Guard Service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; they are not.

Mr. MANN. They must be. The law says they shall be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it did not say the account should be carried in that way. It said the appropriations for this fiscal year for these particular services should be available for the Coast-Guard Service.

Mr. MANN. But you are making an appropriation for a service which has been abolished.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are using the appropriations for services that are abolished for the consolidated service.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FERRIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21546, the general deficiency appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1446).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 32, 33, 34, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 50, 59, 60, 61, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 82, 91, 92, 94, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 104, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 127, 128, 131, 136, 138, 140, and 141.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 17, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 37, 39, 45, 46, 51, 52, 54, 55, 57, 58, 62, 66, 74, 81, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 93, 95, 96, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 132, 133, 134, 135, 137, 139, and 142, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$141,130"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Division of Efficiency: For establishment and maintenance of system of efficiency ratings, pursuant to section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1913, for investigation of the needs of the several executive departments and independent establishments with respect to personnel; and for investigation of duplication of statistical and other work and methods of business in the various branches of the Government service; including not more than $2,500 for equipment, supplies, stationery, books, and printing; and not more than $50 for street car fare; $30,000; the Chief of the Division of Efficiency herein provided for shall be appointed by the President and shall report to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, through the President, the nature and progress of work undertaken by the division together with a detailed statement of expenditures showing the persons employed, their duties, and the compensation paid to each: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a compensation in excess of $4,000 per annum."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "twenty-three" and on page 33 of the bill, in line 23, strike out "$8,000" and insert in lieu thereof the sum "$7,280"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$231,020"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$250"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$156,780"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$166,758"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 105: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$18,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 106: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: And at end of matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "A detailed statement of traveling expenses incurred hereunder shall be made to Congress at the beginning of each regular session thereof."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "thirty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 16, 18, 20, 21, 35, 41, 63, 64, and 65.

JOSEPH T. JOHNSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
J. H. GALLINGER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 17, relating to the Senate: Appropriates for employees and expenses of the Senate, as proposed by the Senate.

Nos. 121, 122, and 123, relating to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: Strikes out the additional clerk at $1,800, proposed by the Senate, and provides for one clerk to each commercial attaché at $1,500, as proposed by the House.

Nos. 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, and 131, relating to the Steamboat-Inspection Service: Strikes out the two additional clerks at $900 each, proposed by the Senate, in the office of the Supervising Inspector General; provides for 30 assistant inspectors at $2,000 each at the port of New York instead of 27 as proposed by the House and 33 as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the additional assistant inspectors, proposed by the Senate, for the ports of Providence, Cleveland, Chicago, Grand Haven, Detroit, and Portland, Oreg.; provides for 8 assistant inspectors at Milwaukee, as proposed by the House, instead of 2 as proposed by the Senate; and strikes out the authority, proposed by the Senate, for an allowance of $7 per diem for subsistence of employees when traveling in Alaska.

Nos. 132, 133, 134, 135, and 136, relating to the Bureau of Navigation: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the shipping commissioners at Bath, Gloucester, and Pascagoula; and strikes out the increase of $900 in the appropriation for clerk hire in offices of shipping commissioners.

Nos. 137 and 138, relating to the Bureau of Standards: Appropriates $10,000 for the investigation and standardization of methods and instruments employed in radio communication; and strikes out the appropriation of $10,000 for investigation of the methods of measurement and technical processes in the manufacture of pottery, brick, tile, terra cotta, and other clay products.

Nos. 139, 140, and 141, relating to the Bureau of Labor Statistics: Inserts authority for the use of $6,000 in the employment of temporary services in the District of Columbia at not exceeding $100 per month for not more than six consecutive months for each person and strikes out the increase of $6,000 proposed in the sum for the employment of experts and special agents; and strikes out the appropriation of $6,000 for an investigation into the cost of living of wage earners, other than Government employees, in the District of Columbia.

No. 142: Inserts authority for the exchange of law books for judicial officers.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree upon the following Senate amendments:

Nos. 1, 2, and 18: Relating to mileage of Senators and Representatives.

Nos. 16 and 20: Relating to the maintenance of the automobiles for the Vice President and the Speaker.

No. 21: Providing for a legislative reference bureau in the Library of Congress.

No. 35: Appropriating $160,000 to defray expenses in connection with the formal and official opening of the Panama Canal.

No. 41: Appropriating $75,000 for emergency clerical services in the Department of State.

No. 63: Increasing the appropriation for salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue from $2,165,000 to $2,480,000.

No. 64: Reducing the amount for expenses of revenue agents, gaugers, storekeepers, and storekeeper-gaugers from $2,600,000 to $2,200,000.

No. 65: Appropriating $292,000 for enforcement of the act restricting the sale of opium and allied drugs.

JOSEPH T. JOHNSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question or two.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. What disposition, if any, was shown on the part of the managers on the part of the Senate about amendments numbered 1, 2, and 18, relating to mileage?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Those matters are still pending. Will the gentleman wait until the conference report is agreed to? Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the first amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up amendments numbered 1, 2, and 18 together; they all relate to mileage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to consider amendments numbered 1, 2, and 18 together, being on the same subject of mileage. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report all three amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 1: Strike out the following language on pages 1 and 2 of the printed bill: "That in lieu of all mileage each Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses for himself and the dependent members of his family in coming from and returning to his home at each session of Congress."

Amendment No. 2: Page 2, line 4, of the printed bill, strike out "$12,750" and insert "$51,000."

Amendment No. 18: Page 12, line 15, of the printed bill, strike out the figures "$43,750" and insert "$175,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and I want to make this statement: The first amendment relates to mileage, and the Senate conferees very frankly stated to the House conferees that if we wanted to defeat the passage of this bill we could do so by insisting upon the Senate yielding on this amendment. I want to be frank with the House and state that the conferees on the part of the Senate have given us to understand that rather than yield upon this amendment they will suffer the bill to be defeated.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman feels confident that the Senate conferees will stand by this statement, does he?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I believe they will.

Mr. MONDELL. Then, would it not be the part of wisdom on the part of the House to yield on the matter and not carry it further if this is to be the final outcome? The gentleman, of course, does not expect to allow his bill to fail?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Well, I do not know of anybody who wants the bill to fail, because there is nobody who wants an extra session of Congress.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Is the gentleman's argument an appeal to the House to vote down the motion that he has made?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; I am not asking to vote it down. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

Mr. COX. Did the Senate conferees, or the managers on the part of the Senate, make any statement to the gentleman which he is in a position to give to the effect that later on they would see to it that a fair, square vote was given this proposition in the Senate?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They stated that at this short session of Congress they were not willing to enter into a serious discussion of this amendment; but one of the conferees very frankly stated that so far as he was concerned that at the next session of Congress he hoped that if the House insisted upon this mileage proposition that the Senate would take it up and settle it in some way. That was as far as the statement went.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me three or four minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman, if he desires.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to make a point of order that there is no quorum to get a direct vote on this proposition, because I recognize it is a short session, near adjournment, and I do not desire to do that at this time. But it was well stated, and stated with emphasis, by some gentleman on that side of the Chamber—I do not remember who, but it was probably the gentleman from Iowa, if I remember correctly—who said we know, and know well, that the Senate will write this amendment. Some gentlemen on this side of the House, at the time when the provision was under discussion, characterized it as an opera bouffe, a mere child's performance, and I have come to look upon it very largely in that light myself. [Applause.] There are some men here, in my judgment, sincere on this proposition, but every time the conferees come back and say, "The Senate says this bill is going to fail, and there is no way on earth to avoid a defeat of this bill except by the House conferees yielding on it." That is the only way out of it now. We were told that when the legislative bill came back here last year. There were only two or three days more before the fiscal year closed, and we were told then by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and, I believe, by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the only way to get this bill upon the statute books would be for the House to yield on this proposition, because the Senate never would yield. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the big Senate of the United States is willing to go upon record of seeing the great legislative bill fail to become a law absolutely because of a little item of mileage, pertaining to them individually, only amounting to $51,000 at each session of Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman willing to try that out at this session?

Mr. COX. I am absolutely willing to do so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So am I.

Mr. COX. I am absolutely willing to try it out, with a view of seeing whether or not we are sincere upon this side and whether or not if the other end of the Capitol—the Senate of the United States—is willing to let this bill fail solely because of their mileage. The time has come when we ought to insist upon our rights. I think this is the third or fourth time that the House has passed this mileage provision, sent it over to the Senate; and I am told by the conferees that they can scarcely ever get decent treatment out of the managers on the part of the Senate when it comes to dealing with this question. The time has come, if we are sincere, to put it right up to them and let them vote in any way or manner they see fit, and if they want to accept the odium of defeating this bill, let them do it. But, as I said a moment ago, we are now within three or four days of the adjournment of this session of Congress. I would gladly vote at this time, at this late hour, so far as I am concerned, to put it up to the Senate and fight it out. If it was put squarely up to them, in my candid judgment, at the hour of 11.45 o'clock on the morning of March 4 you would see the Senate back up on this provision and accept it instead of letting this bill fail.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I will.

Mr. SIMS. Now, in order that at the next Congress the Senate will know we are in earnest, suppose we cover back into the Treasury all the mileage appropriated.

Mr. COX. I refuse to yield to the gentleman any more. I do not care how the gentleman votes. I am perfectly willing to yield for a question, but I am not going to yield to have things of this nature injected into my remarks.

Again replying to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], I should be glad to see the House right now take a position and send this bill back to conference, with a vote behind it, with the determination on the part of the managers on the part of the House to carry it out, and let the bill fail, if necessary, rather than for us to be everlastingly engaged in this pantomime performance of year in and year out passing this bill over to the Senate and having the House conferees back up and saying that they can not do it because the Senate conferees say that the bill will fail.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] to further disagree ought to be adopted by the House. I do not believe that the Senate would defeat this bill because of this mileage item, and I feel equally confident that the House will not. I do not believe that the Members of Congress who have been in almost continuous session now for several years, those who have been here that long, desire to continue in session all this summer. The Senate is in a somewhat different position, if the papers are correct, because they state that the President proposes to call a special session of the Senate anyhow. They possibly are a little more independent in this matter than we are. It would not be so much the merits of the particular proposition which would cause either body to remain stubborn as it would to change the precedents. It has been the unwritten rule in Congress for many years that where either the House or the Senate proposed new legislation in an appropriation bill, and the other body refused to accept it and no compromise could be reached, that the body which proposed the legislation eventually yielded. I do not altogether approve of that precedent.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. I think the time might arise when the House which originates appropriation bills might want to insist upon some legislative item in the bill and, if necessary, stop the machinery of the Government until that question could be tested.

I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. I am well aware of the rule the gentleman has just mentioned that the House originating the legislation must yield finally. Will the gentleman let me call his attention to the provision in the last legislative bill that was known as the Borland amendment, on which, as I understand, the conferees between the two bodies struggled for weeks, if not months, the Senate declaring that it never would yield. That amendment was originated in the House. And yet the time came, and it came three days before the last day of last June, when the Senate yielded upon that provision and let the House conferees have their way about it, although it was originally a House provision.

Mr. MANN. That does not conflict with the statement which I made. I do not know whether the Senate will yield now. I do not think the Senate would cause an extra session of Congress on account of the mileage proposition, no matter what they may say now.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. ADAMSON. Does this proposition differ in any respect so far as its provisions are concerned from any other rider on an appropriation bill?

Mr. MANN. I do not think it does. Everything of the sort comes before the two bodies. It is perfectly certain, as long as gentlemen have said what they have, in my opinion, that this body will not stay here deliberately after the 4th of March in order to change the rate of mileage which they will be paid in going home. I think they prefer to get home——

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. MANN (continuing). Rather than to draw or miss mileage.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Illinois referred a few moments ago to the possibility of the Senate being called alone in extra session. When those extra sessions of the Senate are called are they paid mileage for them?

Mr. MANN. Under the law they are not. The law only provides for mileage at regular sessions of Congress. Of course, usually they are called immediately after the adjournment of Congress, and there is no mileage. I think we ought to maintain our position for the present; and if we can get the Senate to yield, all right. But if they will not, if they are willing to stand before their constituents, they will have to answer to their constituents in the end, and temporarily we will have to yield.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. TAGGART. To make a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 18.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that motion. It will necessitate a roll call, and we would like to get this bill back to conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas makes the preferential motion.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion for the time being.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] withdraws his preferential motion temporarily, and the gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 18. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20347) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and had further insisted upon its amendments to the said bill in disagreement, asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. DU PONT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up amendments numbered 16 and 20 together.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to consider amendments numbered 16 and 20 together. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 16, amendment numbered 16: Insert the words "For driving, maintenance, and care of automobile for the Vice President, $1,500."

Amendment numbered 20, page 21 of the bill, line 16: Insert the words "For driving, maintenance, and operation of automobile for the Speaker of the House of Representatives, $1,500."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 16 and 20 and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House recede from its disagreement to both amendments and concur in the same.

Mr. MOORE rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE. I wanted to ask the gentleman if both officers are treated alike in this matter?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They are.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not answer.

Mr. MOORE. I am satisfied.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur in these two Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 21: Page 24 of the bill, after line 3, insert the following:

"Legislative reference: To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to gather, classify, and make available, in translations, indexes, digests, compilations, and bulletins, and otherwise, data for or bearing upon legislation, and to render such data serviceable to Congress and committees and Members thereof, and for the acquisition of material required for their work, and for other expenses incidental thereto, $25,000, together with the unexpended balance, if any, of the sum appropriated under the head of 'Legislative reference' for the fiscal year 1915."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 21.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MONDELL. To make a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. That the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] to further insist upon the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 35: Page 30 of the bill, after line 18, insert the following: "For such expenses as, in the opinion of the President, are properly connected with the formal and official opening of the Panama Canal and each and every purpose connected therewith, $160,000, to be immediately available, to be expended at the discretion of the President and accounted for on his certificate solely. The President is authorized to utilize the services of such officers of the Army and Navy as he may designate to assist in the formal and official opening of the Panama Canal. The services of the officers of the Army while so employed shall be counted as service with their organizations within the meaning of all laws relating to the detachment of officers from their organizations for duty of any kind. The actual expenses of officers of the Army and Navy while on such duty shall be paid them in lieu of any mileage allowance to which they may be entitled by law. The President is authorized to use such vessels of the United States Army transport service and of the Panama Railroad for the purposes indicated herein as in his opinion can properly be spared, and any expense connected with this use of such vessels shall be payable out of the appropriation herein made, and any vessel not carrying freight-earning cargo used for the purposes indicated herein shall during such use for those purposes be exempt from payment of Panama Canal tolls."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 35; and before that motion is voted on I want to say that the conferees on the part of the House would like to have some expression from the membership of the House in regard to this item. It was never before the Committee on Appropriations of the House. We know nothing about the estimates upon which it was based. We know nothing about the reasons which may exist in favor of the appropriation. It comes to us as a Senate amendment, carrying $160,000 for the purpose of celebrating the opening of the Panama Canal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would it not be well for the gentleman from South Carolina to state to the House the purpose of the appropriation and the program contemplated, so that the Members would then be able to pass intelligently upon it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I know nothing about the purpose of the amendment except as that purpose is revealed in the language of the amendment itself. I know nothing about the plans for the expenditure of the money except as they are revealed in the amendment.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. Has not the gentleman or some member of the Committee on Appropriations or some member of the conference committee some letter, some knowledge, or some information to give to the House as to what they propose to use this money for?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can not speak as to the information possessed by other men. I have no such information as the gentleman desires.

Mr. COX. I read the debate on the amendment while it was pending in the Senate, and it seemed to be very blank as to who was behind it, who was asking for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Senate of the United States is behind it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Five minutes, or longer, if the gentleman wants it.

Mr. MANN. I will ask for more time if I want more.

Mr. Speaker, there has always been some talk of having some kind of ceremony in connection with the opening of the Panama Canal. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House, I think, would have jurisdiction over legislation relating to the matter. They have made no report to the House of any bill. Some time ago—I think the date was the day before the President made his Indianapolis speech, because my recollection is that he was leaving the conference that he had called in order to go to Indianapolis—the President invited several Members of the House and several Members of the Senate to go to the White House on this matter. It is a very delicate thing to endeavor to repeat from recollection any proposition which is laid before you, and I may be in error as to my recollection of the proposition that was submitted by the President.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], as I recall, was there; and if my recollection is erroneous, he doubtless will correct me. The President read to those who were there a statement which, I think, he stated had been prepared by some one in the War Department and submitted to him by the Secretary of War as a tentative proposition. My recollection is that that contemplated that on the 5th of March—of course, the dates have now been changed—there were to be two or three vessels sail from New York. The President himself at that time intended to go to Panama on the battleship New York, leaving here on March 7 and to arrive at Panama on the 12th. The contemplation was, as I recall it, that the Cabinet were to be taken from New York to Panama on one of the Panama Railroad steamships, and from there, after the ceremonies at Panama, to San Francisco, where the President then intended to go on the New York, in connection with visiting the Panama Exposition. As I recall, the proposition also contemplated taking the representatives of foreign countries here to Panama on one of the other Panama Railroad steamships. It also contemplated the employment of a private steamship, with a passenger-carrying capacity of about 250, to take Members of Congress to Panama; and, in addition, one or two of the Army transports, if they could be put in condition, would take about another 100 of the Members of Congress.

The proposition also contemplated inviting ex-President Taft and ex-President Roosevelt. I think, if my memory is right, each of those gentlemen was to go on a naval vessel.

The main talk at the conference was as to how to bring the matter to Congress and how quickly it could be disposed of, because then it was getting late to make the arrangements which had been outlined, and as the date for sailing from New York was March 5, speedy action was needed. The plan also contemplated asking various foreign countries, at least those in Central and South America, to send a representative from each country to Panama. I think it was not stated whether it was expected that the traveling expenses of these representatives were to be paid by our Government. The plan was to have these representatives of foreign countries, and possibly others who were there, entertained in some manner on the night of either March 12 or March 13, and then the next day to have some formal ceremonies, either in Gatun Lake or over on the Pacific side, the ceremonies to consist mainly of the presentation of the canal—probably that is not the proper term—by Gov. Goethals to the Secretary of War and by the Secretary of War to the President. The ceremonies were not intended to be elaborate, but dignified and simple. Although the matter was not discussed to any extent at the conference, it did not seem to me that there was any necessity or any likelihood of Congress voting a junketing trip for itself. Especially in view of the fact that there is quite a discussion going on in Congress in reference to the payment of mileage, it hardly seemed to me that the House would insist upon reducing the mileage to send its Members home and then pay for sending them to Panama. As I recall, it was not intended that any of these invited guests were to go beyond Panama except the Cabinet. The President naturally would go to San Francisco. As I understand from the newspapers, that part of the program is abandoned.

I do not know whether my recollection agrees entirely with that of the gentleman from Kentucky as to the substance of the memorandum which was submitted. I think somebody has the memorandum. What took place at the conference further than that does not amount to very much. Personally I believe it would be entirely proper for the President to go to Panama. I do not understand that in any event any of the money appropriated here would be used for any of his expenses. Where the President travels on one of the naval vessels I do not understand that the expenses are charged up to anybody else; but if they were, I take it they would be paid out of the presidential traveling appropriation.

If ceremonies are had there, I think it would be entirely appropriate to invite ex-President Taft and ex-President Roosevelt, though I doubt very much whether they would go. If exercises are held there, I think it would be entirely appropriate to invite foreign countries to send representatives, and for this country to give them some entertainment while there; but as the canal is for the benefit of those other countries as much as it is for our benefit, I can see no reason why we should pay their traveling expenses in going to and from Panama. I think it would be entirely appropriate for Congress to appoint a small committee of the House and of the Senate to attend the exercises, if such committee should be desired, although I do not believe the House or the Senate would be willing to employ a steamship for the purpose of carrying them down there, and my understanding is that the reduction of the amount from $250,000—the item that Secretary Garrison submitted—to $160,000 was because of the cutting out of the congressional expense, although at that time the expense of Members of Congress, it was figured, would be in the neighborhood of $40,000 or $50,000.

I make these statements in justice to the House. The President desired only to lay the matter before Congress in order that Congress might do what it saw fit; and he did it as speedily, as he stated, as he was able to do.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MADDEN. I want to get about two or three minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In a moment. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I was one of those invited to meet with the President when this matter was discussed it is perhaps proper that I should say a word or two in addition to that which has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

My recollection is that the gentleman from Illinois has correctly stated the program, although since it was read to me I have never seen the detailed statement of the estimate of cost.

The President stated that it was his understanding that some celebration on the part of the country upon the completion of the canal had been contemplated and that he had called the gentlemen together to talk over the matter informally, as the time was getting very short when arrangements must be made, if any were to be made. There was then submitted a statement as to the general expense that would be entailed. There was some discussion as to the representation that should be had, and it was generally thought that it was impracticable for Congress to go as a body, but inasmuch as Congress had had a large share in the authorization and continuation of the work it was thought that it should be represented in any celebration that might be had there. With the submission of the general program as it was then understood the informal meeting broke up.

I desire simply to say this about my own view of the matter, now that it is brought before the House: I do think that the opening of the Panama Canal is an event of sufficient moment to warrant this Nation in celebrating it. I do believe that it is entirely proper that the President of the United States should be present at such celebration, and that proper provision should be made that he may be there with such guests as have been suggested—the two former Presidents, who had much to do with the building of the canal, and such other limited number of guests as the fitness of the occasion would necessarily indicate. I do not believe that there ought to be any great expenditure made for the purpose of what is commonly spoken of as a junket, and I do not believe that anybody desires anything of that kind being done.

Whether Congress desires to have a limited number of its Members represented or not is for Congress to determine. Certainly I do believe that it is proper that the legislative branch of our Government should be represented in a matter of this moment. I appreciate the difficulty that confronts Members in dealing with a matter of this kind, and I should not personally be willing to vote any extravagant sum, but I think men are lacking in perspective and lacking somewhat in appreciation of the people of America—for the people rightly have a great pride touching the building of the canal—if they think the people desire that Congress shall not take any action in regard to the opening of the canal. I think that we owe it to the dignity of the Nation to recognize one of the greatest events in material achievement in the world's history in some formal way.

As to the amount, I have not sufficient information to determine, but it ought to be sufficient to enable the President and his guests to go there under proper circumstances and auspices. It ought not to be any more than is necessary for a proper and small representative number of Americans representing the various branches of the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, in the act to provide for the opening and operation of the Panama Canal and the government of the zone approved August 24, 1912, it was provided that when the canal should be completed the President of the United States should formally and officially open the canal. That enactment left alone gives him full authority, gives him plenary power, but it does not give him the money. The only thing absolutely necessary to enable him to discharge that duty is an appropriation.

As the time drew near, as it was thought, for the completion of the canal and the proper time for the official and formal opening of the canal, the Secretary of War took up the subject in regard to the method of that opening and how much it would cost. He had made a detailed estimate and statement of the various features of the opening ceremonies. He submitted that to the President, and the President, as has been stated, called together the fiscal authorities of the two Houses and the political leaders of the two Houses, and talked over informally with them the probability as to what Congress would see proper to do in the matter.

Following that conference a resolution was prepared and one copy delivered to me and one to the Senator having jurisdiction of the subject, with the suggestion that we discuss the matter with the respective Houses and if it were thought wise to introduce the resolution.

I conferred with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the leader of our side of the House, and with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the leader of the minority, and after conferring with them I decided that I would not introduce the resolution for $250,000, first, because it was late in the session and there was doubt about securing recognition and securing the enactment in that shape during the session. Second, it included $90,000 or $100,000 for the expense of carrying Congress down there, and I do not believe that I found a single Congressman in all my conferences willing to stand for that proposition.

I went over and saw the members of the Senate committee and suggested that the best way to expedite the legislation was to place the proper amount on an appropriation bill, and it could be thrashed out in conference, and if the proper amount was not placed in the bill it could be reached and agreed upon.

I have that itemized statement somewhere, and I thought the committee had it, but I believe I sent it to Senator MARTIN of Virginia by Representative FLOOD of Virginia. It was not put on a bill in the House because it was thought that there ought to be time to notify the representatives of the foreign Governments in order that they might reach the canal in time for the opening, which at that time was to take place early in March, and the bill now before the House was already in the Senate and likely to become a law first.

When it was found that we could not get ready by the 5th of March, that the canal itself would not be physically ready by the 5th of March, it was postponed. But before that postponement was made the Senate determined to place the provision upon this bill in order that expedition might be had, and it was done.

This $160,000 includes an item for the cost of carrying the President and his suite and the Cabinet and the foreign ambassadors and everybody whom the President might invite, but not Congress as such. It contemplates using our own vessels except one, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, which was to be chartered. This $160,000 includes everything except the expense of carrying the Members of the House and the Senate, the President preferring that Congress should separately arrange for attendance or representation. We ageed that that ought to be left out. Of course the President if he has this money appropriated need not spend it all if it is not necessary. What is left remains in the Treasury. We ought not to be niggardly about it. We have spent almost $400,000,000 in accomplishing the greatest engineering feat the world ever saw, and it would be a ridiculous fiasco to wind that up with the cheeseparing business of refusing a few thousand dollars for an adequate, honorable celebration of the event for the benefit of the world.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman that, as one of the conferees, I am very glad to hear these statements, because, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has stated, there was no information given to the conferees. We had no information as to exactly what it was intended to do with this appropriation. I understand the gentleman to say that it is contemplated that no Members of Congress shall be transported to Panama as a result of this appropriation, but that it is contemplated only that the President and his suite shall go, and the diplomats who are here in Washington shall be invited as guests, and also the two ex-Presidents and members of the Cabinet. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has stated that there will be no expense attached to the President's visit to Panama, because he will go upon one of the naval vessels. In view of these facts, I want to ask the gentleman what possible excuse there can be, in face of the condition of the Treasury growing worse, as it is, every day, for appropriating the immense sum of $160,000 for this trip to Panama?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I should have stated, if I did not do so, that the estimate made by the Secretary of War contemplated the power of the President to invite some guests to attend, various distinguished personages, and that he might, if he saw proper, invite Members of the House and the Senate to attend. Without express authority from Congress providing the expense for Members of Congress there would be no provision except in the general authority to the President to invite such people as he chose to invite to participate in the celebration. As to the question of the gentleman respecting the items of expense, I am sure the Senate committee had one of those statements, and I shall endeavor to find another and furnish it to the conferees, showing in detail all of these items, but I can assure the gentleman that this $160,000 does not contemplate any provision for any congressional committee or any Congressman to go unless he should go as the specially invited guest of the President, but the President does not wish the responsibility of determining what Congressmen shall attend, preferring that Congress act for itself on that matter. In view of the statement of gentlemen here I do not insist that this shall be concurred in now, because I think they ought to have an opportunity to see the items and thrash it out and discuss it and understand it, and I have no doubt that they will do the thing that is right and honorable about it, and that this Congress will do likewise.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the United States has been the instrumentality by means of which the greatest engineering project of the civilized ages is about to be thrown open to the public, and I think it is altogether proper that we should celebrate the achievement in some way. I am not altogether sure that the President of the United States should be the only functionary who has the right to invite guests to this celebration. I believe that the language of this amendment, if it should be approved at all by the conferees, should be so modified as to authorize the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate to appoint a small committee of the House and of the Senate to be participants in this celebration. I think it would be very undignified to have any celebration of the opening of the canal in which this body and the body at the other end of the Capitol were not officially represented, and I believe it ought not to be delegated to the President of the United States to invite, if he saw fit, Members of the House and of the Senate, but that the presiding officers of these two bodies should be given the power to name such men as they please.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that it is the wish of the President and the Secretary of War that Congress shall determine upon such arrangement as it sees proper to make as to the attendance of its own Members, or any committee thereof, in addition to this $160,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I think the $160,000 will be quite sufficient to meet all of the expenses connected with the modest celebration which ought to be had on the Isthmus of Panama, and sufficient to include such committees as the House and the Senate might think proper to name.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. COX. In view of the fact that our Treasury balances are going down at the rate of a million dollars a day, or nearly so, and that they have been traveling at that rate for the last 15 days and are likely to go on for the next 40 or 50 days at the same rate, does not the gentleman feel that $160,000 is far too much to appropriate for this purpose?

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I think if we are going to have a celebration at all that all branches of the Government should be identified with it officially. I am not especially convinced that we should celebrate the opening of the canal at this time, especially when the Treasury balance is being reduced daily, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] well says, and because of the fact that this Treasury balance is being so reduced men in the service of the Government, at least the men who are in humble positions in the service of the Government, are being either dismissed from the service or having their salaries reduced as a result of the diminished revenues.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say that he thinks it is proper for a committee of the House and Senate to be appointed by their own presiding officers.

Mr. MADDEN. I think if any committee of the House is to be appointed at all, it would be undignified for them to accept appointment from any other source than the presiding officers of the respective bodies.

Mr. SIMS. Especially as they represent the only members of the Government elected directly by the people. I think, like the gentleman, it would be much more proper for us to have a little to say about this rather than for the representatives of the people directly by election to be guests of indirectly elected or appointed officers of the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. To begin with, if we are to have a celebration at all, the House and the Senate should be identified officially with the celebration, and we would be placed in the humiliating position of asking the President of the United States to invite Members of this House or the Senate as officials to be represented at the celebration, and particularly we ought not to be put in the attitude of being the personal guests of the President when we have the power to suggest to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate what they shall do officially.

ARMOR-PLATE INVESTIGATION (H. DOC. NO. 1620).

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, in the naval appropriation bill passed at the last session of Congress a committee was appointed known as the armor-plate committee. I desire to submit to the House the report of that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee appointed under the provisions of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, approved June 30, 1914, begs to submit to Congress the following report.

The SPEAKER. Ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FITZGERALD moves to recede from the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 35 and agree to the same with an amendment striking out of the amendment the words "to be expended at the discretion of the President and accounted for on his certificate solely."

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, to strike out of the Senate amendment "$160,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina moves to amend the amendment offered by Mr. FITZGERALD by striking out of the Senate amendment "$160,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$50,000."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I offer this motion so that the House may have an opportunity to express its opinion upon the question before it. Such an expression of opinion will give the managers on the part of the House some information as to the attitude of the House so it may determine the question. The motion which I have submitted is to recede from the disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment. The Senate amendment provides:

For such expenses as, in the opinion of the President, are properly connected with the formal and official opening of the Panama Canal and each and every purpose connected therewith.

That portion of the amendment leaves to the President to determine what expenses would be appropriate for which the money may be expended. I have no disposition to change that portion of the amendment, but the amendment further provides that no accounting whatever shall be made of the money and no audit of the expenditures shall be made of those expenditures as required by law of every other expenditure in the Government, with the sole exception of the appropriation of $25,000 for the traveling expenses of the President.

We all know, as a matter of fact, that the expenditure of this money will not be under the personal supervision of the President of the United States. Some subordinate official of the State Department or of the War Department will be passing upon the bills and making the disbursements. If we provide that the expenditures shall be made solely upon the certificate of the President, which means that they shall not be audited by the proper auditing officers of the Government, either the President necessarily must give personal attention and supervision to the expenditures or he will be merely acting in a formal manner in ratifying the action of some subordinate official. I do not believe that such authority should be granted by Congress regarding any appropriation. There is a single appropriation to which such a provision, perhaps, is properly attached, and that is the provision for the appropriation for the traveling expenses of the President.

The amendment which I propose strikes out this provision and gives to the President the discretion to determine the expenses which are proper in connection with the celebration, and then it will require the vouchers for the expenditures to be transmitted to and be examined and approved by the proper auditor of the Government. I do not believe we can justify the expenditure of Government money in any other manner.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, how much is necessary for this celebration. I was unfortunately required to be out of the city the day that the conference with the President was held regarding this matter. I was requested to be present, but could not attend. Those gentlemen who were present said that a statement was made as to the tentative expenses to be incurred. I have never seen the program. I do not know the expenditures contemplated. I have no knowledge as to the particular items for which the money is to be expended, except that I was subsequently informed that $90,000 had been included for the expenses of the representation from Congress, which amount has been eliminated. This situation strikingly illustrates the desirability and importance of insisting upon estimates for appropriations being transmitted to Congress in the manner prescribed by law. If the estimate had been transmitted to Congress, as the law requires, all of the information which is now sought would be contained in an official document printed by the two Houses, and gentlemen would not be in the dark as to just what is contemplated. I am not criticizing the suggestion of the amount proposed, because I have not the information upon which to express an opinion. I am of the opinion that it is appropriate that the Government of the United States should in a proper and in a dignified manner commemorate the completion of the Panama Canal. I believe that at such a celebration it is appropriate to invite the representatives of the other civilized nations of the earth, and also former officials of the United States Government who had a large part in the undertaking. Congress itself made provision for official representation of the Congress at such a celebration. In the sundry civil appropriation bill for the current year, in an item connected with the Canal Zone, there is provision for the expenses of the official representation of Congress attending the formal opening of the canal. Those expenses were to have been paid out of an appropriation of $500,000 made available for this fiscal year. When the Committee on Appropriations reported that provision at the last session of Congress it was in the belief that some action would be taken by the two Houses to provide for the appointment of appropriate committees to represent the two Houses of Congress. It may be of some interest to the House to know that I have been informed that this appropriation has been entirely expended, so that the language contained in it will be of little value to the House if it does appoint a committee to attend the celebration.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, in view of the condition surrounding the matter, that the managers upon the part of the House should be left to deal with this subject without any expression of opinion on the part of the House as to what should be done. With the motion to concur pending, it is possible for the House, if it does not believe $160,000 should be appropriated, to express its opinion upon various sums as they may be offered in amendments. In that way the House can determine how much it is willing to appropriate to pay the expenses of the celebration. When the amount is fixed, it will be possible for those who will have control of the celebration to arrange it in such a manner that it can be conducted within the sum appropriated. I believe that to be the proper way to determine the matter. I hope that the House will definitely determine if anything is to be appropriated, how much it is to be. In that way the House will be on record as definitely expressing its views upon the question. The matter has not been discussed in the House, but it should be discussed. The conference that was had relative to this matter called by the President, and to which were invited certain Members of the House on this side, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] representing the minority, certain Members of the Senate, and the leader of the Republicans in the Senate were called in view of the situation at the time. The purpose in having the informal conference was to see if the consensus of opinion of the two bodies would be such that if the proposed celebration was to have taken place immediately after the adjournment of Congress, as then contemplated, some means could be arranged by which the appropriation would be made sufficiently early to enable proper arrangements to be made to have those participate whom it was contemplated would be invited.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will ask the gentleman, if it is the desire of the House or Congress to make a separate arrangement for representation from Congress, the session being so near its close, would it not be wise that the amendment be so made as to provide in this bill at this time for that representation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My opinion is that if the House wishes to express an opinion upon that question it would be wise to permit such amendments to be offered and considered at this time. We will have no better opportunity for the House to express its desires in the matter. If it wishes to have representation of the House and the Senate, and make provision for such representation, I believe it is desirable to determine that question now.

Mr. ADAMSON. Does the gentleman object to modifying his amendment and suggesting a plan by which there would be representation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not wish to accept it as a part of my motion, but I would not object to the consideration of an amendment that would give the House an opportunity to pass upon the question. If an amendment is proposed to do it, so far as I am concerned, I shall not object. I believe that this is the best, perhaps the only, opportunity the House will have to express an opinion upon the matter.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

The SPEAKER. There is already one amendment pending to the amendment.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. How much time has the gentleman?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Five minutes.

So far as I am personally concerned, Mr. Speaker, I should have been willing to support the motion made by the chairman of the conference committee to further disagree to this amendment and let it go back to the conference, to be settled by the conferees on the part of the House. But since the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has offered a motion to concur in the Senate amendment, I believe that the amount, if we are going to fix it definitely, should be made at a much less figure than that carried in the Senate amendment.

As has been stated on the floor, the President himself and, possibly, a number of his guests will be carried on a ship of the Navy without additional expense, so far as transportation is concerned, and it occurred to me that while we ought to celebrate the opening of this canal in a proper manner and the President should be left free to invite such persons to be present on this occasion as in his judgment should be present, the amount included in the amendment I have offered of $50,000 would be ample, in view of the fact that possibly the transportation of the entire party will only be at nominal expense, if at any additional expense at all, to celebrate the occasion in proper form and with dignity. And, believing that, I hope the House will adopt the amendment that I have offered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from North Carolina where his amendment would come in with respect to the Fitzgerald amendment?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Add to the amendment "and that the amount," and so forth.

Mr. MANN. "And also."

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; "and also."

Mr. Speaker, I am informed that in addition to this amount that we are to appropriate in this item the Navy has more than $100,000 that it can expend for this purpose in the entertainment of the navies of other countries.

Mr. MANN. They will not be there.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. They will not be there, possibly, in very great numbers; but at the same time possibly some of them may be there.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. I wanted to state that the appropriation available for the Navy carried in the bill of last year is limited to the entertainment of foreign guests.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes. That would include, I presume, the navies of the South American countries or any other foreign countries that would participate in this celebration.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back such time as I have not used.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has yielded back two minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. You just started on a new hour when the motion was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the amount proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], namely, $50,000, is fully ample, and probably more than will be expended. Among the items which were originally contemplated was the taking of the entire Cabinet from New York by way of Panama to California. That will not be done. The Secretary of the Navy, I presume, will go on a naval vessel. Very likely the Secretary of War will go on a naval vessel, and I should presume that the Secretary of State would likely go on a naval vessel. The other Secretaries ought not to go at all. They have no occasion to go to Panama. I can see no reason why we should take all of the representatives of foreign countries to this country from Washington down to Panama and bring them back home. We invite representatives from foreign countries, to be selected by the countries, to come. They pay their own expenses hither. The cost of entertaining them while in Panama will be very slight. I can not imagine how it is possible to expend as much as $50,000 upon this proposition.

How many Members of Congress would be disposed to go to Panama in June or July and stay there two or three days and then come back to New York? Not many people will do that for the purpose of hearing an able speech, very brief, by Col.—it ought to be Gen.—Goethals, by the Secretary of War, and by the President. There will be practically no other ceremonies. I can not see how a larger amount is needed. I do not see why they need as much as $50,000, but I am perfectly willing to vote for that, out of excess of generosity.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, some of the Members of the House seem to think that the Government has not already made provision to celebrate the building and opening of the Panama Canal. The Congress has already appropriated more than $1,100,000, in one form and another, to celebrate this great engineering enterprise. We appropriated $500,000 for the Government exhibit at San Francisco, and that great exposition itself is in celebration of the construction of the Panama Canal. We have appropriated $500 for the erection of a Government building on the exposition grounds in San Francisco.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Does not the gentleman know that that building has not been started and will not be ready?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We have appropriated for it. I am speaking of the action of Congress.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. It should not be charged up to the exposition, because it will not be ready, and the plans have never been prepared.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It should be charged up to the Panama Canal. The last naval appropriation bill authorized the naval officers to expend $104,000 in entertaining naval officers who may visit the exposition.

This is a great enterprise, but there have been other great events in American history. In 1876 we celebrated the birth of this Republic, 100 years after it occurred. In 1893 we celebrated the discovery of America, 400 years after the event. In 1904 we celebrated the Louisiana Purchase, 100 years afterwards. We have had many smaller expositions. In Buffalo, in 1901, occurred the Pan American Exposition, which was intended primarily to cultivate the South American countries and to encourage trade with them.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. At these celebrations were the House and Senate represented; and if so, were the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate ignored in the selection of committees to represent these legislative bodies?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can not answer the gentleman's question, because I am talking on another point.

But, Mr. Speaker, in all these great celebrations, which marked important events in our history, it was not considered necessary that the Government should specially entertain distinguished guests as a part of the celebration. This is a gracious thing to do. It is a magnanimous thing to do. But, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the expenses of the Government are running far beyond the revenues, I want to say that this is not an opportune time to assume a luxury that we have never had in connection with any other exposition held on this continent. The conferees on the part of the House are quite content to abide the instructions of the House, but with no facts before us we brought the matter back for you to discuss and to indicate your wishes. Whatever your wishes may be, the conferees on the part of the House will endeavor to enact them into law. I have expressed my individual views that at this time, in the condition of the Treasury, we ought not to make this appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. In the deficiency bill last year we appropriated $25,000 for the purpose of having three men—if I remember correctly, probably two civilians and an Army officer—represent this Government at the opening of the Panama Canal. Can the gentleman tell us what is being done by those gentlemen toward representing the United States Government at the opening of the canal?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can not.

Mr. BARTLETT. This is in addition to that $25,000 to have somebody else represent us?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That $25,000 is in addition to the $1,104,000 about which I have already told the House.

Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I offer as a substitute for the motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] a motion to strike out the figures "$50,000" and to insert "$25,000."

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, is that amendment in order?

The SPEAKER. The way it stands now——

Mr. COX. I offer this as a substitute.

The SPEAKER. Here is the parliamentary situation: The gentleman from New York offered an amendment and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] offered an amendment to that amendment. That is as far as the amendment business goes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman make a point of order on it?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I raised the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to leave it to the House to vote on it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Of course, it would be subject to a point of order as being an amendment in the third degree; but if a point of order is not made, we can vote upon it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the point of order, I want to make a parliamentary inquiry. What would be the effect if the Cox amendment should be adopted, it being offered as a substitute for the whole; would not that prevent a vote on the Fitzgerald amendment?

Mr. MANN. No; the gentleman from Indiana offers it as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Cox amendment be again reported.

The SPEAKER. It is to substitute $25,000 instead of $50,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The parliamentary effect of this would be that if the Cox substitute is offered for the whole thing——

Mr. MANN. It is not; it is only offered as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will not make the point of order, although it is subject to a point of order unless offered as a substitute for the whole proposition.

The SPEAKER. Of course it is; but everybody seems to want to vote on it, and, without regarding it as a precedent, the Chair will put the question. The question is, first, on the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] to insert "$25,000" instead of "$50,000."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PAGE of North Carolina) there 60 ayes and 63 noes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point that no quorum is present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty Members present—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 156, answered "present" 1, not voting 127, as follows:

Mr. STOUT with Mr. PROUTY.

Mr. DOOLING with Mr. SHREVE.

Mr. MAHER with Mr. WALLIN.

Mr. WILLIAMS with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. BRUCKNER with Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH.

Mr. BROWN of New York with Mr. WINSLOW.

Mr. CANTOR with Mr. WOODS.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the Page amendment for $50,000.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the Fitzgerald amendment, as amended by the Page amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment of Mr. MADDEN: Add, after the word "tolls," on page 31, line 17, the following:

"Provided, That the Speaker of the House shall appoint eight Members of the House, of whom he shall be one, and the President of the Senate shall appoint four Members of the Senate, of whom he shall be one, to represent the Congress at such celebration."

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is subject to the point of order. We are providing for a celebration of the opening of the Panama Canal. We have appropriated money to carry out that celebration. We have given authority to the President of the United States to invite certain guests. We are dealing with the subject of the celebration, and I maintain that this is just as much a part of the terms under which the celebration is to be provided for as the original matter contained in the Senate amendment. It is not contrary to the provisions of the Senate amendment. I maintain that it is germane, that it deals with the subject matter, that it does not add to the appropriation, and therefore is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, on the motion of the gentleman from New York this amendment of the Senate was concurred in by the House, and that closes the matter. I am sure that this is an original amendment and is not admissible at this time.

Mr. AUSTIN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. AUSTIN. To discuss the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, every time the American Congress has recognized a national or historical event in the United States the Speaker of this House has been clothed with authority to appoint a committee to represent the House. This is the first attempt in the history of this country to ignore and slight the Presiding Officer of the House of Representatives. Why should he be slighted? He deserves the confidence, the respect, and the admiration of every man in this House. [Applause.] I appeal to my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] to uphold the dignity of the House of Representatives; I appeal to him not to put this slight upon the great man who presides over this House impartially, honestly, and fairly. [Applause.] It is a reflection upon the House of Representatives. It is virtually an insult to every Member of this organization to ask us, for the first time in the history of the American Congress, to ignore the Speaker of the House of Representatives. There ought not to be a dissenting voice on either side of this Chamber to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and I appeal to the patriotism, to the fairness, to the justice of the gentleman from North Carolina to reconsider this matter and let us have a vote upon it.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up amendment numbered 41.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, amendment No. 41, after line 4, insert the following:
"For emergency clerical services, to be expended by the Secretary of State in his discretion, $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. What disposition did the House take as to concurring or further insisting on amendment numbered 35?

The SPEAKER. Why, the House adopted a motion to concur with an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 41.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 41.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman any information concerning this amendment which he can impart to the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Nothing more than the statement made by the Secretary of State to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate; but since the bill went to conference I have received a letter from the Secretary that is substantially the same as the statement made to the Senate committee—that the reason for asking for the increase in the clerical force of the Department of State is that the European war has increased the activities of that department, the Secretary of State informs the committee, very greatly. In the regular estimates which were submitted, and upon which the bill was made up, the Secretary of State asked for $30,000 worth of additional clerical assistants. I objected to providing for a number of permanent clerks when it was stated that the reason for employing them was an emergency.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman, without detaining him too long, did the Secretary in the statement or letter give any information as to the details as to how this would be used?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. None whatever.

Mr. MANN. Is it just a lump-sum appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; it is a lump-sum appropriation. Now, if I may proceed with the statement I was making, in formulating the bill in the first instance we were not willing to include the additional clerks as permanent employees of the State Department on account of an emergency, and we explained to the Secretary of State that if we made this appropriation by providing additional persons on the statutory roll there never would be a time when we could dispense with their services, and if the conditions in the State Department were such as to make additional help imperative, then that appropriation should specifically state that it was for emergency assistants and should be made in a lump sum, although I am ordinarily very much opposed to that form of appropriating money.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The bill went to the Senate without the House having provided anything, and the Senate reported the bill with an amendment giving the Secretary of State a lump sum of $30,000 to employ help on account of this emergency, but upon the floor of the Senate the amount was increased to $75,000.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman if there was any estimate submitted for this purpose?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The estimates upon which we based the bill called for additional clerks in the State Department at a compensation aggregating $30,000.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We declined to make a permanent increase of that force.

Mr. MANN. I understand that was the gentleman's statement; but has any estimate been submitted by the Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Treasury as to this $75,000 item?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No, sir. I have no information as to any detailed estimates except the estimates calling for $30,000 for assistance.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know of any reason or any disability which would prevent the Secretary of State from requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit an estimate for this amount of money if he needed it——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not.

Mr. MANN (continuing). According to the provision of the law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think that estimates should be submitted in the regular way, and, as a matter of fact, they were estimated for to the extent of $30,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. CAMPBELL. For the purpose of asking the gentleman from South Carolina a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many clerks have been appointed or employed for which this appropriation is made?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This appropriation has not been made.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, for which it is asked?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know the number of people who would be employed. I do not know what their compensation would be. The Senate has sent us an amendment that provides for a lump-sum appropriation of $75,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. For additional clerks in the State Department?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That ought to take care of some "deserving Democrats."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The House conferees will probably——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois, inasmuch as he asked a question awhile ago as to whether or not any estimates were originally submitted for emergency clerical service in the Department of State, that I will read from the original estimates submitted, as follows:

For emergency clerical services, to be expended by the Secretary in his discretion, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. CALDER. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CALDER. I understand these men are to be appointed without recourse to the civil service?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know. The gentleman can construe the language of the Senate amendment as well as I can. But so far as I am concerned, I am willing that whatever force we may provide for in the bill shall come from the civil-service register. I call for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] to further insist on amendment No. 44.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 63: Strike out "$2,165,000" and insert "$2,480,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments Nos. 63, 64, and 65, all on page 59 and relating to the same subject, be considered together.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the three amendments named, on the same subject, be considered at the same time. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What are the amendments, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report all three of the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 63, on page 59 of the bill: Strike out "$2,165,000" and insert "$2,480,000."

Amendment No. 64, on page 59 of the bill: Line 24, strike out "$2,600,000" and insert "$2,200,000": Provided, That whenever——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object to considering them together. There is no use of reporting them all.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 63.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist on the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 63.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 64, on page 59 of the bill: Strike out "$2,600,000" and insert "$2,200,000" and the following proviso:

"Provided, That whenever any cask or package of distilled spirits containing 5 wine gallons or more is dumped by a rectifier for rectification or filled and received from rectification for sale, shipment, or delivery the same shall be gauged, marked, branded, and stamped by a United States gauger; but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury provide that the gauging, marking, stamping, and branding of such packages so dumped for rectification or received therefrom be done by the rectifier instead of by a United States gauger."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. This involves quite a change from the existing law with reference to the gauging of spirits. I know nothing about it myself, except what the Secretary of the Treasury has reported. Has the gentleman made any investigation, or has anyone who is familiar with the gauging of spirits made any investigation? Does the gentleman from South Carolina know?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have no information except that which comes from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. His letter I have read.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Under existing conditions the whisky is gauged twice—first when it is taken out of the bonded warehouse, and then again when it goes through the rectifying process. The Government collects its revenue upon the basis of the last gauging, and the Secretary of the Treasury and those having charge of this work state that the two gaugings are not necessary, and that by dispensing with one of them they can save $400,000 a year.

Mr. MANN. Will some learned gentleman tell me—I hate to confess my ignorance—what is meant by these words:

Whenever any cask or package of distilled spirits containing 5 wine gallons or more is dumped by a rectifier for rectification—

And so forth? I could not find an explanation of it in any of the books.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am not acquainted with the technique of whisky in any of its forms. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] no doubt can give the gentleman the information he desires.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that rectified whisky is made with alcohol as the basis. Whenever alcohol goes into the establishment of a producer of rectified goods it is dumped into a tank. That dumping is a trade expression. In other words, it is emptied into a tank, and there the proof of it is reduced by the addition of water. It is not rectified until it is brought down to the proof to which the rectifier desires to bring it.

Mr. MANN. Of course "rectifying" in relation to spirits has not the same meaning as rectifying a wrong. In other words, it is making a mixed liquor by additions to the pure stuff. What are the ingredients that are added?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Well, not only water is added to it, but beading oil is added, and coloring is added, and sometimes straight whisky is added to it to give it an aroma.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina, to further insist on the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment numbered 64.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that amendment numbered 65 be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 65, on page 61 of the bill: After line 4 insert the following: "Restricting the sale of opium, etc.: For expenses to enforce the provisions of the act approved December 17, 1914, entitled 'An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or cocoa leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes,' including the employment of agents, deputy collectors, inspectors, chemists, assistant chemists, clerks, and messengers in the field and in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia, to be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and for the purchase of such supplies, equipment, mechanical devices, and other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, including not to exceed $4 per diem in lieu of subsistence to employees while officially engaged away from their designated posts of duty, being for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, $292,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 65.

Mr. GILLETT rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GILLETT. Can the gentleman tell me why the language is used that these various officers and clerks shall be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know. It was a Senate amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Perhaps the gentleman can tell me. It occurred to me that very possibly the Senate, with a desire conforming to the well-known views of the Secretary of State "to find places for deserving Democrats," might have intended by this language to except those places from the civil service. I do not believe it does it myself, but it struck me as curious, and I could see no reason for it at all unless it was the hope that by this ingenious and doubtful language they might possibly accomplish what they did not dare to state openly. I wondered whether the gentleman could state whether that suspicion was unfair to the distinguished body at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman from South Carolina knows no more about the intention of the Senators than does the gentleman from Massachusetts. I do know that there are lots of deserving Democrats that ought to have places. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think this would accomplish that. I thought I would suggest it to the gentleman, so that in the conference he might bear it in mind.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House grant the conference asked for by the Senate. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, and Mr. CALDER.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] calls up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement accompanying it be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, how long will it take? Is there any controversy over the report?

Mr. HAY. I do not think there is any controversy. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. STOUT] has stated that he desires to move to concur in one of the Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. It is not a complete report?

Mr. HAY. No; it is not. That is the reason I want to get it back to the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the House conferees.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1462).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20347) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 21, 28, 29, 30, 38, 50, 60, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 102, 103, and 105.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 15, 16, 25, 27, 31, 33, 34, 37, 39, 40, 43, 44, 45, 46, 48, 51, 54, 56, 59, 62, 64, 69, 89, 90, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 104, 106, 108, 109, and 111, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$7,800,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$18,200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,050,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following: "Three clerks, at $2,000 each per annum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$312,690"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That hereafter the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer to the active list of the Army any officer under 50 years of age and with rank not above that of captain who may have been transferred heretofore or who may be transferred hereafter for physical disability from the active to the retired list of the Army by the action of any retiring board: Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the place on the active list which he would have had if he had not been retired, and shall be carried as an additional number in the grade to which he may be transferred or at any time thereafter promoted: Provided further, That such officer shall stand a satisfactory medical and professional examination for promotion as now provided for by law: Provided further, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, within two years of the approval of this act, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer to the active list of the Army any officer who may have been transferred heretofore for physical disability from the active to the retired list of the Army by the action of any retiring board: Provided, That such officer shall be transferred to the place on the active list which he would have had if he had not been retired, and shall be carried as an additional number in the grade to which he may be transferred or at any time thereafter promoted: Provided further, That such officer shall stand a satisfactory medical and professional examination for promotion as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That any officer who may have already been transferred from the retired list to the active list shall receive the benefits of this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$640,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the word stricken out by said amendment and thereafter insert a comma, so that it will read: "veterinarians, members of the Nurse Corps"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 15, line 25, of the bill strike out the comma after the amount "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$65,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the permanent captains of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry now holding commissions as such in said regiment shall be recommissioned as captains of Infantry of the United States Army, to take rank on the lineal list of officers of Infantry immediately after the junior officers of the same grade whose total commissioned service equals or exceeds theirs: Provided further, That those officers of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, recommissioned as captains of Infantry, whose total commissioned service is less than that of any officer of Infantry of the next lower grade, shall not advance on the lineal list of captains of Infantry, nor on the relative list of officers of the United States Army, until such time as there no longer remains on the lineal list of officers of Infantry any officer of the next lower grade of equal or greater length of total commissioned service and shall take rank in the grade of captain on the lineal list of officers of Infantry and on the relative list of officers of the United States Army immediately after the juniors in rank of such officers of Infantry of equal or greater total commissioned service: Provided, That for the purpose of this act total commissioned service shall include commissioned service in the Regular Army, in the Volunteers, in the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry, and in the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry, and that the commissioned service of those officers of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry who were officers of the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry, shall be counted as continuous and uninterrupted between the 29th day of June, 1908, and the 31st day of December, 1908"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,943,384.64"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,661,360"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,872,163"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,067,558"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,626,518"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$1,656,254"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$165,000" and strike out the rest of the amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: " : Provided further, That on and after October 1, 1915, no officer or enlisted man of the Army shall, except upon his own request, be required to serve in a single tour of duty for more than two years in the Philippine Islands, nor more than three years in the Panama Canal Zone, except in case of insurrection or of actual or threatened hostilities: Provided further, That the foregoing provision shall not apply to the organization known as the Philippine Scouts"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,693,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$45,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That hereafter when one bureau of the War or Navy Departments procures by purchase or manufacture stores or material of any kind or performs any service for another bureau of such departments the funds of the bureau or department for which the stores or material are to be procured or the service performed may be placed subject to the requisition of the bureau or department making the procurement or performing the service for direct expenditure by it: Provided, That when the stores being procured are for current issue during the year stores of equal value may be issued from stock on hand in place of any of those aforesaid"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 19, 58, 70, 107, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, and 117 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

STATEMENT.

The bill as it passed the House carried the sum of $101,055,788.23; as it passed the Senate it carried $103,362,587.87, an increase of $2,306,799.64 over the House bill. In conference the Senate has receded from its amendments to the extent of $1,249,281.60, leaving the sum now carried in the bill $102,113,306.27; there are, however, in disagreement items amounting to $426,000.

The following amendments of the Senate which were agreed to by the House were unimportant, being either the correction of typographical errors, the transfer of words, or the changing of punctuation, viz, amendments 5, 15, 16, 40, 43, 44, 46, 47, 48, 51, 54, 56, 59, 62, 69, 89, 93, 94, 98, 99, 100, and 101.

The following amendments of the Senate which were agreed to by the House involved items of appropriation, viz, amendments 4, 31, 37, and 95.

The following amendments of the Senate were agreed to by the House with amendments, and pertain to items of appropriation: Amendments 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 35, 41, 49, 53, 55, 57, 61, 63, 65, 66, 68, and 92.

Amendment of the Senate numbered 1 included the words "drafting and messenger service," and the House receded.

Senate amendment 2 provides for the instruction of students and attachés without increasing the appropriation, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 3 provided for mileage and actual expenses, etc., for military attachés, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment of the Senate No. 4 provides for the expenses of officers now observing conditions of the war in Europe, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 6 provides for the pay of a translator in the service schools from the appropriation for those schools and decreases the appropriation by $1,200, and the House recedes.

Senate amendment 20: The Senate recedes as to the amount, and the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate fixing the status of Maj. Gen. Murray during the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Amendments of the Senate 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 deal with clerks in the office of the Chief of Staff. The effect of the amendments as agreed to is to increase the salary of the chief clerk $150 per annum, and to increase the salaries of three clerks $200 each per annum, and to do away with three clerks at $1,800 each per annum and one laborer at $480 per annum.

Senate amendment 36, as amended and agreed to by the conferees, provides a way by which officers on the retired list who have been placed there by reason of physical disability can be restored to the active list by the President, if they stand a physical and mental examination and are not above the age of 50 years nor above the rank of captain; a temporary clause in the amendment provides for the restoration of certain other retired officers within two years from the passage of this act.

Amendment 64 provides for covering the loss or damage to the baggage of officers, and the House recedes.

Amendment 52 struck out the House provision for the relief of the permanent captains of the Porto Rico Regiment. The Senate receded with an amendment, which gave the relief but provided against possible injustice to others.

Amendment 67 of the Senate provided for term of the tour of duty of men and officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps and civil-service employees in the Philippine and Hawaiian Islands. This was so amended as to apply only to the officers and enlisted men of the Army.

Amendment 90 provided for the sale of medical stores to the Red Cross, and the House receded.

Amendment 110 of the Senate was so amended by the conferees as to apply only to the War and Navy Departments.

Amendment 111 provides for the promotion of four brigadier generals on the retired list, who were veterans of the Civil War, to the rank of major general, three of these—Gens. Graham, Anderson, and Kent—to receive no additional pay, and Gen. Baldwin to receive the pay of his rank on the retired list.

The Senate recedes from the following amendments involving increase in items of appropriation, viz, amendments 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 20, 21, 38, 50, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 102.

The Senate recedes from its amendments numbered 103 and 105, which amendments provided for the purchase of Field Artillery material and Field Artillery ammunition, and the bill now provides for the manufacture of these things by the Government.

The following amendments are in disagreement: 19, 58, 70, 107, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, and 117.

Amendment 19 provides for the purchase of a site and the erection of buildings at San Diego, Cal., for an aviation school, and appropriates $400,000 for the purpose.

Amendment 58 transfers from the Board of Commissioners of the Soldiers' Home to the Secretary of War the direction and control of military prisons.

Amendment 70 provides for the purchase of 280 acres of land, at $26,000, for an addition to the reservation at Fort Missoula, Mont.

Amendment 107 strikes out the House provision with regard to the Taylor system at Government plants.

Amendments 112 to 117, inclusive, relate to the Articles of War and embody a new military code.

JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. GARDNER. What have the conferees done about the appropriation for aeroplanes?

Mr. HAY. The provision remains as it passed the House.

Mr. GARDNER. The Senate receded from its amendment?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

The motion of Mr. HAY was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19.

Mr. MANN. What amendments are still in disagreement?

Mr. HAY. I will ask the Clerk to read the numbers.

The CLERK. Amendments numbered 19, 58, 70, 107, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, and 117.

Mr. MANN. Is there any contest over these? Will another motion be made on any of these?

Mr. HAY. I think the gentleman from Montana [Mr. STOUT] intends to move to concur in Senate amendment No. 70.

Mr. MANN. Then, why does not the gentleman ask unanimous consent to further insist on the disagreement to all the others?

Mr. HAY. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to all the remaining Senate amendments except No. 70.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to all the amendments not included in the report just agreed to except No. 70.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Now, I ask the Clerk to read amendment No. 70, and I move to further insist. I do not know whether the gentleman from Montana is going to move to concur or not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 70 provides for the purchase of 280 acres of land, at $26,000, for an addition to the reservation at Missoula, Mont.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment and not the statement.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 40, line 11, strike out "$45,000" and insert "$71,000," with the following proviso:

"Provided, That $26,000 thereof may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, for the purchase of a certain tract of land, comprising 280 acres, more or less, being a part of what is known as the Macauley ranch and adjoining the United States Army post at Fort Missoula, in the State of Montana, providing the title to said realty be in fee simple and be approved by the Secretary of War."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I do not see the gentleman from Montana [Mr. STOUT] here. He may have been misled by me, as I told him I did not expect to bring up this report this evening. I do not think we can afford to delay the bill, and therefore I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Especially as we are sure never to agree to the amendment.

Mr. HAY. I hope not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 70.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chair appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HAY, Mr. DENT, and Mr. KAHN.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman put the other request first?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that following the completion of the general deficiency bill it shall be in order to consider private pension bills, with the understanding that they shall not interfere with conference reports or sending bills to conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, pending his first request, asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the consideration of the general deficiency bill Senate pension bills shall be in order, not to interfere with conference reports or sending bills to conference.

Mr. CARLIN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask what will that displace; what will be the regular order for to-morrow?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the last six days of the session motions to suspend the rules are in order.

Mr. CARLIN. Will this unanimous consent, if given, displace suspensions?

Mr. MANN. Probably the only effect of this will be that Senate pension bills will be passed without opposition. Otherwise gentlemen would be recognized to move to suspend the rules, and we would have 40 minutes' additional debate on each bill.

Mr. CARLIN. I have no desire to delay pension bills.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My purpose in making the request is this: To-day is the day under the rule for the consideration of pension bills. I had expected, if no conference reports had intervened, to move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union rise at 5 o'clock so that these pension bills might be considered. I am trying to get the House to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow, and gentlemen want this request made at the same time, otherwise they will object to meeting at 11 o'clock.

Mr. CARLIN. How long will it take to dispose of the pension bills?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not think it will take more than an hour.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think it will take more than two hours to dispose of the general deficiency bill.

Mr. MANN. I doubt if there will be many suspensions to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that at the close of the consideration of the general deficiency bill it shall be in order to consider Senate pensions bill, not to interfere with conference reports or sending bills to conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York also asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EASTERN DIVISION OF SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 20814, an act to place Candler, Jenkins, and Evans Counties, Ga., in the eastern division of the southern district of Georgia with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia calls up the bill H. R. 20814, and the Clerk will report the bill with Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. EDWARDS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a telegram from the chamber of commerce from Waycross, Ga., on the bill H. R. 20814, just agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman think that that is any more important than the request to extend remarks in the RECORD by printing certain papers which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] asked to insert this morning?

Mr. EDWARDS. I would like to say in reply that my objection was not to the gentleman from Massachusetts extending his remarks, but the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] was not here and there was no opportunity to answer those charges. Later I did not object because I wanted to find out where the gentleman from Georgia was.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Massachusetts afterwards got unanimous consent to insert the papers in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object to the request of the gentleman from Georgia, but the gentleman from Georgia objected this morning with much temper.

Mr. EDWARDS. I was trying to defend the fair name of my State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the telegram:

WAYCROSS, GA., February 25, 1915.

Hon. CHARLES G. EDWARDS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Spare no effort to have new judgeship bill passed in some shape. Will be hailed with universal acclaim by this great section of Georgia. Relief is much needed and this the great opportunity. See other Congressmen in its behalf.

V. L. STANTON,
President Chamber of Commerce Waycross and Ware County.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on bills now pending on the oil situation in California.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the rural-credits amendment pending to the appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural credits.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman want to insert a speech that he has prepared, or a lot of literature that he has compiled?

Mr. FERRIS. I want to insert some remarks that I am going to prepare.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the gentleman's inserting a speech, but I do not want him to insert a book.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the relation of the United States Government to the District of Columbia on the conference report on the District of Columbia bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if it were anyone else, would the gentleman from Missouri object, knowing what he is going to insert?

Mr. BORLAND. No; it is original matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAUGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural credits.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an article by Mr. Borchardt, of the District bar, on the need of a United States official gazette.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how long is the article?

Mr. POWERS. I expect it will cover 4,000 words. It is a well-prepared article and is a labor of love on the part of Mr. Borchardt. Great Britain has one, as have France and Germany.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am against the whole thing, and I object.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12303. An act to amend section 3246 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 5 of the act of March 1, 1879;

H. R. 20688. An act to place Barrow County, Ga., in the eastern division of the northern district of Georgia; and

H. R. 17842. An act for the relief of George Richardson.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 6631. An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poison in the consular districts of the United States in China.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 16305. An act to reimburse Henry Weaver, postmaster at Delmar, Ala., for money and stamps stolen from said post office at Delmar, and repaid by him to the Post Office Department;

H. R. 17424. An act for the relief of Hunton Allen; and

H. R. 17842. An act for the relief of George Richardson.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 27, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication of the Acting Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation presented by the Alaskan Engineering Commission, to pay Old Bettis, a native Indian of Nenana, Alaska, for loss of cabin and contents by fire set by parties of the Alaskan Engineering Commission during the summer of 1914 (H. Doc. No. 1619), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON JOINT RESOLUTION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 398) to refund under certain conditions, and for the year 1914, a portion of the offers in compromise for failure to make return required under the act of October 3, 1913, said offers in compromise having been covered into the Treasury, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1456), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 27, 1915.

(Legislative day of Friday, February 19, 1915.)

The Senate reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

THE SEAMEN'S BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, at the conclusion of the session last night I had the floor upon the conference report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me a moment?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a brief article from the Journal of Commerce on wages upon American ships.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Journal of Commerce, Feb. 25, 1915.]

COST OF RUNNING AMERICAN SHIPS.

NEW YORK, February 24, 1915.

Editor of the JOURNAL OF COMMERCE AND COMMERCIAL BULLETIN.

SIR: Assuming that the replies received by Senator GALLINGER to the inquiries he sent to representatives of companies that have placed foreign-built vessels under American registry are correct—and I have no reason to doubt their accuracy—it would seem that when the American flag is raised on a vessel the officers and crew demand American rates of pay and American conditions of living. This imposes an expense upon the American owners that seriously handicaps them in meeting the competition of vessels under foreign flags, run much more cheaply than vessels under the American flag are run. In the matter of crew pay the difference runs from over 40 to almost 90 per cent higher on the American than on the foreign vessel, and the extra cost of victualing still further increases the difference. This amounts to several thousand dollars in a year. The difference may be just enough to spell loss instead of profit in running a vessel under the American flag in competition with a vessel under a foreign flag.

There is a well-defined "demand" for an American merchant marine in the United States. The figures you quote Senator GALLINGER as having obtained from American owners of foreign-built vessels recently placed under the American flag show that for the American investor to meet that demand, by furnishing vessels under the American flag for foreign trade, he imposes upon himself an extra expense, not voluntarily, but compulsorily, once the flag is raised, that he is helpless to avoid. He seriously, if not fatally, handicaps himself in competition with ships under foreign flags. He found, running his ship under foreign flags, that he could run it as cheaply as his foreign competitor could run his ship, and he has, seemingly at least, been content to earn the profits that his foreign competitors earn, else how shall we explain American ownership of upward of 2,000,000—some say 2,500,000—gross tons of vessels under foreign flags? But he has met the American demand for an American merchant marine at a quite unnecessary additional expense to himself to the extent that he personally is able to meet that demand. We will say that he gets in return for this added expense the protection of the American flag, which is of substantial value during this European war, and he also gets the benefit of the Government insurance of his vessel against war risks, also of some pecuniary value.

Will you say what benefit an American owner of a vessel under a foreign flag could count upon in peace time for the extra expense he would incur in placing his vessel under the American flag to operate in foreign trade? I know of none. No discrimination is made in favor of a vessel under our flag, nor is any discrimination made in favor of the goods carried in an American vessel. Our laws treat the foreign vessel in competition with the American vessel in the carriage of our imports and exports in every respect precisely alike. Why, then, in peace time, should an American handicap himself with the extra expense of running a vessel under the American flag that he can avoid by running her under a foreign flag? Why should he risk loss of profit and final bankruptcy in running his vessel under the American flag at a greater expense than his competitor is under in running his foreign vessel under a foreign flag, in a carrying trade that is competitive?

If there is an advantage to the Government or to the Nation through its possession of an American merchant marine—an American merchant marine privately owned—and American registry places the American owner at a disadvantage he can not overcome in running his ships in competition with foreign ships in foreign trade, should not the Government or the Nation, because of the advantage it has in having an American merchant marine, indemnify the American owners of it for the pecuniary losses they suffer thereby?

If the American investors in ships under foreign flags are able to show, as Senator GALLINGER has been shown, that it costs several thousands of dollars more annually to run a vessel under the American flag than it costs to run the same vessel under a foreign flag, why should an American investor or American investors lose several thousand dollars annually on each ship? And, demonstrating this handicap of higher expense under the American flag, are not the American investors in ships under the American flag justified in asking the beneficiary of an American merchant marine to make good the losses they suffer because they carry the American flag? Is it just to denounce such American investors as "Treasury looters" or "subsidy grabbers," or as persons seeking to rob the National Treasury, to hold them up to public scorn and opprobrium? Of course, relief for them lies in placing their vessels under foreign flags, where they are not subject to the annual losses of several thousand dollars—a relief, manifestly, that many of them had found before this war, a relief obviously that they will find again when the war is over.

Is it not plain that if the United States, the Nation, needs an American merchant marine, the United States, the Nation, should pay for it, at least to the extent that an American merchant marine is more expensive to those who operate it than a foreign merchant marine?

Respectfully, yours,

A. R. SMITH,
Editor of the Marine News.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I call attention to that phase of the proposed bill which pertains to our relations with foreign countries. In the first place, the bill provides for abolition of arrests for desertion. That, I believe, every Member of the Senate will approve. It is contrary to the genius of our institutions to compel any man to submit to an involuntary servitude. Under the treaties which are now in existence, our police officials can be called upon to arrest in ports of the United States deserters from foreign ships in our ports. That provision of the treaties is not enforced to any considerable extent and the abrogation of that part of our agreements with foreign nations would cause very little friction, because they recognize that the sentiment of our people is against it. We abolished, in 1898, the arrest of domestic seamen for desertion, and the results have not been serious. It was maintained by some shipowners at the time that the abolition of arrest would cause desertion and make it impossible to conduct the business of shipping without serious embarrassments. It was claimed that the discipline maintained on board ships should be similar to that in the Army, and that it was necessary, when a ship sailed for a voyage to and on return from any port, that there must be assurance that the crew would be available for the round trip. But in practice no serious results have accrued. We now ask in this bill—and it seems to me there should be no opposition to it—that abolition of arrest for desertion from foreign ships should be placed on the same footing with the law pertaining to domestic shipping.

There are, however, other provisions in the bill of a most serious nature. It is proposed, in the first place, that even though advance wages have been paid in a foreign port to sailors on foreign ships they can, nevertheless, on giving notice, again collect one-half their wages in any domestic port. The manifest object of this is to furnish a certain amount of money so that they may have means to make desertion effective. In order to carry out this provision, that half the wages must be paid, our courts have been opened for the enforcement of the claim.

There is no country in the world, so far as I know, that has any such provision in its maritime law. It is a violation of the law of contract. It is a palpable violation of international comity. It is impossible that it should be submitted to without very serious protest and the most vigorous opposition. Already protests have been filed by foreign countries against this provision. In order to make this law effective it would be necessary to abrogate commercial treaties with the leading nations of the earth. The abrogation of one clause such as I read yesterday, showing that our treaty with Germany gives special control in the matter of wages, would reopen the whole subject and would, no doubt, induce every one of the countries to ask concessions from us and perhaps would invoke retaliation in other matters. We can not afford, Mr. President, to take such a step.

Again, the statute in regard to allotment is very ambiguous. In conversation with the author of the bill in the House of Representatives he expressed doubt as to what it meant. I am inclined to think it is intended to refer only to allotments made in ports of the United States, but the provision as I read it last night is open to the construction that it pertains to allotments made in foreign countries. These allotments are almost universal. They are made in practically every country with which we have commercial relations.

Besides the difficulties in regard to allotments, the bill contains some very unusual provisions pertaining to able seamen. Every one of the large number of seamen on boats entering our ports must file an affidavit and show that he has had three years' experience at sea or other qualifications, and must take out his certificate in this country. At first sight that might seem an easy matter, but it pertains to 250,000 seamen who annually visit our ports, many of whom come as often as once a month. It is utterly impracticable without a serious enlargement of our force of officials, who must carry out this provision of the law.

Still further in regard to the language test, it must be enforced by collectors of customs. It is even more impracticable and difficult to enforce than the certification of seamen. It would be necessary for every collector of customs to have a staff of men understanding a great variety of languages—French, German, Spanish, Swedish, Norwegian, Italian, Slavic, Chinese, Japanese, and probably others.

To this is still further added a provision that a reputable citizen may up to six hours before the hour of sailing file a statement that he does not believe the provision in regard to language and to the number of able seamen has been complied with, and the collector must make a muster of the crew. Fancy what would happen with a boat carrying thousands of passengers, a crew of five or six hundred members, if the collector were compelled within six hours of departure to make a muster of the crew and determine whether in all departments the crew understood the language of their officers and whether all its members who were required to be able seamen had the necessary certificates. It is beyond question that it will be utterly impossible to enforce this provision in any six hours. It would mean that ocean mail steamers, which are liable to heavy penalties if they do not sail on schedule time, must be delayed for many hours after the date of sailing. The passengers would be detained, and it would probably be necessary for the boat to postpone its departure until long after its schedule time. These regulations are absolutely unprecedented. Sailings could not occur regularly. They impose upon the masters and owners hardships which are unendurable.

It is not alone consideration of our duties to foreign countries which affords objections to this bill. Its enactment is bound to cause a great increase in freight and passenger rates in our own country, and this will apply with especial force to the cotton ports of the South. If a boat enters any port from Norfolk to Galveston or Aransas Pass it must be subject to all these regulations: First, the requirement that any master or officer on board who violates the law in regard to the payment of half wages is subject to be arrested and taken from his vessel. Again, there must be a certificate filed that the law in regard to allotment has been complied with. Still further, there may be a muster of the crew to show that there is the requisite number of able seamen and that the language test has been complied with. This will delay the sailing of boats and it will greatly increase the expense. There is nothing which causes greater demoralization than uncertainty. The immediate result of such regulations when carried into effect would be higher rates upon our grain, our cotton, and all our products which are shipped abroad, and, in addition to that, a great uncertainty in obtaining vessels at the time when they are needed and interference with the date of sailing.

Can we afford to pass such a law as this? Can we afford to create this degree of tension and irritation with all the nations of the earth which send their ships to our country?

Mr. President, if there is one thing more than any other on which I wish to speak before I leave this Senate it is upon the necessity of a greater degree of cooperation with foreign Governments. Year by year our relations with even the remotest countries are becoming closer. Possibly in the Senate the flippant remark has been made, "What have we to do with abroad?" Mr. President, we have everything to do with abroad. We are of the great community of nations; we should assume a leading position among nations of the earth, and the first characteristic of that position should be that our course be one of justice and our disposition be one of good will, of comity, and of cooperation.

I am perfectly aware how popular with many audiences is that appeal to a false spirit of patriotism which would exaggerate our own rights and cause us to disregard the rights and the feelings of the many nations with which we have to do. It is not a dream that the time is coming when there will be more perfect harmony among the civilized nations, and in that great movement which is sure to come we should take the lead. Every statute, every treaty rejected or adopted in which we look out only for ourselves and have no regard for other people, is a backward step in the progress of the United States and in the progress of the world. We should assume a new position in this regard. We should assume a position under which we seek to pay regard to the interests and the rights and the feelings of every nation on the globe, be it great or small.

I do not share the alarmist note which was uttered yesterday in regard to the outlook for the future. A great war is being waged, in which the interests of Americans will be involved, in which there will be injury done to our ships, in which, in view of the awful conflict that is raging, the assertion of rights by the warring nations may offend us and cause us to feel that our rights and interests are disregarded.

Mr. President, we should stand firmly by what is right. We should have a lively appreciation of the fact that nations with which we have been at peace are engaged in a life and death struggle. I do not altogether approve this supreme regard which seems to prevail in our country for the exploitation of our trade at this time. In the future a condition is sure to arise in which mere relationship of commerce will be eclipsed by other considerations. The great question will be whether the nations of the earth are to continue their colossal armaments or whether they are to live in unarmed peace.

I trust that after this war is over there will be such a realization of the horrors of war that men of all nations will combine in the resolves that it is time to do away with this barbarous method of settlement of international difficulties and that a great court, like our own supreme tribunal, will decide questions at issue between nations as well as between individuals. No time quite so inopportune as the present could be chosen to pass such a bill as this. If they were at peace, if they could give consideration to their commercial relations and to their treaties without the embarrassment of war, there might possibly be some justification for such provisions and regulations as are contained in this bill, but at this time, when the whole thought of everyone of these leading countries is occupied with war, with their supreme attempts for victory, we should not add to their difficulties and complications by adopting regulations which are offensive and burdensome to them. Some in speaking of this controversy lightly say that an untoward incident or an unfriendly act toward a foreign nation will mean war. I do not believe that. I do not believe that there is any strong probability that this Nation, which is now at peace and is enjoying the blessings of peace during a fearful war, can possibly be brought into the conflict, but there is a consideration quite as serious as that. What are to be our relations with these countries now and in the future? Are they to be those of friendship and good will or are we, as it were, to thrust a sword into their vitals, which will cause ill will and retaliation when the war has come to an end? This conflict must cease at some time, and there should be no roots of bitterness planted in this day when they are engaged in this struggle which may survive when they are at peace. It will surely mean retaliation; it will surely mean ill will. So, I say, even if the regulations proposed in this bill had justification, this is not the time to adopt them.

I say again that we should not in this peremptory manner by a statute abrogate treaties, but prior to that and preliminary to that we should engage in negotiations with the various countries with which the treaties are made.

I have no doubt that the provision in regard to desertion could readily be removed from every treaty in which they are contained. I should favor insisting upon that. It is said the fugitive-slave law, about the year 1792, was based on this statute for the arrest of deserters from boats. It has remained in our treaties and on our statute books for 120 years. Let it be removed, but let everything be done with decorum and in an orderly manner.

A conference met at London, largely on our initiative, which sought to go over this whole field. It provided for greater security to life at sea by more efficient hull construction; it provided a more perfect system for the detection of derelicts, for pointing out the existence of ice, for arranging lanes over which vessels should take their course; it provided elaborate regulations as to lifeboat service, and I want to say that the part of this bill incorporating these provisions meets with my hearty approval. These provisions were agreed upon by the leading maritime nations after two months or more of consideration. It was carried into the House bill, which differed very materially from the Senate bill. The Senate bill made the test of skill in handling lifeboats the qualification of all able seamen. A man may have served three years and yet know nothing about the handling of lifeboats. I regard that provision as an extremely vicious one. The House provision, following the London conference, adopted instead the requirements for certificated lifeboat men—a very great improvement. In this regard the bill is in accordance, as I have said, with the London conference, and it should be adopted.

We, however, left out everything in regard to hull construction; everything in regard to derelicts and ice, and also the other provisions relating to fire on board ships, a fruitful source of disaster. Those are not in this bill. In any well-framed legislation each and all of them should have a part, but this bill is framed in accordance with the desires of one side of this controversy for their advantage, rather than for the advantage of the general public.

It was not without learning some lessons, Mr. President, that the Committee on Commerce listened for two months to the impracticable and sometimes selfish arguments on both sides of this controversy and then sought to frame a bill which should be, as far as it could be, framed in accordance with the wishes of those who were interested in shipping and those who were employed, but with the polar star, to which we looked—the interests of the public.

That bill passed with some amendments here just before the 4th of March, 1913. It had first passed the other House. As I said last night, it was then amended in the Senate and made a much better measure, one which safeguarded the interests of the public in a higher degree and omitted some of the very drastic and impracticable provisions of the House bill. Unfortunately it was presented to the President only an hour before the expiration of his term, and he refused to approve it.

In a matter of this kind we can not listen wholly to either side. It is our duty as Senators to regard the interest of the whole Nation and all its people, and to have due regard for our treaty engagements. This conference report disregards those treaty engagements; and, if I may appeal to the commercial interests of the country, it is fraught with danger to our producers. It means higher rates on freight; it means that a higher price will have to be paid on cotton and on grain; it means more irregular sailings and poorer facilities for the shipment of our exports.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does it not also mean the creation of such a condition of affairs for the average ship that, at least for quite a length of time, we will probably have very few foreign vessels come into our ports at all, which will seriously involve danger to our exports?

Mr. BURTON. I would not express it as strongly as that. It would surely lessen the number of ships coming here; it would surely increase rates; it would surely embarrass regularity and promptness in the shipment of our exports; and, right in line with what is suggested by the Senator from Georgia, it would give a very great advantage to other countries which are in competition with us.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. Just one moment; allow me to finish answering the question of the Senator from Georgia.

In view of these regulations with which compliance is so difficult, any tramp steamer, instead of going to Galveston or Savannah or New Orleans, would prefer to go to Buenos Aires or Montevideo or some other outlying port of the world. In the rates of freight there would be a lower schedule for those countries than here, and foreign ships would, as far as possible, avoid our ports and use the ports of other countries. That is inevitable.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield to me for a moment for a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I would ask, would it not tend to safeguard the lives of passengers and seamen? Money is a consideration that it is well to look after; but there is something greater and higher than the visible stipends of profit. I believe it would be possible, from conversations I have had with men engaged in seafaring life, to better safeguard the lives of seamen and passengers. I believe the history of the Titanic—and from that great disaster this bill originally sprang—should teach us a lesson that we should not lose sight of. I believe the very features of this bill are an advance in the direction of safety at sea, and I believe that the life and the welfare of the poor seaman who stands before the mast should be considered quite as well as the matter of dollars and cents that is raised by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I will not admit for a moment that I am any less solicitous for the safety of human life than is the Senator from New Jersey or any other Senator.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not want to believe that the Senator is, but the whole thought advanced by the Senator——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I raise the point of order that the Senator from New Jersey is not asking a question, but is making a speech, and the Senator——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, Mr. President, I do not think I made a speech, but asked a question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am raising a point of order, and I am entitled to the floor. The Senator from New Jersey can not by loud expression deter me from making my point of order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, great God! I have no such thought.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I raise the point of order that the Senator from Ohio can not yield to the Senator from New Jersey except for a question.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is what I was doing; I did not make a speech at all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Ohio can not yield except for a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The ruling of the Chair has been that if the Senator holding the floor yields for other than a question, he yields the floor, and may be taken off the floor if the Chair chooses to recognize any other Senator claiming recognition.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I feel that I was entirely within that provision. I rose to ask a question, and I feel that what I said was simply a question.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from New Jersey to be propounding a question.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have no desire to prolong the controversy, but I can not condone or pardon the vengeance with which the Senator from Georgia attacks me.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I think I can not yield further, although I desire to accommodate the Senator from New Jersey.

So far as the humanitarian provisions of this bill are concerned, so far as the provisions for lifeboats are concerned, I cordially approve the general provisions of the bill. In some cases the provisions are altogether too drastic; but I do not wish anyone to rise here and by the remotest implication assert that I am disregarding the safety of human life. The trouble is that is not the object of this bill. The object of this bill is to give control to a certain element over the shipping of this country, so that they can tie it up in any port at any time.

You have added to the provisions which are attractive and salutary other provisions which complicate our relations with every maritime nation in the world, which violate treaties, which violate the comity among nations, and which will impose untold hardships on our own people.

Do not let the excuse be made that this bill is alone for the safety of human life. The provisions for the safety of human life were contained in the bill passed in March, 1913; they are in the London conference. If that were the object of the bill, why do we not have inserted here that which is most important in the saving of life—provision for better hull construction and security against fire. Everyone who has studied this subject realizes that in a majority of instances when disasters occur at sea lifeboats are inefficient to save life. If there is a wind of 20 miles an hour or more, it is almost impossible to handle them. The one rock, I may say, on which we should rest should be the ability of a ship to float and its protection against fire. There is nothing on that subject in this bill. There is nothing to prevent collision with icebergs; there is nothing in regard to reports from one ship to another on the great ocean lanes concerning obstacles likely to be met; but there is a great deal about the payment of half wages in violation of contracts; there is a great deal about understanding the language, and there is a great deal about qualifications of seamen.

There is a provision here which makes it possible to tie up the fastest and most important ship on an affidavit filed with the collector of customs, under which it is made his duty to stop the sailing of any ship until he can take a muster. Mr. President, you know how impossible it would be, with a crew of 600 or more, to go through such a muster as that without finding some unintentional or trivial violation of the law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator call attention to the paragraph in the bill which covers the provision to which he is referring?

Mr. BURTON. Does the Senator mean the provision in regard to muster?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. It is on page 18 of the comparative print, third column, and is as follows:

> The collector of customs may, upon his own motion, and shall, upon the sworn information of any reputable citizen of the United States setting forth that this section is not being complied with, cause a muster of the crew of any vessel to be made to determine the fact; and no clearance shall be given to any vessel failing to comply with the provisions of this section: Provided, That the collector of customs shall not be required to cause such muster of the crew to be made unless said sworn information has been filed with him for at least six hours before the vessel departs, or is scheduled to depart.

Now, fancy what would happen if an ocean liner could be held up under such a provision as that. Fancy what would happen at one of your southern ports, where I think the hardship would be greatest. Suppose a boat comes there for a cargo, and a part of the crew or the whole crew desert. It would be very difficult to obtain sailors in their place. It would be easier at the great centers of shipping like Boston and New York and Philadelphia, but at such a port as Galveston or Savannah or Mobile it would be exceedingly difficult. Perhaps the master would say, "I can not sail at all." But suppose he did get together a crew. Suppose there was a bitter contest between the master and the seamen. Some reputable citizen could file such an affidavit as this and keep the boat in that port indefinitely. Before a boat sails from the other side they are going to take into account all those possibilities. The owners, in the first place, would hesitate about sending the boats at all; and if they were sent, the rates of freight would be very much higher in view of the possibilities which might arise under such a regulation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, does not that paragraph apply to all the limitations as to age, length of service, and so on?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; as to language and the number of able seamen as well.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Suppose a boat with a crew without the qualifications required in this provision came, say, into the port of Jacksonville, Fla. It could not go out unless it was able to equip itself with a crew from that point with the specified length of service.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly not. Let me call attention to one other difference in the law which may not assume the greatest importance, but should, nevertheless, be considered. The age of an able seaman in Norway is 18 years. Under this statute it is 19 years. Suppose a boat which sails from Norway with a number of able seamen under their law, but two or three of them that are only 18 years old. That boat could be held indefinitely in the port of Jacksonville before it would be allowed to sail.

There is nothing like it, I repeat, in the laws of any nation on the globe. We are occupying a position which puts us out of harmony with the whole shipping business as it now exists in all nations; and we are seeking to enforce regulations so drastic, so impracticable, so difficult of execution, that in the long run, notwithstanding the offense given to foreign countries, we will be the chief sufferers. We can not pass such a statute and enforce such a system without bringing the chief disadvantage upon the United States.

Mr. President, I have advanced these arguments before, and it almost seems to me vain to reiterate them now. I have sometimes thought it might be best to have this bill passed and see how it would result, under the principle that the best way to defeat a vicious law is to enforce it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. I hope that if it does pass there may be such forbearance on the part of those who could take advantage of its provisions, such fairness, I may say, that the havoc which lurks in it will not arise. So far as the increase of wages of seamen is concerned, I am entirely in sympathy with its features.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BURTON. In just a minute. I am in sympathy with its provisions for shorter hours, for more opportunity for rest in port, for better quarters, and better food, and hospital provision. My sympathies in this matter are with the seamen, who lead a life of unusual hardship, and who, to tell the truth, have been very badly treated by their employers on some occasions. But let us not deliver a smashing blow to the whole shipping world just to accomplish these things, which can be readily accomplished without legislation so radical, so extreme, and so obnoxious to all the other maritime nations of the world.

This same hardship rests upon our domestic shipping. We have listened here for hours to arguments in regard to the decadence of American shipping. There is not a man here who does not wish to see the American flag restored to the sea. That is a long story. The main reason why we do not have a mercantile marine is that we are placed in competition with the whole world. Wages are lower on foreign ships. The cost of construction is less. There is an infinite opportunity in this country for investment on land. The tastes and preferences of our people are not for the sea. The great majority of our seamen are foreigners. It is an almost inevitable condition.

You can build a tariff wall around this country; you can give subventions to our manufacturers and producers and enable them to shut out the products of other countries; but man stops at the shore. When we enter into competition on the ocean, presumably those who will furnish the service cheapest must prevail. That, in a word, is the history of the decadence of American shipping. But we have recently passed laws allowing American registry to foreign-built ships. There exists a great emergency, in which a large part of the shipping of the world has been withdrawn from use for a variety of reasons. Now is the encouraging time, if ever, to build an American marine.

I do not wish to interject into this discussion my views about the ship-purchase bill, but I think it not only discourages but almost destroys private initiative. I know of many instances of private investors who wish to buy ships, who are ambitious to own boats that would fly the American flag and enter into the ports of foreign countries, who have been deterred from doing anything by the pendency of the ship-purchase bill. Now we come along with this statute, which discourages them all, which makes it uncertain whether the owner of a boat can control the boat and utilize it in such manner as will make it a useful agency of transportation.

Why, Mr. President, the friction caused by giving preference to American shipping through the Panama Canal is but a bagatelle in comparison with the irritation that this act will cause among foreign nations. That was a controversy with but one nation. This has the seeds of controversy, of irritation and retaliation, with every nation that owns ships which enter our ports. I can not believe that the Senate, if it would thoroughly consider this subject, would pass such a bill as this. Pass every part of it which gives shorter hours, which improves the condition of seamen; but the main purpose of this bill is to enable them to break contracts and demand half their wages; to provide regulations in regard to the manning of boats which other nations do not provide; to establish a principle which has been always denied, that we can control the internal management of foreign ships. It is the denial of a principle for which we ourselves stood as strenuously as any nation so long as we had a mercantile marine. It is the assertion of a principle which, if ever our mercantile marine gains a new position, will come home to plague us by retaliatory measures on the part of other nations.

Why, do you believe that if we owned a mercantile marine we would wish the German authorities at Hamburg or Bremen to go on board and inquire regarding the contracts for wages and to say, "True; you made a contract in the United States, but we will invalidate that contract and make another of our own"? Would we submit to that? The chief sufferer will not be the foreign shipowner. He will take care of himself. If he can not go to the ports of the United States and receive there the treatment accorded everywhere else in the world, he will go to some other port. He will carry the wheat of Argentina to the markets of Europe at cheaper rates than he carries the wheat of the United States. He will be averse to affording shipping for carrying the cotton of the United States to the markets of England and of Germany and of France. I do not, however, wish to make this appeal to the selfishness of the American people. The substance of my argument I make rather to the fact that these nations who have protested against this bill are now engaged in a colossal struggle, and that we are taking advantage of that position by imposing upon them regulations which just so surely as peace will come—as it must come—will provoke retaliation, discrimination against American ports, and discrimination against American trade. Still more, it is not fair to them when they are engaged in such a contest as this to pass a law which abrogates treaties.

I would say a few words in regard to the condition on the Great Lakes, but I am not going to allow my interest in that locality to affect my argument on this occasion. I want to stand for national faith, for good will with foreign countries, and I want to deal with the features of this bill which have an international aspect. The boats at Cleveland, Chicago, Buffalo, and Detroit—at least the passenger boats—will no doubt be very much hampered. Some of them may be put out of business. The excursion business certainly will be very much handicapped; but that is not the main argument against this bill. Under the measure as it passed the Senate a boat line from Detroit to Cleveland and Buffalo, which for 50 years has not lost the life of a passenger, would be compelled to carry 30 or 50 extra men on every trip to comply with an impractical regulation regarding lifeboats. Under this bill, as it passed the Senate—and I call special attention to that—a boat which is rarely more than 10 miles from land, which passes other ships every few minutes, would be subjected to regulations the same as those which govern a boat sailing 6,000 miles on the ocean, on a course where it would hardly meet a single ship for the whole journey. That not only was wrong, but it was an absurdity. The conferees saw that; and I want to say to the conferees who are here that I do not think any possible criticism can be visited upon them. They had two bills, one of the House and one of the Senate, both very drastic in their nature. Their function was to harmonize those two bills and make a measure derived from them. They had a difficult task, and their work is rather to be commended than criticized. It is true that they did what I think is rather irregular in such a connection. They struck out provisions that were in both bills, and they put in provisions that were in neither. They had a power greater than that of the President of the United States. The President would be extremely glad if, when this measure comes to him, he could say, "I approve the general tenor of this bill, but here is a paragraph that I will strike out, and here in another place is a paragraph that I will insert." I am not sure but that our legislation would be better if the President had that right, but he does not have it. Just as he has the right only to approve a bill or to veto it in its entirety, so a conference committee has only the right to take the bills before it and harmonize them. The committee did more than that. But I am inclined to think they very much improved the bill.

However, if you establish that precedent here, that a conference committee has the right of appeal and of initiative, we are liable to have propositions inserted in bills that neither the Senate nor the House has approved. I question whether the Senate desires to approve such a precedent as that. As I understand it, legislation rests with the Senate and with the House, and there are very well-defined limitations upon the powers of conference committees under the rules of parliamentary law. I know of no statute or any parliamentary law which allows a conference committee to frame the laws which Congress is to enact.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Ohio, who had long experience in the House, is aware of the fact that in the other branch of Congress a conference report can be absolutely thrown aside if a violation such as the Senator has called attention to has been committed.

Mr. BURTON. I so understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think we ought to have that rule here.

Mr. BURTON. I do not know what the rule has been in the Senate, but it certainly ought to be the rule that the Senate and the House after full discussion should pass bills which are to be enacted into law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. The conference committee does not possess any power of original legislation, but is confined, is it not, to an adjustment of the differences between the two Houses? It has not power to originate independent sections or introduce a new subject matter.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly not. You can see what might happen to us at the close of a session. A bill might pass both Houses with some differences and go to a conference committee, and that conference committee might put in some entirely new matter of the most objectionable nature. It would come here in the closing hours of Congress containing provisions of which nobody knew except the conference committee.

Mr. STERLING. I think it is true, so far as I can gather the fact in the limited experience I have had here, that conferees have incorporated in a bill something entirely new, not considered by either House; but, on the other hand, I have known instances where objection was made, and made with considerable emphasis, because the conferees had injected into the bill matters not considered by either House. One familiar example of that is the Alaskan coal-land-leasing bill, where matters finally were stricken out in the Senate because they had been incorporated in the bill by a conference and had not been passed upon by either House.

Mr. BURTON. I take it the Senator from South Dakota approved that action. No matter how salutary it is, the question is not whether it is better or worse, but whether it is regular and in accordance with orderly parliamentary procedure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he noticed what occurred only a few days ago. The conferees on the District of Columbia appropriation bill attached some language to an amendment in the bill providing that the board of education should hereafter be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia instead of the court. When it reached the other body a point of order was made against it, and it went out of the bill as a consequence.

Mr. BURTON. I have no doubt that is correct.

Mr. President, I believe I have said all I care to say at this time. I regret that there is not a larger attendance of Senators, because I can hardly believe those who survey this acute situation would believe in passing a law which so affects the cherished rights of nations at war at a time when they are disabled. If full consideration were given to it, I can hardly believe they would pass this measure with its drastic regulations. Put anything in the bill in regard to health or the better condition of seamen and there will be no vote against it. Insert the provision taken from the London conference in regard to life saving, which was very carefully worked out by that body, assert the rights of the American seamen and protect them, but do not pass a statute which runs counter to our own national policy in our relations with foreign nations. Do not pass a statute impossible of execution.

Does anybody believe that our officials are going to receive the affidavits and the applications of 250,000 seamen who come to the ports of this country again and again during a year? Does anybody believe that our collectors of customs or any of their employees are such experts that they can tell whether all the members of a crew understand the language of the officers?

It has been intimated—I believe it was stated in the House, though the exact words that I am using may not have been employed—that this law would be enforced with a soft pedal. They will find that it can not be enforced with our present system.

I have noticed this very singular fact, that several of the great shipping lines are perfectly willing that it should pass. I do not care to mention the name of the line, but it is one of the leading companies in the world which did not oppose this measure or say a word against any of its provisions. Why? Because they knew that they were strong, and that in the general confusion and demoralization which would be caused by this bill they would have the advantage, while the small shipowner or the owner of a single ship would be subjected to hardships likely to drive his boat out of business and keep him away from American ports. Do not let anyone lay the flattering unction to his soul that he is curbing monopoly or that he is restraining any Shipping Trust by passing this bill. Like any radical step of this kind, the strong can endure; they will raise their rates; they will have a callous disregard of the interests of American exporters; but the smaller man who goes to the numerous ports of the South and the minor ports of the North will find it impossible to carry on business under such a law as this.

I make my final appeal that when the world is full of the din of war and the nations that are affected are powerless to protest it is unfair for us to enforce such regulations, which are unprecedented in the history of shipping and which are an offense and most obnoxious to all the nations, and which if we look at it even from the most sordid standpoint will lead surely to retaliation in the future days of European peace.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I realize that the time of this session is passing very rapidly and the close is near at hand, and a great deal of legislation remains yet to be enacted—important legislation. I am not going to trespass very long upon the time of the Senate this morning in the discussion of this question, although I regard it as one of the most important measures that have engaged the attention of this body since I became a member of it.

It is peculiar in this: The prominent feature, the chief purpose, is to ameliorate the condition of that class of American citizens whose inhuman treatment, to my mind, has become a national disgrace. We have given some attention to the welfare and well-being of every other class of American laborers except the toilers of the sea. Not only is this legislation designed to improve the condition of the sailor, but when this conference report shall be adopted and this bill shall be enacted into law the effect will be felt throughout the civilized world.

Mr. President, if the Sermon on the Mount were delivered to this body to-day for the first time, from the veracious lips of Moral Completeness, some Senator in this Chamber would rise in his place and object to the application to governmental questions of the eternal principles enunciated in that sacred message, lest the order of things might be disturbed and business disorganized on account of the abnormal conditions and the sensitive state of the public mind produced by war. If the Decalogue had been discovered on yesterday and transferred from Sinai's mysterious height to the Presiding Officer of this body with the direction that he lay it before the Senate for consideration, I have not the slightest doubt but that some voice in this Chamber would be heard very promptly protesting against the interference with established condition, the vested right of big business, the control and management of all the affairs of men that a few might grow rich at the sacrifice of the many, by the enactment into law of the principles embodied in that incomparable message from the loving lips of Compassionate Omniscience.

Mr. President, I am afraid the rule of gold has taken the place of the golden rule in matters of legislation. The love of money is eating out the hearts of the American business man and its malign influence is being felt in the legislative councils of the Nation.

How long, O Lord, how long,
Shall creeds conceal Thy human side,
And Christ the God is crowned in song
While Christ the man is crucified?

Now, let us see what this conference report contains, what this bill is designed to bring about. First, safety at sea, the protection of the life and providing comfort for the people who patronize ships, and make the business profitable to operate them. Second, to protect from the exactions of conscienceless greed the men who do the work, who operate the ships, and give them larger liberty and make the vocation more attractive to self-respecting men; to elevate the standard of manhood, and in that way improve the efficiency of the men and, consequently, benefit the entire world.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] speaks of demoralizing trade, interfering with the orderly management of our international affairs. Mr. President, if the passage of this bill should bring about a temporary disorganization or a temporary disturbance in business, the result to be accomplished is well worth whatever difficulties may result therefrom or sacrifice that business may suffer.

I can not for the life of me see how any man who loves his fellow man can object to securing to the sailor those rights, those privileges, those immunities which are provided in this bill. It is only doing scant justice to a long-suffering class of patient toilers. It can not hurt business. No business is entitled to prosper that has to prosper upon injustice and wrong.

I sometimes think that the cheapest thing in the world, in the estimation of the average man bent upon making money, is a human being. No more thought is given to him, no more care is taken of him than the piece of inanimate machinery he operates. He is a thing to be used, abused, and cast aside when no longer needed by the man or corporation in whose service he is employed. I submit that no business has a right to prosper upon conditions and upon a system of that character, and that is all there is in this bill that any Senator can object to.

I sincerely hope, Mr. President, that the conference report may be promptly adopted and that this bill may become a law. The Democratic Party is committed to it. It has the approval of the Chief Executive. It is demanded by our platform. It was one of the accomplishments of the Democratic Party mentioned in our campaign book that we went to the country on last fall and asked for indorsement at the hands of the American voters, and now to fail to adopt this conference report, to fail to redeem that promise would be an act of faithlessness on the part of the Democratic administration which I trust will not be charged against us when the inventory is made up of the accomplishments of this administration. Common honesty demands that this legislation be enacted.

Mr. VARDAMAN subsequently said:

I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in my remarks an extract from the platform and some other extracts from the campaign book giving something that the President had to say on this question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS, DECEMBER 2, 1913.

An international congress for the discussion of all questions that affect safetly at sea is now sitting in London at the suggestion of our own Government. So soon as the conclusions of that congress can be learned and considered we ought to address ourselves, among other things, to the prompt alleviation of the very unsafe, unjust, and burdensome conditions which now surround the employment of sailors and render it extremely difficult to obtain the services of spirited and competent men such as every ship needs if it is to be safely handled and brought to port.

BALTIMORE PLATFORM, 1912—DEMOCRATIC.

We urge upon Congress the speedy enactment of laws for the greater security of life and property at sea, and favor the repeal of all laws and the abrogation of so much of our treaties with other nations as provide for the arrest and imprisonment of seamen charged with desertion and with violation of their contract of service. Such laws and treaties are un-American and violate the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution of the United States.

DEMOCRATIC TEXTBOOK, 1914.

Safety at sea: The action of the administration in sending representatives to the international congress in London has resulted in conclusions indorsed by the governments of the world for the better protection and safety of passengers and property at sea.

Lesson of Titanic disaster heeded: By the passage in both Houses of the Alexander-La Follette seamen's bill the working conditions of American sailors in the merchant service are improved and precautions are taken to avoid, in so far as American legislation can, such fearful loss of life as accompanied the Titanic disaster. All ships coming under United States jurisdiction are required to carry adequate life-saving equipment and to maintain crews of sufficient number and experience to meet any emergency. At this writing the bill is in conference, but is certain of becoming a completed achievement before Congress adjourns.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. All in favor say "aye." [A pause.] Those opposed. [A pause.] The ayes have it, and the conference report is agreed to.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I intend to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration and passage of two bridge bills, which I shall now report. It is necessary that they shall be passed by the Senate to-day in order to get them through the other House before the session ends. I trust there will be no objection to their consideration.

From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate bill 7646, to authorize Parkersburg-Ohio Bridge Co., a corporation created and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Ohio River from the city of Parkersburg, State of West Virginia, to the town of Belpre, State of Ohio, and I submit a report (No. 1043) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I understand this is a bridge bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have none, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED RIVER BRIDGE, TEXAS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 7723) authorizing the Texarkana Board of Trade to construct a bridge across the Red River between Fulton, Ark., and Index, Tex., and I submit a report (No. 1044) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 11, after the date "1906," to strike out the words "and also the act of December 17, 1872, as amended by the act of February 14, 1883," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Texarkana Board of Trade, of Texarkana, Ark.-Tex., be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto over the Red River between Fulton, Ark., and Index, Tex., for railroad and other traffic, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator from Oregon yield for a moment, that I may ask unanimous consent for the consideration and passage of a small bill on the calendar?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If I may be permitted to first have the Military Academy bill taken up, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon to proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 21328) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

LAND GRANT TO GRAND JUNCTION, COLO.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 19116 to grant certain lands to the city of Grand Junction, Colo., for the protection of its water supply. It involves a title to a section of land which is very necessary for the purpose indicated in the title of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that we shall have plenty of time to pass this bill—which is a House bill—before adjournment.

Mr. THOMAS. That is possible; but Representative TAYLOR, of my State, is very much interested in the matter, and has asked me to take advantage of the first opportunity to secure its passage, if possible. It will take but a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not object to the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I am glad the Senator does not object to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not object to this bill; but I think we ought to have the calendar taken up and considered some evening.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN UNDER RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill immediately following on the calendar the one just passed, being the bill (H. R. 19061) for the relief of homestead entrymen under the reclamation projects of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. It is a very short bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think the Senator ought to ask that, in view of the crowded condition of the calendar.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall not insist on the request. I am much obliged to Senators for allowing me to bring up and have passed the one bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20814) to place Candler, Jenkins, and Evans Counties, Ga., in the eastern division of the southern district of Georgia.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20347) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, further insists upon its disagreements to the amendments of the Senate to the bill still in disagreement, agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HAY, Mr. DENT, and Mr. KAHN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 16 and 20 to the bill and agrees to the same; recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35 to the bill and agrees to the same with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 18, 21, 41, 63, 64, and 65, agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, and Mr. CALDER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2642) authorizing the President to reinstate Joseph Eliot Austin as an ensign in the United States Navy.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 6631. An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poison in the consular districts of the United States in China;

H. R. 20688. An act to place Barrow County, Ga., in the eastern division of the northern district of Georgia; and

H. R. 12303. An act to amend section 3246 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 5 of the act of March 1, 1879.

SENATOR TILLMAN TO THE PEOPLE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, without reading, the farewell address of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] addressed to his constituents. It is not an official communication, but it relates more particularly to the events that constitute the history of his public life in the service in the State of South Carolina. It is an account somewhat of the labors and achievements of his public life. It is worth being perpetuated. It is part of the life story of a man who, in my opinion, will be considered, when history comes to deal finally and fairly with him, as one of the remarkable men of his time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier, Aug. 15, 1914.]

TILLMAN TO THE PEOPLE—THANKS VOTERS FOR HONORS CONFERRED—GOOD-BY TO OFFICE—SENIOR SENATOR SAYS HE WILL NOT BE CANDIDATE AFTER TERM EXPIRES—SERVED PEOPLE 28 YEARS—SAYS HE DOES NOT BELIEVE GOV. BLEASE SHOULD BE SENT TO THE SENATE.

The News and Courier received last night the following communication from Senator TILLMAN for publication this morning:

"To my constituents: Fellow citizens, I was 67 years old the 11th day of August, and felt like sending all of you a greeting. I served you as governor 4 years and have been your Senator in Washington 20 years. When my term expires, March 4, 1919, if I live so long, I shall have held the highest offices in your gift for 28 years. An old man desires to thank you for your generous support all this long while. May he not, without boasting, but in sincerity and earnestness, say that he has done his very best for both South Carolina and the Nation? Constituted as I am, I could not have done otherwise.

"One of the first lessons my good and noble mother taught me was, 'If a thing is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well.' While I was governor, therefore, I was governor, as everyone in South Carolina knows, not of the Tillmanites alone, but of all the people. And since I have been Senator I have tried to be as good a Senator as there was in Washington.

HIS FIRST SPEECH.

"Since August, 1885, when I made my first speech at Bennettsville, I have been one of the most prominent figures, and since 1890 the most powerful political factor in South Carolina. From the very start I won the love and confidence of a large majority of my fellow citizens, and it was because of the genuineness of my Democracy that I was so hated and bitterly opposed. Many good men believed I was an office-seeking demagogue, and could find no language strong enough to express their hatred and contempt.

"Two years ago, when a test of my patriotism came, I demonstrated to those who had always opposed me that I was not the selfish politician they had judged me to be. No one knew better than I the risk I ran in making the Ferguson letter public. I knew it jeopardized my reelection, but I would rather have been beaten than to have remained silent.

"My frankness, straightforward openness of speech, and honesty of purpose—I despise hypocrisy above all other vices—have thrown me into many a briar patch, which a more cautious man would have avoided; but I never have lost sight of the ideals which opened before me at Bennettsville, and the welfare and uplift of the masses have always been the guiding star which led me on. Your faith, fellow citizens, sustained me, and I greet you in this farewell address with affection and confidence.

GOOD-BY TO OFFICE.

"This is my good-by to public office. I shall not be a candidate again. Two years ago, when I asked you to reelect me that I might 'die in harness,' I fully expected to die very soon; but the good Lord has seen fit to prolong my life and by teaching me to live rationally has enabled me to regain some degree of health. Should I live to the end of my term, I shall be 72 years of age, and I now serve notice upon all who are interested that I shall not try to succeed myself. If I live until March 4, 1919, I shall die out of and not in harness, as I have always wanted to do. But I shall not worry. Death awaits us all and is inevitable. I go the way of all my fathers, and I try to say in all humility and sincerity, 'Lord, Thy will be done.'

"For four years at least many men in South Carolina have had their eyes on the seat I hold. This is natural because of my illness and the expectation of my early death. There has been some discussion of it in the newspapers, which was to be expected. How curious, fantastic, and cruel is human selfishness! But, withal, how natural a thing it is. It is the only element of human nature which is universal. I do not complain at it, and I earnestly hope that the man who is chosen will serve the people as faithfully as I have. You may find a man with more ability than I possess; you can not find one who will bring to his work greater earnestness and honesty of purpose.

PRESENT SITUATION.

"Under the peculiar circumstances which now exist in South Carolina I hope I may be permitted to say a few words about the present situation in our State without being misunderstood. It gives me deep concern. I am mortified and disappointed that the primary system has failed to develop in the people sufficient political intelligence to enable them to escape the wiles and tricks of demagogues. Audacity and aptitude in repartee, coupled with a striking personality, have made the people an easy prey. Instead of candidates being compelled to discuss public questions and policies, they have been allowed to make appeals to prejudice, and the people, blinded by these arts, have followed and made heroes of men who are wholly unworthy. I have been, and still am, accused of inaugurating this method of campaigning. I challenge the production of a single speech of mine wherein I departed from the discussion of public issues or indulged in unparliamentary language until forced to do so by unfair opponents. The more bitter enemies of the reform movement began the vituperation and abuse that have marked South Carolina politics since 1890. They answered argument with invective; they greeted truth with showers of mud and filth, and they, not I, must bear the responsibility.

CONFIDENCE IN PEOPLE.

"Two years ago I lamented this same thing, and said I doubted whether I had not made a mistake in giving the people the ballot and teaching them how to use it. But I was impatient. I here reaffirm my confidence in the people—all the people collectively. I believe that the judgment of the whole people, rich and poor, educated and ignorant, high and low, is the surest and truest guide to political action. Their mistakes will be fewer and will be more quickly mended than will the errors of any one class, be it ever so enlightened. I believe this so religiously that I would rather have a bad governor or a bad Senator, elected by all the people than a good one elected by any one class. The whole people correct their blunders; the rule of a class tends to the growth and perpetuation of abuses. I have implicit faith that all the people of South Carolina are going to stamp out Bleaseism sooner or later. The strongest Bleaseites will be leaders as soon as they are convinced that they have made a mistake. If I did not believe this, I would lose all faith in self-government.

JEFFERSON'S SLOGAN.

"Jefferson's slogan was 'Teach the people and trust the people.' To this principle all patriots will give credence, and all Democrats will gladly obey. When the demagogue comes along and blinds the people by the glamor of his arts and instills deviltry and poison into their minds, good citizens must not despair, but redouble their efforts; for the truth is more powerful than falsehood and must prevail in the long run.

"Again I reaffirm my faith in the people. The battle between privilege and freedom, between equality and favoritism, is world-wide and ages old. It has brought the cataclysm which we are witnessing in Europe to-day. The people of that continent are struggling to free themselves from the shackles of autocracy and the Divine right of kings. It is a battle between autocracy and republicanism. The contest in South Carolina in 1890 was to overthrow an aristocracy which had come down to us from colonial days. It was a real revolution in which families were divided, father against son and brother against brother, showing that principle, and principle alone, moved the people to action. It was my high privilege to lead that movement which emancipated South Carolinians from the thralldom of an oligarchy which had ruled the State for a century. That was my greatest work. I taught South Carolinians to know their rights and how to obtain those rights, and the State has made marvelous progress in every way. In education, in some of its aspects, it has progressed more than any of its sister States; for we have Clemson and Winthrop as model schools, the best of their kind, and, if there were less selfishness and more public spirit throughout the State, the lamentable ignorance now existing in some sections would soon disappear.

SCHOOLS DEFICIENT.

"But our common schools in many counties are sadly deficient, and must be improved. A democracy without adequate means for educating its citizens is bound to be shipwrecked. We can not afford to let our children grow up like weeds. If we do they will choke out all that is best in our people and destroy our civilization. The State, in self-defense, if for no other reason, will, somehow or other, have to see to it that all the white children get at least the rudiments of an education. Compulsory education is a big question, and I have never heretofore favored it, but acute diseases demand drastic remedies, and if a statute can be framed that will force the white children into school, and at the same time give the blacks only the kind of training—manual and industrial—which they can assimilate, it ought to be done. Effective compulsory education will require a great deal of money, but if we are not willing to spend money for our children, God pity us. Whether a general law or local option by counties is the best is a matter of opinion, and will have to be thrashed out by the legislature.

SCORES BLEASEISM.

"The people two years ago elected a man governor who has 'run amuck,' as it were, and displayed so little realization of his high opportunities that it makes me sad and angry to be told, as I have been more than once, that Tillmanism is the direct cause of Bleaseism. All thoughtful and intelligent men know that this is only a half truth, and half truths are the worst sort of lies. Tillmanism taught the people that they could whip and destroy special privilege with the ballot. That was a good thing, all must admit. Now, is Tillmanism to blame because the people have used that same ballot with which to elevate a demagogue? Yes; I taught the people that they had a right to govern South Carolina, and I proclaim the principle anew. They have the right, even if they elect a hundred Bleases. 'Teach the people and trust the people.' We will in the end have better government at the hands of all the people than we would have if any one class ruled. The people will rectify their blunders as soon as they become convinced of their error.

"It would be just as true to say that Democracy causes socialism and anarchy as it would be to say that Tillmanism caused Bleaseism. Had my health continued good, I would have taught the people the folly of Bleaseism two years ago, pointed out the difference and stemmed the tide which Jones found himself unable to cope with. I would have guided the Tillmanites, while Blease only misled them, and all for the gratification of his own selfish ambition.

LAW AND ORDER.

"A large per cent of those who two years ago, and now, are yelling 'law and order,' want a law and order of their own contriving. They are not ready to admit that, politically speaking, all white South Carolinians are equal. They think themselves divinely commissioned to rule everybody else. The plain people saw this resurrected Bourbonism, and thinking it was the old 'ring' come to life again, took Bleaseism in preference to it. Blease himself is a mere symptom. The real fever is bigotry, political intolerance, and social injustice. I call upon you, my fellow citizens, you who know and claim to want better and higher things, to broaden your sympathies. Stop prating about 'law and order' and treat your next-door neighbor with a little more consideration. Though he live in a hovel, though he never saw the inside of a schoolroom, he has the same right to vote for Blease that you have to vote against him, and you have no more right to question his motive than he has to question yours. Learn that great truth, act on it to the uttermost, and my word for it, Bleaseism will disappear—and it will not disappear until you do learn it.

UNJUST DEALINGS.

"Then, too, a certain class of our fellow citizens have been very unjust and unreasonable in their dealing with the poorer people, treating them with no consideration whatever and showing a contempt for them. This is especially true with regard to those who work in the cotton mills. In many communities the people in the mill villages are a class apart, looked down upon and not associated with. No wonder socialism and the Industrial Workers of the World are getting a foothold among these citizens of ours. It did not used to be so, and it ought not to be so now. We all should address ourselves to the remedy, lest it bring dire disaster upon the Commonwealth; for in the last analysis white unity is absolutely essential for the continuation of good government. If these poor men are trampled under foot as they have been taught to believe they are, they will join with any movement, no matter how radical and ultra, to get revenge. This is the secret of Blease's hold on the people who work in the cotton mills; and we ought by every means in our power to break that hold by showing the same respect and consideration for them that we do for others.

"As for those who compare Blease the man with TILLMAN the man, they are, for want of a better term, what I may call maliciously ignorant. Blease and TILLMAN were both popular idols, and there the resemblance ends. I had definite ends to accomplish; my personal character and private life were always above reproach; and my integrity was never questioned, save by a few slanderers, who merely asserted without attempting to prove. There is just enough similarity between Blease and TILLMAN to deceive the ignorant and furnish a bludgeon to the vicious.

BLEASE AND SENATE.

"I do not believe Gov. Blease ought to be sent to the United States Senate, because he is not worthy of the honor; and so believing, I would be recreant to the people of South Carolina if I did not say so. But do not misunderstand me. I speak as a citizen merely, and I fully realize and recognize the right of the humblest man in South Carolina to differ with me. A man's ballot is his own, and no other man has a right to criticize him for using it as he chooses.

"I am too near the grave to tell any lies, if I ever had the inclination to do so. I have nothing to gain by speaking; hence there is no selfishness in my utterance. But I love the State which has honored me so long and in such a marked degree, and I want to warn our people—those who will listen to me—before it is too late. I repeat, there is absolutely no element of personality or selfishness in it. All my ambitions—and I thank God they were all worthy ones—have been satisfied. Therefore I speak, as it were, from a mountain top, looking down upon my fellows who in a few years must follow me to the grave. If ever a man's utterances ought to cause the people to pause and listen and think, mine should. For all essential purposes I speak as one who is dead. If I allowed selfishness to influence me, I would quietly work to have Blease sent here, because there is nothing more certain than this: While Woodrow Wilson is President, Blease will get no recognition in the way of patronage whatever. I have had little or none, but I would have it all hereafter with Blease as a colleague. If a Republican should follow Wilson, Blease might in a way duplicate or repeat my attitude toward Cleveland, who did not recognize the Tillmanites in South Carolina as Democrats at all. If the unhappy difference among our people in South Carolina shall continue and Bleaseism becomes the dominant factor in the State, Blease might in time play the rôle of Mahone in Virginia. All signs, however, point to the triumphant reelection of President Wilson and the continuation of the Democratic Party in power.

ONE STRIKING THING.

"There is one striking thing about Gov. Blease as a leader and a statesman to be very seriously considered. It seems to have been lost sight of up to this time. He has been in public life since 1890. He came to the front the same year I did. If he is such a great leader now, more worthy to be followed than TILLMAN, more worthy of admiration and trust, how has he succeeded all these years in hiding it? What has he ever done in a constructive way to benefit the people of South Carolina? Let those who are his sponsors answer. I have demonstrated my statesmanship and ability to lead in a dozen ways. Without even mentioning what I have done in Washington as a Senator, I have many monuments in South Carolina—Clemson and Winthrop in an educational way; the constitutional convention, which relieved the people of the State of the menace of negro domination by the organic law under which we live; the primary system of choosing candidates; and the despised and slandered dispensary, which only failed because the corrupt politicians in the legislature got hold of it and the anti-Tillmanites egged them on to destroy it. But in spite of all their machination and cunning it still survives locally in many counties. All these are largely my handiwork. In God's name, let those who were formerly Tillmanites, but now Blease shouters, show what Blease has done of a similar character. They can not do it, and they owe it to themselves to pause and analyze things and recover their reason—if they can. They can undo some of the wrongs they have perpetrated and restore the State's good name, which Blease has made a byword and a hissing. The 25th of August will tell the story, and I watch the result with confidence.

"B. R. TILLMAN."

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 21328) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are a number of Senators absent who, I think, are interested in some of the items to be considered in the pending bill. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum in order that they may be present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Culberson	Lodge	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	du Pont	McLean	Smith, Mich.
Beady	Fall	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Bristow	Fletcher	Nelson	Sterling
Bryan	Gallinger	Norris	Stone
Burleigh	Gronna	O'Gorman	Thomas
Burton	Hitchcock	Overman	Thompson
Camden	Jones	Page	Vardaman
Catron	Kenyon	Perkins	Warren
Chamberlain	Kern	Poindexter	Weeks
Chilton	La Follette	Shafroth	White
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Sheppard	Works
Clarke, Ark.	Lea, Tenn.	Sherman
Colt	Lee, Md.	Shields
Crawford	Lippitt	Simmons

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY]. This announcement may stand for the day. I also desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who is detained at his home on account of illness.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence, owing to illness in his family, of my colleague, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. LIPPITT. I have been requested by the members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to say that that committee is in session, engaged on important business, and that a large number of the members of the committee are attending that session.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. I will ask that this announcement stand for the day.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] are also unavoidably absent from the Senate, and that they are paired, respectively, with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that will be the order.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Permanent establishment," on page 2, line 5, after the word "cadets," to strike out "$390,000" and insert "$420,000," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of cadets, $420,000, $10,000 of which is made immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 9, after the word "service," to insert "detachment," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of general Army service detachment: One first sergeant, $540.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 19, after the word "mechanics," to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$1,080," so as to make the clause read:

Four mechanics, $1,080.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge to appropriations provided for on pages 4 and 5 of the bill. For instance, there is this provision:

For pay of general Army service detachment: One first sergeant, $540; Eight sergeants, $2,880.

In all of the other appropriation bills, particularly those that are reported by the Committee on Appropriations, that would read "eight sergeants, $2,280 each."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, no; that $2,280 pays all the sergeants.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there is the further provision:

Two trumpeters, $360.

That is on page 5. Does that mean that they get $180 each?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir. The pay is small.

Mr. SMOOT. The next item is:

Three horseshoers, $1,080.

Does that mean that three horseshoers shall be hired at $1,080 each?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That covers the pay of all of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it possible they can hire horseshoers for $360 a year?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Whether they can or not, they seem to get along in some way with it. I will say to the Senator, and that is true with reference to the item "eight sergeants, $2,280." That means that the eight sergeants get that amount. It is the pay of the combined group.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is understood that that is the total appropriation to pay all of the eight sergeants, I presume it is all right.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that these horseshoers are enlisted men. I will also say that the appropriations for the Military Academy have always been carried precisely in this way every year, so far as I have had any knowledge of them.

Mr. SMOOT. It is all right, if it is understood that the amount named is the pay for the group of sergeants or corporals, as the case may be.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to give notice of a motion to reconsider the action of the Senate in agreeing to the conference report on the seamen's bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon does not yield for that purpose.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; I supposed the Senator was going to address himself to this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think I ought to have the privilege of giving such a notice, so as to prevent the action of the Senate from going over to the House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I decline to yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can only be done by unanimous consent under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I insist on proceeding with the consideration of the Military Academy bill. There will be plenty of time for the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Georgia can not be shut off in that way.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can not be shut off from giving notice to move a reconsideration.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understood the Senator was intending to make an address.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all; I want to give a notice that will prevent the action of the Senate from passing out of the control of the Senate. I had understood that a Senator had begun a speech on the conference report of the seamen's bill, and I understood also that there was to be another elaborate speech. I was called downstairs to give my testimony in relation to a case that is pending in New York City, which I thought would occupy me 10 minutes, and I would then return. I am very much interested in the seamen's bill, and very much opposed to it.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I only desire to submit the proposition that a notice of a motion to reconsider can hardly be given by a Senator who did not vote in the affirmative.

Mr. GALLINGER. There was no recorded vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I insist that I have the floor.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has the floor. There is going to be no change in the ruling of the Chair until it is reversed by the Senate of the United States. The ruling has been complied with here for weeks and weeks that a Senator having the floor can only yield for the purpose of a question unless by unanimous consent. There is objection, and the Chair is going to stand by the ruling.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, let me say here that I do not want to interfere with the giving of a notice, but it would lead to the discussion of a parliamentary question, and that means all day. That is the objection I have to it. If the Senator will content himself with giving the notice, I will be glad to have him do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was an objection by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And nothing else is in order unless by unanimous consent. There was objection by the Senator from Indiana; that is the trouble about it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Now, Mr. President, addressing myself to the question raised by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I desire to say that the estimates will show that these several amounts, which he thinks ought to be separated, are grouped together because they are for enlisted men, and their pay is small in each case.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Addressing myself to that matter, I want to say that I had some notes on my desk and had intended to address myself to the seamen's bill. My daughter called me out for a moment, and while I was out the bill was passed; I do not know how. I hope it will come up in some form hereafter.

THE SEAMEN'S BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the Senate should have a right to reconsider that action. If necessary, I think we should temporarily displace this appropriation bill and give an opportunity for a motion to reconsider. I know there were a number of Senators who had intended to speak against this measure. I had understood that there were two or three speeches to be made. I said to a Senator that I was called downstairs to give my testimony in a case pending in New York City that would take but a few minutes, and I supposed it would be perfectly safe for me to leave.

I now move, Mr. President, that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, that a motion may be made to reconsider the action of the Senate on the seamen's bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will state his point of order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is, that this motion is not in order now during the pendency of the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Chair hold that we can not lay aside a pending measure?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Chair holds no such thing. The Chair holds that if a Senator wants to lay it aside he must make a motion to take up something else, which the Senator from Georgia is not proposing to do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Regular order!

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, Mr. President, having the floor, I desire to give some of the views I have as to why the seamen's bill should not have been passed.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana will state his point of order.

Mr. KERN. There is no motion before the Senate to which the Senator can address himself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a bill before the Senate, and the Senator has a right to address himself to that. There is no doubt about that. A Senator can talk about anything here in the United States Senate except the matter under consideration.

Mr. KERN. I submit that he must pretend, at least, to address himself to the question before the Senate. My point is that where a Senator announces that he proposes to discuss a question that is not before the Senate he is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule as the Chair stated it has been the rule since the foundation of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I make the further point of order that the Senator announces that he proposes to address the Senate and present an argument as to why a bill which has been passed should not have been passed, and I submit that that is not in order at any time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate of the United States never discusses the subject in hand, and the Senator from Georgia has a perfect right to the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me to enable me to make a brief statement?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If I do not lose my place on the floor; but I will not yield in any way to lose my position, and I believe that under the rulings I would lose it if I yielded to anything except a question.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well; I will ask a question. I wish to ask if the rule of common courtesy, that by tradition adheres to and inheres in the Senate, is going to be dispensed with? And in supplementing my question it is necessary to make a statement:

I gave notice some days ago that I desired to proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. Three distinguished Senators in charge of various bills appealed to me not to press the Indian appropriation bill, and feeling that by reason of their priority of service in the Senate I ought in some measure to yield, I yielded and did not make the motion. Last night, by common consent in this Chamber, which no one will deny, it was understood that the Indian appropriation bill was to follow the Diplomatic and Consular bill. When the time came for me to make the appropriate motion, Senators on both sides of the Chamber appealed to me not to impinge the Indian appropriation bill in front of the seamen's bill; and the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and other Senators who are not leaders and who do not want to be leaders, assured me that so soon as——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question. Does the Senator mean to say that there was unanimous consent as to any of these bills?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, my distinguished and learned friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, must have been out of the Chamber a moment ago. I did not say there was an agreement by unanimous consent, but I said that by common report or common fame in the Senate it was known that I was to be next in pressing the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. No notice was given and no unanimous consent.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, yes; notice was given. Notice was given in the open Senate and Senators were told privately.

Mr. LODGE. But a notice binds no one.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. There may be Senators whom notices do not bind, but there are Senators whom notices and courtesies do bind. Now, we would like to hear the speech of our distinguished friend, the learned Senator from Georgia; but it is addressed to a subject that is concluded; it is going to be addressed to a bill the Senate has passed, and I hope that we may proceed to the consideration of the Indian bill at some time during this day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I sympathize with the desire of the Senator from Arizona to proceed with the Indian bill. I personally know that he has been most courteous in yielding upon this subject to other measures. He has been courteous to me with reference to it. I do not think the seamen's bill ought to have been taken up ahead of the appropriations bill.

Now, it is not my purpose to waste the time of the Senate. I think we ought to have an opportunity to move to reconsider that action. I think the bill ought to be kept in the Senate until we have the opportunity to secure a yea-and-nay vote on a motion to reconsider the vote on the seamen's bill. It is because I desire to stop the seamen's bill, if possible, that I am addressing the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state, for the information of the Senator from Georgia, that he interrupted the Senator from Oregon before, when he had no right to interrupt him, without his consent, for any other purpose than a question; but having the floor now, the Senator can make his motion if he wants to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move, then, that the Senate reconsider its action with reference to the seamen's bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a point of order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And before I yield the floor I desire to present some views in support of that motion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I insist that no Senator can make such a motion and hold the floor. When the motion is made it is proper to have it stated to the Senate. That takes the Senator off the floor, and a motion then to lay on the table is in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Wisconsin insists upon the motion of the Senator from Georgia being reduced to writing, it must be reduced to writing.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, a point of order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I insist that no Senator can make such a motion and hold the floor after it is made.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the motion may be reduced to writing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I will reduce it to writing in due time, and I will proceed with what I desire to say in support of it before I send it to the desk.

Mr. VARDAMAN. A point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. A point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will state it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator can not make that motion as long as the Military Academy bill is before the Senate. In order that he may make that motion, it is necessary to displace the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair's mind is pretty clear on this question now. There is no doubt about these propositions, to the Chair's satisfaction, at least:

First, that when a Senator has the floor, he has the right to say that he will not yield to any other Senator except for the purposes of a question. It was upon that ground that the Chair ruled originally, that the motion of the Senator from Georgia was not in order. The Chair has no doubt, however, that when a Senator does get the floor he has a right to move for a reconsideration of a vote, which practically amounts to displacing the unfinished business if it be carried. In accordance with the former rulings of other presiding officers, however, and in accordance with the rules of the Senate, the Senator from Georgia will be compelled, upon request, which has been made, to reduce his motion to writing, have it presented, and read by the Secretary, and he loses his right to the floor when that is done. But if it be not presented, in accordance with a custom which the Chair, with due courtesy to the Senate, would say should be more honored in the breach than in the observance thereof, the Senate of the United States permits a Senator to talk upon any question, whether it be germane to the pending measure or not. So that the Senator from Georgia, in accordance with the rulings of the Senate, has a perfect right, on the Military Academy bill, to talk about anything he wants to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that for a few moments I was out of the Chamber and that a vote upon the seamen's bill was had during my temporary absence. There is much in that bill that commends itself to me. There is much in the bill that I would be glad to support; but I can give in a very few words reasons that make it impossible for me to support and cause me earnestly to desire to defeat the measure as it is now presented.

I would call attention to two of them. It is the interference with the admission of foreign vessels to our harbors, the interference that it will cause to that part of our commerce which depends upon the tramp steamer, that leads me to fear the consequences of this bill. Of our three billion seven hundred and fifty millions of transoceanic commerce, 85 per cent, I understand, is carried by tramp steamers. It is carried by vessels not owned by citizens of the United States. The vessels of all the world handle this business for our people. My own immediate section is absolutely dependent to-day upon vessels of that character to carry cotton to foreign consumers. The paralysis of the price of our cotton during October, November, and part of December was to a large extent due to the entire absence of any transportation for cotton to foreign ports. If we strike a blow at those foreign vessels, if we strike a blow at the service that is being rendered by those vessels doing our transoceanic commerce, we will affect the laboring people of this entire country by the blow. We will affect the farmer in the sale of his products. We will affect the manufacturer in the sale of his products.

I yield to no man in my desire to help develop and improve the status of the laboring men of this country; but I will not be carried away by a proposition such as this bill contains which, in the interest of the laboring man upon the ocean, in my judgment, strikes a blow at every laboring man upon a farm in the United States, at the laboring men upon our trains, at all the laboring men of the United States whose occupations rest in large part upon the transportation of the products of this country to foreign consumers.

While we are undertaking to regulate the conduct of our own vessels, let us remember that there are but few of them engaged in transoceanic trade. If this bill stopped with the regulation of domestic vessels, I would have nothing to say; but it undertakes to place all the regulations with which we surround our own vessels upon every vessel that comes into our harbors—not only passenger vessels but freight vessels coming to carry our products across the ocean. I fear, I believe, that this measure is calculated to cut off from our harbors the vessels so necessary to carry our products to foreign consumers. Let me illustrate by referring to only two of its provisions.

Let us take section 4. Section 4 concludes with the statement:

> That this section shall apply to seamen on foreign vessels while in harbors of the United States, and the courts of the United States shall be open to such seamen for its enforcement.

That section sets aside the contract made between the owner of the vessel and the men who work on it. If the owner of a tramp steamer at Genoa, Italy, or at some point in Norway or Sweden or in Holland, employs his crew for a trip to Norfolk or Galveston or Boston and return, that section breaks the contract that the owner of the vessel has made with his crew when they enter an American port. It puts new regulations upon his men. It imposes new regulations as to what character of men can handle his vessel.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to inquire if he is addressing himself to the merits of the bill which has been passed with the idea of making a motion to reconsider that vote? Is that the Senator's position? If so, I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact, judging from his remarks already, that he would not have voted with the prevailing side in the adoption of that report if he had been in the Senate Chamber? Is not that true?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I answer the Senator that if there had been no yea-and-nay vote, no matter which way I voted, I could have moved to reconsider, under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I call the Senator's attention to Rule——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then I make the point of order that the Senator can not move to reconsider, because he did not vote with the prevailing side.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. When I present the motion I shall be ready to meet the Senator on that proposition.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator announced that he was not in the Senate Chamber, and his argument shows that he would not have voted with the prevailing side if he had been in the Senate Chamber. Consequently, he is not in a position to make any such motion, and I make the point of order that he can not make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been decided a number of times that when there is no yea-and-nay vote anybody can move to reconsider.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now, Mr. President and Senators, I beg you to listen. I beg you not to be swept away by this bill, but to realize what you are doing to your constituents.

This section 4 breaks the contract between owners of foreign vessels and members of their crews and relieves the crew from any contract to return with the vessel. It relieves them from the obligation of their contracts and enforces payment of full wages up to the time they quit. So, if a Norwegian, Swedish, Holland, Italian, or Spanish vessel leaves a harbor of one of these countries and comes across with a crew that has been employed to make the round trip, the contract is over when the American port is entered, and the owner of the vessel must secure a crew under the contract prescribed by this bill before his vessel can sail.

What further does it do? It prescribes the terms on which that vessel can employ the new crew going out of the port; it prescribes in detail who can serve; it prescribes the equipment of the vessel, with limitation after limitation upon the vessel.

Now, Senators, suppose a vessel should come into the port of Galveston from Norway with a crew under contract to sail to Galveston and back to Norway. The contract is broken when it goes into Galveston. The owner of the vessel must obtain a new crew under the terms of this bill. Who guarantees that the men will be at the port to be employed, with the qualifications required by the bill? What assurance has the owner of such a vessel that such a crew can be employed? We undertake to regulate that vessel. What careful business man would wish to take his vessel into a port under such circumstances? Are we not driving them off? Are we not about to pass a bill which would prevent our transoceanic shipment from being carried by vessels foreign owned? Will not the regulations and restrictions placed upon them when they come inside of an American port make their owners afraid to come?

I would be glad to see every possible advancement for all these men, but I am unwilling to see a regulation placed upon the vessels that we require to-day to carry our products to foreign consumers so shaped, so devised, as to prevent us from having carriage. Who is to secure transportation for our flour and our other agricultural products of the Middle West?

I state frankly what concerns me most is to secure the transportation of the cotton of my constituents. I will be candid about it. I am more interested in taking their cotton to market than I am in any other one thing of a business character. By this bill we strike a blow at the cotton farmer. We put the owners of foreign freight steamers in a position where probably they will not dare serve us. We may destroy the only means we have of shipping cotton, grain, and other farm products abroad.

I voted for the shipping bill. I voted for the United States to put $40,000,000 into a shipping company. I voted for it and will continue to vote for it even though it had in it things that I did not like, and I understand it is coming back here with things which I like less, but I would rather take the chances in the future of getting rid of permanent operation than to fail during this crisis to have transportation for the products of this country to foreign consumers.

When we realize that we sold last year $2,750,000,000 of our products to foreign consumers, when we realize that the paralysis of that commerce would absolutely paralyze the whole business of the country and carry want into the homes of most of the humble and poorer classes of the country, when we realize the harm that would come from the loss of transportation of products to foreign consumers, how can we afford to vote for this measure? Even if we had passed the shipping bill we would still be compelled to rely in large part upon the tramp steamers for transportation. Yet we are asked to add these restrictions upon foreign vessels, these extreme limitations, these limitations as to their crews that will require them to obtain new crews when they come into one of our ports before they can go out with our products. We are asked to make it impossible for them to sail from across the ocean with a crew employed to come here and go back.

What is going to happen to our transportation facilities upon which we must rely to carry our products abroad for consumption and what will happen to our communities when their opportunity for transportation is taken from them?

I say, again, there may be many splendid features in this bill. I say, further, that I would be glad to see many of these features extended to the vessels of the world by common agreement; but to undertake in this way to force them on every vessel that comes into our harbors is to force those vessels out of our harbors to a great extent. It is to put them in a shape where they can not afford to come into our harbors if they can get business anywhere else; and now, while we have already been shown the difficulties of transportation which confront us, I simply feel a sense of dread as to the consequences which will follow this measure.

Mr. President, as I said, I do not desire to detain the Senate. I send the following to the Secretary's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]:

I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the conference report on Senate bill 136, "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen and the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto, and to promote safety at sea," and that the House be requested to return said bill to the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the Senator from Georgia suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (to Mr. LA FOLLETTE). You have the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am reluctant in the present condition of the public business to take one moment that is needed for the consideration of other important legislation to debate the question whether the report should be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia suggested the absence of a quorum. The Chair thought the Senator took the floor for another purpose.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood the Senator from Georgia to withdraw the suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fall	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Fletcher	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Gallinger	Norris	Smith, Md.
Burleigh	Gore	O'Gorman	Smith, Mich.
Burton	Gronna	Oliver	Smoot
Camden	Hitchcock	Overman	Stephenson
Catron	Johnson	Page	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones	Perkins	Stone
Chilton	Kenyon	Pittman	Swanson
Clapp	Kern	Poindexter	Thompson
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Ransdell	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Robinson	Townsend
Colt	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury	Weeks
Crawford	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	White
Culberson	Lewis	Sheppard	Works
Cummins	Lippitt	Sherman
Dillingham	Lodge	Shields
du Pont	Martine, N. J.	Simmons

Mr. RANSDELL. The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] is absent on account of sickness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is the bill still in the Senate, or has it been sent to the House?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is here.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I wish to withdraw that part of my resolution which asks that it be returned from the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has been done. The Chair ordered it withdrawn.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not purpose to take but a few minutes of the time of the Senate. The discussion last evening and this morning—the observations of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]—proceeded upon the assumption that this proposed legislation, in so far as it applies to foreign vessels, is unprecedented and is not enforceable because it interferes with contracts made abroad by foreign vessels with foreign seamen.

Mr. President, I wish to say that the provisions of this bill, with regard to the application of certain of its provisions to foreign vessels, are taken almost word for word from the existing statute passed in 1898, which applies to foreign vessels sailing from ports of the United States to ports of the West Indies, Mexico, and Canada. The act of 1898 provides, just as this bill provides, that there shall be no allotment or advance made in wages to seamen, and that if allotments or advances are made the seamen shall be entitled to recover the full amount of wages earned, regardless of any allotment or advance that may have been paid. Then there follows this provision:

(f) That this section shall apply as well to foreign vessels as to vessels of the United States; and any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated its provisions shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for a similar violation: Provided, That treaties in force between the United States and foreign nations do not conflict.

The provision of the bill covering this same subject is as follows:

(e) That this section shall apply as well to foreign vessels while in waters of the United States as to vessels of the United States; and any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated its provisions shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for similar violation. The master, owner, consignee, or agent of any vessel of the United States, or of any foreign vessel seeking clearance from a port of the United States, shall present his shipping articles at the office of clearance, and no clearance shall be granted any such vessel unless the provisions of this section have been complied with.

This bill provides, as to conflicting provisions in our treaties, that the President shall give the required notice to foreign countries, and ample time shall be allowed for an adjustment by negotiations, so that the countries affected shall be brought into harmony with regard to these new provisions.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the bill introduced by the Senator from Ohio in 1913 contains this provision with respect to prohibiting advances or allotments in, I think, almost precisely the language of this bill. I have that bill before me. With respect to foreign vessels it provides:

The master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel seeking clearance from a port of the United States shall present his shipping articles at the office of clearance, and the collector of customs may, upon reasonable evidence that the provisions of this section have not been complied with, refuse to grant clearance to such vessel.

Now, Mr. President, the validity of those provisions was questioned after the enactment of the law of 1898. The bark Eudora, a British vessel, violated the provisions of the act by paying advances to the seamen. The case went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the provisions of the act of 1898 prohibiting the payment of advance, even by foreign vessels, were sustained. I will not take the time to read the entire opinion to the Senate, but ask that I may have leave to print in the RECORD the statement of the issues involved in the case and the entire opinion following, which was delivered by the late Justice Brewer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to hear such parts as are important now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia object?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I shall be forced, then, to take a few moments to present some extracts from the opinion to the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For a question.

Mr. ASHURST. I appeal to the Senator from Georgia to withdraw his objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think it important that we should know. I regard this as legislation, if I comprehend it, that threatens seriously the people whom I represent. I am afraid it is a terrible blow to their chief industry that has already been severely injured, and it is so serious——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not yield to be taken off the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think there is enough in the paragraphs of the opinion which I will read to present the issue to the Senate, so that I do not need to read the statement of the court as to the facts of the case.

It is a case that was certified up from the circuit court to the Supreme Court, and the questions certified up for the opinion of the court were:

First. Is the act of Congress of December 21, 1898, properly applicable to the contract in this case?

Second. Under the agreed statement of facts above set forth, upon a libel filed by said seamen, after the completion of the voyage, against the British vessel to recover wages which were not due to them under the terms of their contract or under the law of Great Britain, were the libellants entitled to a decree against the vessel?

That is, an advance of $20 had been made at the time these men shipped on board of this foreign vessel. There was no provision in the contract that they should have a right to recover regardless of the fact that the advance had been paid, and yet the law 1898 provided specifically that they should be entitled to recover the full amount earned regardless of any advance paid, and the reason for that rule is stated in this opinion:

Mr. Justice Brewer, after making the statement, delivered the opinion of the court. He said:

"Applying the ordinary rules of construction, it does not seem to us doubtful that the act of Congress, if within its power, is applicable in this case. The act makes it unlawful to pay any seaman wages in advance, makes such payment a misdemeanor, and in terms provides that such payment shall not absolve the vessel or its master or owner for full payment of wages after the same shall have been actually earned; and, further, it declares that the section making these provisions shall apply as well to foreign vessels as to vessels of the United States, provided that treaties in force between the United States and foreign nations do not conflict. * * * When, as here, the statute declares in plain words its intent in reference to a prepayment of seamen's wages, and follows that declaration with a further statement that the rule thus announced shall apply to foreign vessels as well as to vessels of the United States, it would do violence to language to say that it was not applicable to a foreign vessel."

That is the language of the opinion. It continues:

"But the main contention is that the statute is beyond the power of Congress to enact, especially as applicable to foreign vessels."

That was the contention urged last night by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. The court said:

It is urged that it invades the liberty of contract which is guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, and reference is made to Allgeyer v. Louisiana (165 U. S., 578, 589), in which we said—

Then it quotes from that opinion with regard to the interference of contract, and I ask to have that printed as a part of my remarks without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The liberty mentioned in that amendment means not only the right of the citizen to be free from the mere physical restraint of his person, as by incarceration, but the term is deemed to embrace the right of the citizen to be free in the enjoyment of all his faculties; to be free to use them in all lawful ways; to live and work where he will; to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling; to pursue any livelihood or avocation, and for that purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper, necessary, and essential to his carrying out to a successful conclusion the purposes above mentioned.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I read again from the opinion:

Further, that even if the contract be one subject to restraint under the police power, that power is vested in the States—

That is a further opinion which was advanced by those arguing against the validity of this law. Now mark what the court says upon this point:

That, even if the contract be one subject to restraint under the police power, that power is vested in the States and not in the General Government, and any restraint, if exercised at all, can only be exercised by the State in which the contract is entered into; that the only jurisdiction possessed by Congress in respect to such matters is by virtue of its power to regulate commerce, interstate and foreign; that the regulation of commerce does not carry with it the power of controlling contracts of employment by those engaged in such service any more than it includes the power to regulate contracts for service on interstate railroads or for the manufacture of goods which may be intended for interstate or foreign commerce; and, finally, that the validity of a contract is to be determined by the law of the place of performance and not by that of the place of the contract; that the contract in this case was one entered into in the United States, to be performed on board a British vessel, which is undoubtedly British territory, and therefore its validity is to be determined by British law, and that, as conceded in the question, sustains its validity.

Mr. President, I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate in reading this entire opinion, but I will read such portions of it as meet the questions which have been raised. Mr. Justice Brewer and the court say:

We are unable to yield our assent to this contention. That there is, generally speaking, a liberty of contract which is protected by the fourteenth amendment may be conceded, yet such liberty does not extend to all contracts. As said in Frisbie v. United States (157 U. S., 160, 165):

"While it may be conceded that, generally speaking, among the inalienable rights of the citizen is that of the liberty of contract, yet such liberty is not absolute and universal. It is within the undoubted power of government to restrain some individuals from all contracts, as well as all individuals from some contracts. It may deny to all the right to contract for the purchase or sale of lottery tickets; to the minor the right to assume any obligations, except for the necessaries of existence; to the common carrier the power to make any contract releasing himself from negligence, and, indeed, may restrain all engaged in any employment from any contract in the course of that employment which is against public policy. The possession of this power by government in no manner conflicts with the proposition that, generally speaking, every citizen has a right freely to contract for the price of his labor, services, or property."

And that the contract of a sailor for his services is subject to some restrictions was settled in Robertson v. Baldwin (165 U. S., 275), in which sections 4598 and 4599, Revised Statutes, in so far as they require seamen to carry out the contracts contained in their shipping articles, were held not to be in conflict with the thirteenth amendment, and in which a deprivation of personal liberty not warranted in respect to other employees was sustained as to sailors.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. BURTON. We had some discussion last night about whether this provision as to allotments pertained to allotments made in foreign countries. Does the Senator from Wisconsin maintain that the bill as now drawn does forbid allotments made in foreign countries by foreign steamships, or is it restricted to allotments made in the United States?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, while I have not in mind the exact language of the bill relating to that question I understand the bill limits its application to foreign ships while in the waters of the United States.

Mr. BURTON. At the top, I believe, of page 14——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not wish to be diverted at this time. I read again from this opinion, in which the court quoted as follows from the case of Robertson against Baldwin:

From the earliest historical period the contract of the sailor has been treated as an exceptional one, and involving, to a certain extent, the surrender of his personal liberty during the life of the contract. Indeed, the business of navigation could scarcely be carried on without some guaranty, beyond the ordinary civil remedies upon contract, that the sailor will not desert the ship at a critical moment or leave her at some place where seamen are impossible to be obtained—as Molloy forcibly expresses it, "to rot in her neglected brine." Such desertion might involve a long delay of the vessel while the master is seeking another crew, an abandonment of the voyage, and in some cases the safety of the ship itself. Hence the laws of nearly all maritime nations have made provision for securing criminal punishment for desertion or absence without leave during the life of the shipping articles.

With regard to that, Mr. President, no man stands on this floor at this time advocating the continuance of the involuntary servitude which the decision in the Robertson case enforced as against seamen. We have gone past that time. Mr. Justice Brewer says:

If the necessities of the public justify the enforcement of a sailor's contract by exceptional means, justice requires that the rights of the sailor be in like manner protected. The story of the wrongs done to sailors in the larger ports, not merely of this Nation but of the world, is an oft-told tale, and many have been the efforts to protect them against such wrongs. One of the most common means of doing these wrongs is the advancement of wages. Bad men lure them into haunts of vice, advance a little money to continue their dissipation, and, having thus acquired a partial control and by liquor dulled their faculties, place them on board the vessel just ready to sail and most ready to return the advances. When once on shipboard and the ship at sea the sailor is powerless and no relief is availing. It was in order to stop this evil, to protect the sailor, and not to restrict him of his liberty, that this statute was passed. And while in some cases it may operate harshly, no one can doubt that the best interests of seamen as a class are preserved by such legislation.

Neither do we think there is in it any trespass on the rights of the States. No question is before us as to the applicability of the statute to contracts of sailors for services wholly within the State. We need not determine whether one who contracts to serve on a steamboat between New York and Albany or between any two places within the limits of a State can avail himself of the privileges of this legislation, for the services contracted for in this case were to be performed beyond the limits of any single State and in an ocean voyage. Contracts with sailors for their services are, as we have seen, exceptional in their character, and may be subjected to special restrictions for the purpose of securing the full and safe carrying on of commerce on the water, being so subject whenever the contract is for employment in commerce not wholly within the domain of Congress, which is charged with the duty of protecting foreign and interstate commerce.

Finally, while it has often been stated that that law of the place of performance determines the validity of a contract (London Assurance v. Companhia de Moagens, 167 U. S., 149, 160), yet that doctrine does not control this case. It may be remarked in passing that it does not appear that the contract of shipment or the advance payments were made on board the vessel. On the contrary, the stipulated fact is that the "seamen were engaged in the presence of the British vice consul at the port of New York." The wrongful acts were, therefore, done on the territory and within the jurisdiction of the United States. It is undoubtedly true that for some purposes a foreign ship is treated as a foreign territory. As said by Mr. Justice Blackburn, in Queen v. Anderson (L. R. 1 Crown Cases Reserved, 161), "A ship which bears a nation's flag is to be treated as part of the territory of that nation. A ship is a kind of floating island." Yet when a foreign merchant vessel comes into our ports, like a foreign citizen coming into our territory, it subjects itself to the jurisdiction of this country. In Schooner Exchange v. McFadden (7 Cranch., 116, 136, 186), this court held that a public armed vessel in the service of a sovereign at peace with the United States is not within the ordinary jurisdiction of our tribunals while within a port of the United States. In the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall it was said that "the jurisdiction of the nation within its own territory is necessarily exclusive and absolute; it is susceptible of no limitation not imposed by itself. Any restriction upon it depriving validity from an external source would imply diminution of its sovereignty to the extent of the restriction. All exceptions, therefore, to the full and complete power of a nation within its own territory must be traced to the consent of the nation itself. They can flow from no other legitimate source. This consent may be either express or implied. In the latter case it is less determinate, exposed more to the uncertainties of construction; but, if understood, not less obligatory." And again, after holding it "to be a principle of public law that national ships of war, entering the port of a friendly power, open for their reception, are to be considered as exempted by the consent of that power from its jurisdiction," he added: "Without doubt, the sovereign of the place is capable of destroying this implication. He may claim and exercise jurisdiction, either by employing force or by subjecting such vessels to the ordinary tribunals."

Again, in Wildenhus's case (120 U. S., 1), in which the jurisdiction of a State court over one charged with murder committed on board a foreign merchant vessel in a harbor of the State was sustained, it was said by Mr. Chief Justice Waite (pp. 11, 12):

"It is part of the law of civilized nations that when a merchant vessel of one country enters the ports of another for the purposes of trade, it subjects itself to the law of the place to which it goes unless by treaty or otherwise the two countries have come to some different understanding or agreement. * * * From experience, however, it was found long ago that it would be beneficial to commerce if the local government would abstain from interfering with the internal discipline of the ship and the general regulation of the rights and duties of the officers and crew toward the vessel or among themselves. And so by comity it came to be generally understood among civilized nations that all matters of discipline and all things done on board which affected only the vessel or those belonging to her, and did not involve the peace or dignity of the country or the tranquillity of the port, should be left by the local government to be dealt with by the authorities of the nation to which the vessel belonged as the laws of that nation or the interests in its commerce should require. But if crimes were committed on board of a character to disturb the peace and tranquillity of the country to which the vessel has been brought, the offenders have never by comity or usage been entitled to any exemption from the operation of the local laws for their punishment, if the local tribunals see fit to assert their authority."

It follows from these decisions that it is within the power of Congress to prescribe the penal provisions of section 10, and no one within the jurisdiction of the United States can escape liability for a violation of those provisions on the plea that he is a foreign citizen or an officer of a foreign merchant vessel. It also follows that it is the duty of the courts of the United States to give full force and effect to such provisions. It is not pretended that this Government can control the action of foreign tribunals. In any case presented to them they will be guided by their own views of the law and its scope and effect; but the courts of the United States are bound to accept their legislation and enforce it whenever its provisions are violated. The implied consent of this Government to leave jurisdiction over the internal affairs of foreign merchant vessels in our harbors to the nations to which those vessels belong may be withdrawn. Indeed, the implied consent to permit them to enter our harbor may be withdrawn, and if this implied consent may be wholly withdrawn it may be extended upon such terms and conditions as the Government sees fit to impose. And this legislation, as plainly as words can make it, imposes these conditions upon the shipment of sailors in our harbors and declares that they are applicable to foreign as well as to domestic vessels. Congress has thus prescribed conditions which attend the entrance of foreign vessels into our ports and those conditions the courts are not at liberty to dispense with.

Mr. President, there can not, I believe, remain in the mind of any Senator any question as to the right of this Government to enact this legislation. As to the wisdom of the public policy of such enactment there has been no objection made here that is not answerable—overwhelmingly answerable—but, much as I should like to cover that ground, I refrain from taking two or three hours for that purpose because of the pressure of important legislation before the Senate at this time.

The history of this legislation is fresh in the minds of Senators. It has been a long, hard struggle of more than 20 years, exemplifying the difficulties of establishing the rights of men when in conflict with the money power.

This bill, if it becomes law, in so far as the United States can do it, will make of the seaman a free man. It gives him the right to one-half the wages earned, and this will enable him to exercise and protect his freedom. It will prevent "crimping" and "shanghaiing." It protects against unfair competition with orientals. It regulates the hours of labor in port and at sea. It compels better living conditions for seamen on the vessels. It establishes a satisfactory standard for able seamen employed upon ocean vessels. It requires certificated lifeboat men as part of the manning of the lifeboats, without establishing a definite standard of efficiency for them. The bill provides a standard for davits, a standard for lifeboats, and requires the equipment of vessels with a certain number of lifeboats.

In the provisions for the public this bill does not go as far as it should.

Why, Mr. President, when this same Committee on Commerce investigated the great Titanic disaster and reported the result of their investigation to the Senate, it recommended that vessels going out of our ports should be compelled to carry lifeboats for all. At that time there was no dissent from any member of that committee to that proposition. The Senate, when it considered this bill, in October, 1913, incorporated in it a provision that every vessel leaving our ports—foreign vessels as well as the vessels of the United States—should furnish lifeboats for all, and that the assignment of every passenger to his place in a lifeboat should be made when he purchased his ticket. I must not take the time of the Senate to discuss the influences that have operated to cut down these provisions for the safety of passengers.

This conference report, if it is adopted and made a law, furnishes such safety provisions only to 75 per cent of the passengers. Every boat leaving the United States, whether foreign or a vessel of this country, will be required to furnish lifeboats for 75 per cent and life rafts for 25 per cent. This provision, which the Senator from Ohio so highly commends, means just this: In midocean, when the temperature is low and when a vessel, as in the case of the Titanic, is fatally hurt and must go down, 25 per cent of those on board must take refuge, such as is offered, on rafts. What does that mean? The rafts are two cylinders which support a platform of slats. When the rafts are loaded, the water must wash over them and go up through the openings between the slats. A life line runs around outside of the raft. For what purpose? To enable those who jump overboard to hold and either draw themselves onto the raft or support themselves in the water. The raft is thrown over by hand. The passengers having no other means of possible safety must jump overboard, and it may be into water that will chill them to death in less than two hours, as was the case in the wreck of the Empress of Ireland. They can hold onto the rope if they have the strength, or the raft may float them if they climb on top of it; but if they are on top of it, they will still be washed by the icy sea as it passes over them. Without question lifeboats should be provided for all. When it is understood what inadequate protection the raft furnishes against disasters at sea, the public will demand lifeboats for all. And I serve notice that, at the beginning of the next session, if I live, I shall press upon the attention of the committee and of Congress, and upon the attention of the public, the importance of furnishing lifeboats for all, in order to provide that degree of safety at sea to which all are entitled.

Mr. President, this subject tempts me to go further, but the condition of business in the Senate admonishes me that I must forbear. I must not take more time.

I move to lay the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] on the table.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I want to be heard about five minutes on that. There is a ready answer to what the Senator from Wisconsin has said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, the Chair——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator has already spoken two or three hours.

Mr. BURTON. But statements have been made——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no power to grant a request of the kind made by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no power to grant the request.

Mr. BURTON. I know that; but I make the request of the Senator from Wisconsin. He has made statements entirely new in the discussion of this question, which should be answered before this matter comes to a vote.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, this conference report was agreed to under very peculiar circumstances. There is no disposition, or I think none, to unduly delay the consideration of this matter, and I do not think it is fair to force it to a vote in this way after what has occurred. The way in which it passed was not due to those who were opposed to the bill, but the bill was passed in their absence. Personally I think advantage was taken of their temporary absence, and that ought not to be.

Mr. ASHURST. Regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not anything to do with it. It is the rule of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Regular order!

Mr. BURTON. I understand that a request to postpone the motion is refused. Against that I enter my protest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. So the Chair understands.

Mr. BURTON. In five minutes I could present the facts to the Senate in such manner as to show that the arguments of the Senator from Wisconsin in regard to this matter are not at all based upon the facts.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would not press this motion if I were not warned by other Senators that if this debate is protracted it will not only put in jeopardy this legislation, but also appropriation bills which must be passed, unless an extra session comes on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has absolutely no power to grant the request.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I must ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] and withhold my vote, unless he makes his appearance.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COLT (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed he has not.

Mr. COLT. In his absence I withdraw my vote. I have a pair with that Senator.

Mr. GRONNA (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a pair with that Senator, and, as I am unable to get a transfer, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON];

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]; and

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY].

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—39.

Ashurst	Fletcher	Kenyon	Lee, Md.
Chamberlain	Gore	Kern	Lewis
Chilton	Hitchcock	La Follette	Martine, N. J.
Clapp	Hollis	Lane	Norris
Cummins	James	Lea, Tenn.	Owen
Perkins	Reed	Smith, Mich.	Vardaman
Pittman	Robinson	Swanson	Walsh
Poindexter	Shafroth	Thomas	White
Pomerene	Sheppard	Thompson	Works
Ransdell	Smith, Ariz.	Tillman

NAYS—33.

Bankhead	Dillingham	Oliver	Smoot
Bryan	du Pont	Overman	Stephenson
Burleigh	Fall	Page	Stone
Burton	Gallinger	Penrose	Townsend
Camden	Hardwick	Root	Warren
Catron	Jones	Sherman	Weeks
Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Simmons
Crawford	Lodge	Smith, Ga.
Culberson	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.

NOT VOTING—24.

Borah	Goff	Martin, Va.	Shively
Brady	Gronna	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Hughes	Nelson	Sterling
Bristow	Johnson	Newlands	Sutherland
Clarke, Ark.	McCumber	Saulsbury	Thornton
Colt	McLean	Shields	Williams.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. What is the question now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Military Academy appropriation bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. STONE. I desire to take the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I voted against the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to lay on the table a motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report on the seamen's bill was agreed to. When the conference report was pending I was called from the Chamber to the office of the Secretary to execute a paper which it is important should be mailed to-day. When I left the Chamber I understood that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and other Senators desired to discuss the conference report following the address of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], who was speaking at that time. On my return to the Chamber, greatly to my astonishment, I found that the report had been agreed to. From my point of view I could not support the bill as reported from the conference, and I desired to state my reasons for that position. When the Senator from Georgia made his motion to reconsider, I intended to vote for the motion and reopen the subject, and hence, when the Senator from Wisconsin moved to table the motion to reconsider, I felt constrained to vote against it. But since the motion to table was adopted, I wish now briefly to state some of my objections to the bill itself.

Mr. President, this seamen's bill in its present form does not have the approval of my deliberate judgment. I am as much interested in promoting the welfare of the American workingmen as any other Senator, although I do not have as much to say as some others on that subject. I feel just as deeply with respect to this subject as those who give more time than I do to the exploitation of their views upon it. I can not support a measure which I believe to be wrong and unwise, simply because some organization of men may favor it, however much I may be in sympathy with those men. From the sentimental or sympathetic view I should have liked to support the seamen's bill. If it had been confined in its operations to American seamen and American ships, it would have had my hearty support; but when we go beyond that and undertake a sort of Utopian scheme of caring for foreign seamen and regulating foreign ships and imposing our standards of policy upon the Governments of the world, I am compelled to halt, for I have a grave apprehension that an attempt of that kind will involve us in serious trouble without accomplishing any measure of good that would compensate for the dangers we incur. I greatly desire to promote the welfare of American workingmen in whatever line they are employed; I want their conditions improved, so as to make them the best possible; I want them to have the best wages paid anywhere in the world; I want them to enjoy every possible comfort and the widest liberty of conduct consistent with good citizenship. When we work on these lines we are working within our own jurisdiction and keeping within our own limitations, but when we venture beyond this boundary and, in a spirit of knight errantry, undertake by law to apply our standards to other nations, I think we venture upon dangerous ground.

The Senator from Wisconsin said that this seamen's bill represented a significant phase of the struggle now going on between men and the rights of men upon the one side and money on the other side. If I comprehend what he means he intended to impress the idea that there is a struggle between employees and employers—between seamen who work and shipowners who employ them. That may be true. Possibly it is true. I do not perhaps know as well as the Senator from Wisconsin about the details of this conflict; I do not know how acute it is or about its history or the extent of it. Everyone knows that I have nothing to do, directly or indirectly, with any shipping interest, and that I have no concern about the shipping interest except in its broad and general aspects.

Mr. President, I make no issue on the legal phases of the subject, as they have been presented by the Senator from Wisconsin and others. I think the United States can deny foreign ships the right to enter its ports if it should so desire, and that it follows, therefore, that the United States can admit foreign ships to its ports upon any terms it pleases. We can impose any conditions in that behalf we may desire. But I am looking at the question as one purely of public policy. The seamen's union want this bill; their representatives have been urging it actively upon the consideration and favor of Members of Congress. They think that the bill will not only help American seamen, but will also help foreign seamen who come upon foreign ships into our ports. I can not believe that this latter result is possible of attainment through this means. If foreign seamen should generally avail themselves of the provisions of this proposed law, they would probably soon find themselves out of employment altogether. They might come ashore and remain here, or they might exact of their employers additional compensation or additional advantages in other ways as a condition for carrying out their contracts and returning to their employment aboard ship. They might do that for the moment. But can you doubt that such men would be blacklisted, and that on returning home they would be subjected to some form of punishment by their home authorities, or at least that they would lose their employment and be put adrift. If they refused to return to the service which they had been engaged to perform, and should remain in America, what then? They would be men trained in the service to which they had been devoting their lives and would be measurably unfit for any other employment. It follows, therefore, that they would crowd in upon the opportunity of American seamen and overstock the labor market of this country. I do not see how any substantial or permanent good can be derived in this direction from this bill.

But, Mr. President, my greatest objection to this bill lies in this direction: By congressional legislation and because of our public policy, we have practically destroyed our over-seas merchant marine. We have few ships of our own; we have by a blind and fatuous course, inexplicable and amazing, driven our flag from the high seas. And now we propose to establish a policy the inevitable tendency of which is to drive foreign ships from our ports and thus further harass and distress the great commercial and industrial interests of the country. We have millions of tons of our products—the products of our enterprise and labor—for shipment to the various markets of the word. We are dependent upon the ships of foreign countries to supply the facilities of transportation. To the extent that you hamper and embarrass the commercial and industrial interests of the country in finding ready and adequate means of transportation you injure the labor of the country employed in productive industry, and you injure enterprise and investment. I would like to render any wise and considerate service to workingmen employed in ocean shipping, but I can not forget that there are many hundredfold more workingmen whose interests seem to me to lie in another direction. At all events, I am not willing to take the chance of trying to help the working people of other nations by doing at the same time not only a possible but a probable serious injury to thousands of wage earners in my own country.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] says that from 75 to 80 per cent of the cotton, food products, manufactures, and other American commodities are shipped abroad in the bottoms of what are known as tramp ships. I can not escape a profound apprehension that these ships will avoid our ports, coming here only when they can find no cargoes in other countries, if this measure becomes a law and is rigidly enforced. Of course I may be mistaken about this and hope I am, but that we incur a grave danger in this direction seems clear to my mind. The bill would not appeal to my judgment even if the world was at peace; but in the circumstances of this period, I can not help looking upon this movement with unqualified disapprobation.

Mr. President, can we expect foreign nations to acquiesce in a drastic policy of this kind? Will they not justly regard it as a gross interference with their rights? Will we not provoke them into adopting some policy of their own by way of retaliation, and thus not only unsettle business conditions in this country but seriously disturb our international relations? I can not but view this measure with deep apprehension. I do not believe that the possible good to be derived from it will begin to compensate for the injury it will occasion.

Mr. President, in this hurried way I give a skeleton view of my objections to the bill. Nothing I can say will be of any avail, I know, for the vote has been already taken. We have now passed the measure beyond the control of the Senate, but I feel that I ought to say at least this much in support of my attitude. There are other things I would like to say, and I would like to elaborate the points I have touched upon, but the time of the Senate is so precious now that I will not further intrude upon it.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 20150, the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, before that is done I wish to make a statement in reference to my vote on the last question which was voted upon.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, let the motion be stated.

Mr. JONES. I guess I can discuss this motion.

Mr. ASHURST. Wait until we get the bill up; then the Senator can discuss it.

Mr. JONES. I do not want to discuss the bill. I simply want to make a brief statement in connection with the last vote, and I will take this opportunity to do it, on the motion to take up this bill.

Mr. President, I voted against the motion to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I had intended to vote for the adoption of the conference report. I would have done so with very much misgiving, because of the provisions in it relating to foreign ships and because of our treaties. I voted, however, against the motion to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Georgia because on general principles I am opposed to laying propositions on the table. I prefer to vote on them directly. Furthermore, it seemed to me that the Senate had hardly acted fairly in the acceptance of the conference report, because it was known that several Senators desired to speak upon it, and I believe that no technical advantage should be taken of them. I voted against this motion largely on that account.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. In discussing the seamen's bill, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] animadverted upon the statements made by several Senators in the discussion, including the Senators from Massachusetts and New York as well as the Senator from Georgia and myself, and maintained that this proposed legislation was in line with statutes of the United States now existing. It will take but a very few minutes to show that either he quoted a very insignificant part of those statutes or he was in error.

It will be noted that the Senator from Wisconsin gave practically his whole time to the statutes of the United States relating to allotments or advance payments of wages to seamen, and when questioned as to whether the proposed law, as set forth on the top of page 14, referred to allotments made in foreign countries as well as in the United States, he expressed some doubt, but said he took it for granted that it did. Then he read at length from the case of the Eudora. That was a case in which allotments were made in the United States. He referred also to a bill introduced by me forbidding advance payments. The bill which I introduced forbade only allotments made in this country, and that bill very carefully limited penalties for allotments to those made in the United States. This conference report may be interpreted as limiting the law to allotments in the United States, but it is very doubtful, and it is evident that the intention of its proponents is to make it applicable to all allotments. I have already read the paragraph. Let me read the provisions in the two bills, and first from the pending bill:

> The master, owner, consignee, or agent of any vessel of the United States, or of any foreign vessel seeking clearance from a port of the United States, shall present his shipping articles at the office of clearance; and no clearance shall be granted any such vessel unless the provisions of this section have been complied with.

That is the provision in this bill relating to compliance with the law in regard to allotments. Now, a very significant line was in the former bill as it passed the House in March, 1913, and was in the bill as proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and myself, the omission of which changes the whole meaning of this section. The first lines are the same:

> The master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessels seeking clearance from a port of the United States shall present his shipping articles, so far as they relate to the engagement of seamen in the United States—

The last portion is significant. That was in the bill which passed the House and Senate in 1913; it was in the bill as recommended by the Committee on Commerce, expressly and in the most distinct language limiting the operation of this law to the engagement of seamen in the United States. This last line is left out in this conference report, and I presume it is left out with a purpose.

So, Mr. President, we have here a proposed law which penalizes the custom in vogue in every foreign country, a custom which we have tolerated all these years, namely, the allotment in a foreign country. We have sought by no statute to interfere, nor is there any judicial decision which interferes, with that custom. Every statute, every decision, is limited to allotments made in the United States, and until this law that comity was preserved between our own and every other.

But the question of allotments is an insignificant and immaterial one in this bill.

The principal section of the law read by the Senator from Wisconsin to sustain his contention contained the very important clause, "provided treaties with foreign countries do not conflict." In the paragraphs of which the opponents of the bill complain treaties do conflict.

The Senator from Wisconsin very judiciously avoided the other features in this conference report, which will demoralize shipping, which will interfere with comity with foreign nations. He said nothing of this provision that provides that a demand may be made for half of the wages which have been earned by a foreign seaman—a violation of the rule of contract; of the section which imposes upon every one of these boats—and I want to speak especially for the tramp boats—the necessity, after they have allotted and paid to their seamen perhaps the whole amount of wages earned, to pay one-half of that amount again if it is demanded in a port of the United States.

The Senator from Wisconsin very wisely omitted reference to the language test, which is new—new not only in this country, but in all countries. He omitted reference to the able-seaman test; he omitted what probably in practice will be the worst of all—the provision for a muster six hours before the boat is scheduled to depart.

These are the leading objections to the bill. The allotment provision to which he refers is of insignificant importance in comparison with those. Thus the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from New York, and the Senator from Georgia were right in their inferences of the damage to be done by this measure.

Mr. President, this is my last word upon this subject. I trust it is, anyway. If I were seeking personal vindication, I would say: "Pass this bill and try it." I have desired to state the objections to it and the dangers which lurk in it. I have tried to do my duty. My sympathy is all with the seamen. Their scale of wages all over the world, except in some exceptional localities, like the Pacific coast and the Great Lakes, is a low one. Anything that will improve their condition and give them a fair and rational basis for demanding larger compensation I shall most cordially approve and favor. But this bill interferes with our relations with every foreign country that has a merchant marine. It violates our treaties; it violates the customs of shipping that have been in vogue now, not merely for a hundred years, but from time immemorial. You can not introduce such demoralization in any trade without injuring the very men that you are seeking to benefit, because you lessen their opportunities for employment; you will drive boats away from the United States which otherwise would come here; you will make the rates for the transportation of products which compete with our own lower from those competing countries than they are when shipped from the United States, so that, in the long run, the very men that this bill seeks to benefit will be injured, and an injury of the greatest proportions will be imposed upon the producers of the United States.

I sincerely hope that the apprehensions of those who oppose this bill may not be realized; but if they are not, it will be because this law will be enforced with laxity or those who have opportunity to take advantage of it will show a degree of forbearance which could be hardly expected of any men.

There is one other thing I want to speak of—the provision with regard to lifeboats and rafts. The Senator from Wisconsin was criticizing this very conference report when he spoke of the 75 per cent of lifeboats and 25 per cent of rafts. That is in this bill; but just one word about that. It was not putting the investment of capital against the lives or safety of the passengers that prompted that. It was because under many circumstances the rafts are better than the lifeboats. If there is a rough sea the lifeboat in lowering is liable to be smashed against the side of the ship. If the ship sinks in a very short time there is not time to remove the boats from the davits and get them away; but there is time for the imperiled passenger to locate himself upon a raft and float away in safety. If this question comes up at any future time I trust the Senate or the House will not be influenced by any careless or superficial examination of this question, but will consider the facts, and recognize that this proportion between lifeboats and rafts was adopted by the London convention, by the best experts in the world, after careful consideration, and with a view to the greater security of human life.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], who has charge of the Indian appropriation bill, made a motion to supplant the pending unfinished business, but he assured me he would withdraw it and let me proceed with the Military Academy appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SAULSBURY in the chair). The motion being withdrawn, as stated by the Senator from Oregon, the Senate will resume the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21328) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was under the subhead, "Pay of civilians," on page 13, line 8, before the word "typewriter," to strike out "copyist" and insert "stenographer," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of one stenographer, typewriter, and attendant in the department of English and history, to be appointed by the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy, $840.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 17, after the word "charwoman," to insert "at headquarters, United States Military Academy," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of one charwoman at headquarters, United States Military Academy, $480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 19, after the word "contingencies," to strike out "$1,700" and insert "$2,000," so as to make the clause read:

Printing: For printing and binding, type, materials for office, including repairs to motors and machinery, diplomas for graduates, annual registers, blanks, and monthly reports to parents of cadets, and contingencies, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 25, after the word "and," to strike out "guardhouse" and insert "cadet headquarters," and on page 16, line 6, after the word "room," to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$2,000," so as to make the clause read:

For camp stools, camp and office furniture, and repairs to same; for doormats for cadet barracks, sinks, and cadet headquarters; for stationery, typewriting supplies and repairs, for use of instructor and assistant instructors of tactics; for books and maps, binding books, and mounting maps; for plumes, silk and worsted sashes for cadet officers and acting officers; for furniture, curtains, and rugs for cadet reception room, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 12, after the word "tank," to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,500," so as to make the clause read:

Gymnasium and athletic supplies: For repairs, new machines, athletic supplies, and fixtures for gymnasium; for foils, masks, belts, fencing gloves, fencing jackets, gaiters, sabers, and repairs; for repairs and improvements to dressing rooms, platform, and swimming tank, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 10, after the words "and so forth," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For general repairs to cadet camp, including camp grounds, repairs to tent platforms, painting, shower baths, and underground sinks, etc., to be immediately available, $1,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that amendment put in because of the fact that they spent $1,000 more than last year's appropriation?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; it is not for a deficiency. They want to get ready for the coming spring and summer encampment. As frequently happens, they want to begin work just as soon as the bill becomes a law. That is the only reason, I will state to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. As the Senator knows, there is a way under some of the appropriation bills of putting in appropriations to be immediately available, and it is done for no other purpose than to pay a deficit.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I know that, but that is not the case here, I will state to the Senator.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 12, after the word "camp," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For 100 new tent floors for cadet camp, to be immediately available, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous items and incidental expenses," on page 22, line 26, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$1,400" and insert "$1,500," so as to make the clause read:

Purchase of instruments for band and repairs to same; for purchase of reeds, pads, strings, and other materials necessary for brass, wood, wind, and string instruments; for purchase of music stands and other equipments; for purchase of music for military band and orchestra and for extra parts; and for contingent expenses not otherwise provided for; all to be purchased in open market on order of superintendent, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 9, after the word "bathhouses," to strike out "$11,000" and insert "$11,410," so as to make the clause read:

For the policing of barracks and bathhouses, $11,410, $400 of which is made immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 12, after the word "barracks," to strike out "$2,850" and insert "$3,600," so as to make the clause read:

For supplying light and plain furniture to cadets' barracks, $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 22, after the word "appropriations," to insert: "Provided further, That so much of section 96 of the act approved January 12, 1895, as requires envelopes for official use to be purchased under contracts made by the Postmaster General, shall not apply to the purchase of envelopes from any of the foregoing appropriations."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the object of the amendment I suppose is to change the printing law so that the envelopes can be purchased outside, not under the contract made by the Postmaster General. I want to have some explanation as to why that amendment should be adopted changing existing law, because I doubt very much whether the provision should be allowed to pass.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say, if the Senator will permit me, Mr. President, that the reason they give for this provision is that they use file envelopes, a different class of envelopes, showing the subject, and they are different from the class of envelopes usually supplied by the Postmaster General. That is the only reason they gave for asking it.

Mr. SMOOT. Congress, in the last four or five years particularly, has undertaken to see that all supplies and all printing shall be obtained from one source. We have stopped a great deal of the printing in different sections of the country that cost the Government sometimes 150 per cent more than if printed here at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator it is not a very important or essential provision, and I do not care to insist on it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Buildings and grounds," on page 25, after line 15, to insert:

For repairs to cadet mess building, $2,050.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 27, to insert:

For grading and granolithic paving in area of the south cadet barracks, to be immediately available, $10,527.

Mr. SMOOT. Was that amount estimated for by the department?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It was estimated for, but not allowed by the House. I will say to the Senator that the old pavement has been there for a great many years, and it is in a very much worse condition than the pavement to the east of this Capitol, because the system had not been improved for paving then, and the estimate is for repairs to put it in order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 5, to insert:

For increasing the efficiency of the power plant: For two 440-horsepower boilers complete with settings; for piping and connections for same; for replacing eight defective gate valves with globes; and making necessary alterations in piping in connection therewith, $19,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 10, to insert:

Repairs and extensions to docks and wharves at West Point, N. Y.: For extensions, repair, and maintenance of south dock and wharf, including all necessary labor and material therefor, fuel for waiting rooms, and water for flushing urinals and closets, painting, repairs, brooms, shovels, etc., $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 20, after the word "wharf," to insert "and ferry slip at West Point, N. Y.," so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of War is authorized to have collected from vessels using the wharf and ferry slip at West Point, N. Y., such wharfage dues as he may deem just, reasonable, and necessary, the same to be paid at the time of landing to the post quartermaster or his authorized agent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 4, to insert:

Hereafter printing, binding, and blank books required for the use of the United States Military Academy may be done or procured elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office when in the opinion of the Secretary of War such work can be more advantageously done or procured locally, the cost thereof to be paid from the proper appropriation or appropriations made for the Military Academy.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I concede that the point is well taken, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that the point is well taken and that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Have all the committee amendments been disposed of?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The committee has no further amendment to offer.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 10, after the word "admitted" insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reappoint as cadets at the United States Military Academy, without regard to age or the existence of vacancies, Charles August Meyer and Clifford Hildebrandt Tate.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from New Jersey to kindly explain why that amendment should be adopted.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The facts of the case briefly are these: These two young men are from my State. They were cadets at West Point and had a most exceptional record for deportment and ability and all the other requirements. They served nearly three years. Their matter was brought up last year before the military board. It passed the military board and the measure passed the Senate. It then went over to the House, but owing to the exceeding crush of business at that time it was impossible to get it through.

On behalf of these young men I appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs, and the action for the reinstatement of these men had the approbation of the entire committee. I now plead that these young men, whose conduct was exemplary in the academy, having failed only slightly on analytic geometry, instead of being discharged nolens volens and prevented from serving their country, which was the ambition of their lives, may be reinstated or put back so that they may begin again and have another trial.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason for their discharge is on account of the fact that they failed in one study, does the Senator say?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. They failed slightly on analytic geometry. I have a letter here which I would like to have the Senator and the Senate hear. It seems to me that it presents their case in a way such as to justify my proposition, and I believe will induce the vote of every Senator here. I ask that this letter addressed to myself from one of these young men may be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. I will ask the Senator if their conduct was such that they received demerits sufficient to call for their discharge?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No, sir; their conduct was most exemplary.

Mr. SMOOT. There was no charge of that kind against them?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It was nothing of that kind. There are precedents for this action. I recall, as doubtless the Senator will, the reinstatement of cadets. He will doubtless recall the instance at Fort Myer some two or three years ago where, I think, three young men were guilty of insubordination to a degree of intoxication, and they were removed, and through the action of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], who indorsed the report in their favor, these young men were not discharged nolens volens but reinstated. That is simply what I ask here. I do not know that it is necessary to have the letter read, but——

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be put in the RECORD.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to have this pleading letter of the young man read, but let it go into the RECORD without reading. I do not want to take the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD without reading, and without objection the amendment will be agreed to.

The letter referred to is as follows:

ANDOVER, N. J., March 1½, 1914.

HON. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I submit to you the following statement, as requested by you, in connection with my reinstatement as a cadet to the United States Military Academy.

I entered the United States Military Academy on June 14, 1912. I passed off my first year successfully without having to take an examination in any subject, and was advanced to the next higher class. In my second year I found the mathematics more difficult than in the first year, and only in one branch of same, analytical geometry. After the mid-year general reviews were over I found that I was deficient in this subject and was compelled to take the final examination only in mathematics, having passed my other subjects successfully. My mother was very ill at home about this time, and this, in connection with the fact that I had never been ordered out for an examination before and the uncertainty of the outcome of the same, caused me considerable worriment.

The examination in analytical geometry was ordered for the morning after Christmas and that in descriptive geometry three days later. In anticipation of the examination I studied up to 12.30 Christmas night, contrary to regulations, in order to prepare for the final test. About 2.30 that morning I was awakened by two buckets of cold water, thrown on me by some underclassmen. This prevented me from sleeping the rest of that night. From this, and from the other reasons previously stated, it can be seen that I was not in the best of physical and mental condition to take the examination. I did not report the matter to the authorities, as I hardly believed that they would give me any consideration. I had two days to prepare for the examination in descriptive geometry, and I feel almost certain that I passed this one. There was no way of telling whether I had passed the examinations or not until 12 days later, when an order was issued discharging me from the academy for being deficient in mathematics.

There was absolutely nothing against my conduct or character, as I had only 58 demerits from June 1 to December 1, which is considered good. Col. Townsley, the superintendent, also stated that I had made a favorable impression upon the tactical department, which department has charge of all the military and tactical work at the academy.

After my discharge I called upon Gen. Barry at Governors Island. He was the superintendent at the academy during part of my first year's course. He was surprised that I had not been turned back instead of being discharged, stating that during his administration at the academy he was always in favor of giving an upper classman a second trial. In connection with this he wrote to Col. Townsley, recommending that the academic board approve of my reappointment.

In view of all these facts, and willing, if necessary, to start all over again and thereby sacrifice two years, my reappointment by Congressman HART was not approved by the academic board. The reason given for not approving of my reappointment was that I had not made a favorable impression upon the majority of the members of the academic board. This statement was apparently based on the report of the assistant instructor of mathematics, who claimed that I appeared indifferent. In contradiction to this so-called indifference, I herewith submit a copy of a letter from my roommate, Mr. Finlay, to my father. I had roomed with Mr. Finlay for a year and a half at the academy, and he would be better qualified to judge my character than my former assistant instructor in mathematics, who saw me in the section room daily 1 hour and 20 minutes for a period of only four months.

I herewith submit a list of names of cadets discharged at different times in the past few years for deficiency in one or more subjects and whose reappointments have been approved by the academic board. From this you will see that the request of Congressman HART for the approval of my reappointment is nothing unusual and has been granted in numerous other cases. I would also draw your attention to the case of C. H. Evans, a member of my class, who was turned out for the examinations in both mathematics and French and failed in mathematics. He was not discharged, but turned back a year and given another trial. His standings in all subjects, with the exception of drill regulations, were lower than mine in the third class year.

It seems to be unreasonable because of my failure by a small margin in one subject, after having spent 19 months and complying with all the requirements at the academy, that I should not be given another chance to show that I can and will make good.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. A. MEYER.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 17th day of March, 1914.
[SEAL.] MORTON J. LUCHS,
Notary Public.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, House bill 20150.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. There are a number of Senators absent who I know desire to be here when the bill is considered, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator withhold that for just a moment?

Mr. GRONNA. I ask the Senator from Utah to withhold his demand.

Mr. SMOOT. For what purpose?

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to yield to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] to submit a report which will lead to no discussion whatever, he assures me.

Mr. SMOOT. I withhold it for the moment.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Montana for the purpose of presenting a report.

DRY-LAND AGRICULTURE IN NORTH DAKOTA.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 7648) to authorize an exchange of lands with the State of North Dakota for promotion of experiments in dry-land agriculture, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1047) thereon.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield, with the understanding that the procedure will lead to no discussion.

Mr. GRONNA. It can not possibly lead to any discussion. The purpose of the bill is to authorize the State of North Dakota to transfer one section of school land for an experimental station. The bill was drawn by the Secretary of Agriculture. It has the recommendation of the Agricultural Department, and is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, and it is a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Lands. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments of the committee were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out the words "January 26" and insert "February 6," and in line 10, after the word "vacant," to insert "survey unreserved," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon receipt of a proper deed from the State of North Dakota, executed under authority of the act of its legislative assembly, approved February 6, 1915, reconveying to the United States title to section 16, township 138 north, range 81 west, fifth principal meridian, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue patents to said State for such vacant, surveyed, unreserved, unoccupied, nonmineral public lands as may be selected by said State within its boundaries, not exceeding 1,280 acres in aggregate area, and said section, when so reconveyed, shall not be subject to settlement, location, entry, or selection under the public-land laws, but shall be reserved for the use of the Department of Agriculture in carrying on experiments in dry-land agriculture at the Northern Great Plains Field Station, Mandan, N. Dak.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	O'Gorman	Shields
Bankhead	Hollis	Oliver	Simmons
Bryan	James	Overman	Smith, Ariz.
Burleigh	Jones	Owen	Smith, Ga.
Burton	Kenyon	Page	Smith, Md.
Catron	Kern	Penrose	Smoot
Clapp	La Follette	Perkins	Stephenson
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Poindexter	Sterling
Clarke, Ark.	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Thomas
Colt	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Thompson
Culberson	Lewis	Root	Tillman
Dillingham	Lodge	Saulsbury	White
du Pont	McCumber	Shafroth	Works.
Fletcher	Myers	Sheppard
Gronna	Norris	Sherman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

WALTER DEAN.

Mr. MYERS. I was just permitted to submit a report from the Committee on Public Lands, and I now ask leave to submit another one. It will not take any time.

Mr. ASHURST. I want it understood that it does not displace the unfinished business, the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reception of the report? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 20427) to authorize the sale of certain land in Alabama to Walter Dean, and I submit a report (No. 1046) thereon.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. The department recommends it.

Mr. ASHURST. With the understanding that it leads to no discussion, I do not object.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a patent to Walter Dean, of Calhoun County, Ala., for the north half of section 24, township 14 south, range 7 east, Huntsville meridian, in the State of Alabama: Provided, That the said Dean shall within six months from approval hereof file his application for said tract and pay the register and receiver of the land office at Montgomery, Ala., the sum of $1.25 per acre therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION NEAR DUXBURY REEF, CAL.

Mr. WORKS. There is a short bill upon the calendar, but an important one and of some urgency. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 20977) to provide for the establishment of a life-saving station in the vicinity of Duxbury Reef, Cal. If it leads to any discussion I will not press it.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection, assuming that it will not lead to any discussion.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish a life-saving station in the vicinity of Duxbury Reef, or Bolinas Bay, Cal., at a cost not to exceed $12,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendments, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be adopted. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is a very important bill, and I ask that it be read in full as we proceed, for if pages of it are passed without reading many items that we desire to consider may be passed without being noticed. It will not take very long to read the bill, and I ask that it be read in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 3, line 6, after the date "1914," to insert "and to remain available until expended," so as to read:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, purchase and use of irrigation tools and appliances, water rights, ditches, lands necessary for canals, pipe lines, and reservoirs for Indian reservations and allotments, and for drainage and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods, or loss of water rights, including expenses of necessary surveys and investigations to determine the feasibility and estimated cost of new projects and power and reservoir sites on Indian reservations in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of the act of June 25, 1910, $250,000, reimbursable as provided in the act of August 1, 1914, and to remain available until expended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge why that amendment should be adopted? The amendment is on page 3, line 7, to insert the words "and to remain available until expended." Is not that changing existing conditions, and is it a proper thing in making an appropriation of $250,000 "for the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, purchase and use of irrigation tools and appliances," and so forth, to have a clause that it shall "remain available until expended"? If this provision is adopted and the $250,000 appropriated can be half used during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and if the next appropriation bill shall carry a similar amount, as it probably will, and if the same words are used, that can go on indefinitely, and the Congress of the United States will never know how much money is in hand for this purpose. It may be a piling up of appropriations from year to year. I want to ask the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] if he does not think that that is a bad piece of legislation? Whatever is required for each year Congress is perfectly willing to appropriate; but I do not believe it is good policy to appropriate money and to let it remain unexpended in any particular fund, and then in the next appropriation bill perhaps provide money for the same purpose, when there is an unexpended balance in the Treasury to the credit of the same fund.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I shall only make a very brief reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah. I can not evade, nor do I attempt to evade, the force of his observations, that Congress should at all times assume jurisdiction of unexpended amounts after the end of the fiscal year. This situation, however, is somewhat different because as the Senator will observe this is a reimbursable appropriation. It is reimbursable as provided in the act of August 6, 1914, and it is intended and expected that the whole sum of $250,000 will be necessary for this particular work. It is a part of a revolving appropriation. While it was not the intention of the committee by inserting this language to, what we might say, short-circuit Congress, nevertheless, in view of the fact that a careful investigation established that this amount would be necessary and it might not be the part of wisdom and good business judgment to expend it before the end of the fiscal year, we simply wanted to give the Interior Department the authority to use the unexpended balance after the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it is a reimbursable fund, but that does not take it out of the class of appropriations to which I have just referred. I do not believe that Congress would hesitate one minute to appropriate in the next Indian appropriation bill for the year 1917 whatever the department might ask; but I do believe that whatever sum is appropriated for this year, if not expended during the year, ought to lapse, and whatever is wanted for the year 1917 ought to be appropriated for next year.

Mr. President, this policy of appropriating money to remain available until expended used to be quite prevalent; but in late years one hardly ever sees that language in an appropriation bill. The policy is a bad one, it never ought to be encouraged; and I believe it will not hurt the beneficiaries of this item if it is not put into the appropriation bill; but, of course, if the Senator from Arizona insists upon the amendment, I do not want to say anything more about it. I do know, however, that as a policy or a principle it is wrong.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator, I wish merely to read to the Senate what the Indian Office has to say in regard to this matter, on page 23 of the House hearings. They there made the following observations. Mr. Meritt, in response to a question, said:

Yes, sir; there is always an unexpended balance from this appropriation. It is a continuing appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the trouble.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. Meritt continued:

It is necessarily so on account of the construction work.

I again say that I admit the force of the argument of the Senator from Utah, but I trust that this particular amendment may remain in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the amendment is agreed to I want to ask the Senator from Arizona a question or two in regard to it. Was a similar item carried in last year's appropriation bill?

Mr. ASHURST. In response to the question of the Senator from Nebraska, I will say that it was.

Mr. NORRIS. Has that all been expended?

Mr. ASHURST. All except that at the time the estimates were made there remained the sum of $122,624.42, and that estimate was made four months ago.

Mr. NORRIS. What was the amount of the appropriation last year?

Mr. ASHURST. It was $250,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, as a matter of fact, they only spent half of it?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; but that estimate was four months ago, and the fiscal year had only run for a very brief time.

Mr. NORRIS. Was the provision contained in last year's appropriation bill that the sum appropriated should remain available until expended?

Mr. ASHURST. It was.

Mr. NORRIS. Then let us see what we have now. We shall have in this fund, if we appropriate this sum, $250,000 and $122,000 of last year's appropriation, making $372,000.

Mr. ASHURST. But the Senator will bear in mind that the unexpended balance of $122,624 when the estimates were made was, as I have stated, four months ago. Of course, that fund has been rapidly depleted and has been actively drawn upon since that time.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona something about the work that has been done with this money. Where has it been expended? What has been done with it?

Mr. ASHURST. I will, as briefly as I may, give the Senator an analysis of the manner in which and the purposes for which this fund is being expended:

Analysis of expenditures.

Salaries, wages, etc	$234,222.94
Traveling expenses	13,425.42
Transportation of supplies	7,583.67
Telegraph and telephone service	497.95
Printing, binding, and advertising	299.08
Forage	1,040.16
Fuel	1,539.48
Stationery and office supplies	1,178.71
Equipment, material, etc	57,730.80
Rent	201.83
Geological Survey, gauging stations, etc	10,150.47
Miscellaneous	559.59
	328,430.10

As I said before, this has been a reimbursable, continuing appropriation. Now, I will read to the Senator from page 12 of the House hearings. Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, addressing the House committee, said:

GENERAL FUND, IRRIGATION INDIAN RESERVATIONS, REIMBURSABLE, $295,700.

This fund, which is reimbursable where the Indians have adequate funds to repay the Government, is a very important one. It is for work on various reservations and allotments where the Indians have no money available to construct and maintain the irrigation works necessary for the cultivation of the land. It provides for irrigation, drainage, and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods, and is the only appropriation available for use in emergency work such as extraordinary repairs, and that the necessity for which arises from unusual weather conditions. It is used also to pay the annual reclamation and maintenance charges on land allotted to Paiute Indians irrigable under Truckee-Carson project, Nevada, of the United States Reclamation Service.

From this fund is paid the expenses of the chief assistant inspectors of irrigation and a large part of the expenses of the superintendents of irrigation in charge of the various districts. It is necessary for the payment of the superintendent of irrigation to handle water-right matters and the field-cost accountant.

The field work is divided into five principal districts, and the work proposed to be done with the amount as shown by the estimates for expenses of the organization, construction, and maintenance of irrigation systems, drainage and protection of irrigable lands from damage by floods or loss of water rights, and surveys to determine the feasibility and estimated cost of new projects, and power and reservoir possibilities on Indian lands appears in the following table:

The tables which are comprised in several pages are then set out. In brief, I wish to conclude by saying that the committee regards this as a very important appropriation, and the money is used for the purposes which I have indicated to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator's explanation makes it very plain that it is a very important appropriation. He has given us some very valuable information in regard to it. I notice, however, that the total expenditure stated exceeds by more than $50,000 the amount of the appropriation for last year. Was there something in the fund remaining from a preceding year?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. There was undoubtedly an unexpended balance coming over, as this is a provision that is contained, I think, in every Indian appropriation bill with reference to this item. The Senator in charge of the bill, I think, was mistaken as to the amount appropriated last year.

Mr. ASHURST. I find on examination that I was mistaken.

Mr. CLAPP. It was $335,000, which was a very large appropriation.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, there is $125,000 left, and there was $325,000 spent.

Mr. CLAPP. The appropriation was $335,000——

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. Which would cover the point raised by the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Not quite. The appropriation was $335,000; they spent $325,000, and yet they had $125,000 left.

Mr. CLAPP. That was undoubtedly——

Mr. NORRIS. So there must have been $115,000 which they got somewhere else.

Mr. CLAPP. No; $90,000, which probably came over from the year preceding.

Mr. NORRIS. I was trying to find out where they got the balance of that money.

Mr. CLAPP. The act of the preceding year contains this same provision. I think it has been in the bill ever since I have known anything of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask a further question about it. These amounts are reimbursable?

Mr. CLAPP. Some of them are.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, they are reimbursable, as I understand, in all instances where the Indians have any money out of which reimbursement can be made.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Account is kept, I presume, of how much is expended under this appropriation on each project?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. And charged up against that particular tribe?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. There was one question which I asked the chairman which he did not explain, and that was, Where is the money used?

Mr. CLAPP. That would require a detailed analysis.

Mr. NORRIS. I only want a general account of it. I merely want to get a general idea of where this money is expended.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there are five districts in which this money is expended. The first is called district No. 1. There are subdivisions of the district. Under district No. 1 there is the Yakima (Wash.) project, which has an area possible of irrigation of 5,000 acres. The area now irrigated by the Indians is 454 acres. The cost of the project to date has been $59,285.22. There are many other important details which I will omit, because I presume the Senator would not care to have them all.

In the same district is the Round Valley (Cal.) project, concerning which I read the following:

Area to be affected, 5,000 acres.
Indians to be affected, 1,000.
Indians on the reservation, 1,528.
No expenditures from irrigation funds heretofore; some work has been done by the agency.

In that same district I find the Warm Springs Reservation, Oreg., concerning which I read the following:

Land that may be irrigated, 2,700 acres.
Indian allotments to be affected, 35.
No expenditures made for irrigation.

In the same district there is the Klamath Indian Reservation, Oreg.

Then, in district No. 2, under the heading "Nevada, repayment, reclamation charges, Carson Sink," I read the following:

Land irrigable, 4,640 acres.
Indians benefited, 463.

In the same district there is the project at Fort Lapwai, Idaho, concerning which the following figures are given:

Idaho, Fort Lapwai.

Expended previous to 1910	$2,995.70
Water suit	1,318.93
Domestic water supply	201.12
Irrigation, 1914	599.75
Irrigation, 1913	119.24
Total expense	5,234.74

In the same district is the Moapa River project, Nevada, as to which the following appears:

Census	119
Acreage under ditch	625
Cultivated area	125
Total expenditures to date	$8,200

In the same district I find the Pyramid Lake Reservation, Nev., concerning which I quote the following:

Total population	609
Cultivated by 200 Indians	1,000
Length of main canal—miles	5
Length of wooden flume—feet	1,082

In the same district is the Shivwits Reservation, in Utah, where $500 is needed to maintain and operate a small ditch system furnishing water.

In the same district is the Walker River Reservation, Nev., with a population of 500 Indians, and an area to be irrigated, when the work is completed, of 6,000 acres.

In the same district (No. 2) is the Nevada and Idaho Western Shoshone Reservation, with a total number of Indians of 579, with 480 acres irrigated at the present time and an acreage estimated to be possible of irrigation of 30,000.

In the same district a miscellaneous expense of $2,000 is required, which is intended to cover the expenses—salary, travel, and so forth—of the engineers and assistants incurred in the investigation of miscellaneous details at various points in the district.

In the same district is the Fort McDermitt Reservation, in Nevada, concerning which the following facts are given:

Number of Indians	340
Acreage under ditch	350
Cultivated at the present time	285
Expended to June 30, 1914	$3,500

Then I find the Wind River (ceded) Reservation in Wyoming, concerning which it is said:

On the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation there are under privately constructed ditches approximately 7,350 acres of allotted Indian land.

That is district No. 3. In that district there is also a requirement of $2,000 for a miscellaneous item for investigating the necessity, feasibility, and propriety of other projects.

Then there is the Gila River Reservation, Casa Blanca project, in Arizona, concerning which the following facts are given:

Number of Indians	2,500
Irrigated area under proposed project—acres	25,000 to 35,000
Cost when completed, per acre, approximately	$25
Value of irrigated lands, per acre	$150
Cost of completed project: Final estimate not complete, but will be approximately	$750,000

Then, there is the Mission Reservation in California, concerning which I quote as follows:

These reservations include the Augustine, Cabezon, Torres, and Martinez.
Total population, 253.
Irrigated area under wells, 350 acres.
Amount expended on construction to June 30, 1914, $28,844.

In the same district there will be found an item of $13,000 for miscellaneous expenses for investigating the necessity and propriety of other projects for the benefit of the Indians.

Then, reaching district No. 4, an expenditure of $10,000 is required in behalf of the nomadic Papagos. I quote as follows:

Number of Indians benefited, estimated, 4,500.
Country not reserved, but subject to squatter rights.
Amount expended to June 30, 1914, $4,321.

I will not continue further along this line, but will send to the Senator a copy of the House hearings for his information. The matter is set out at some length there.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator how much of this amount during the last year was actually reimbursed to the Government?

Mr. ASHURST. I am unable at this moment to give the Senator that information, because he will recall that the Indian appropriation bill making it reimbursable did not take effect until August 1, 1914. The estimates were made in October and manifestly there was such a short time between August 1 and October 1, that I have not the data, and it is not available now.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the act referred to in this paragraph?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator a further question. I suppose that act will give us the information, but I do not happen to have it here, and I wish he would briefly let the Senate know how the fund is to be reimbursed.

Mr. ASHURST. These funds are reimbursed on various reservations in different ways. For instance, I have one reservation in mind where a reimbursable appropriation of $15,000 was made for the purchase of stock for the benefit of the Indians. They repaid that reimbursable appropriation inside of six months.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I understand about the stock.

Mr. ASHURST. I have in mind another one——

Mr. NORRIS. But I mean, in connection with these irrigation projects, in what way does the Government get back the money that is appropriated in this particular item?

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator wish information as to how this specific appropriation is reimbursed?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. That comes about, as I said before, in various ways on various reservations. Upon some of them, as the Senator knows, some Indian lands are irrigated and some lands belonging to the whites. Frequently water rights are sold to the whites or leased to them, as the case may be. It seems to me wise that the whites and the Indians shall have water rights together in order that the Indians may learn the art of irrigation from the whites. These rights are sold under carefully safeguarded methods of procedure, and the funds thereby obtained are used to reimburse this reimbursable fund.

I have in mind also another place where the produce—the truck from the gardens—the crops are sold and a part of the proceeds thereof taken to repay the reimbursable appropriation; but the department has always been very careful not to be harsh with any Indian in an effort to secure a speedy repayment of the reimbursable funds.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood that sometimes it occurs where the Indians have no funds out of which the reimbursements can be made—that there is in effect no reimbursement—but from the Senator's explanation I would get the idea that in all cases there would take place a reimbursement if at any time in the future there was produced off the land anything from which reimbursement could be made. Does this money become a lien in any way on the Indian's land or other property?

Mr. ASHURST. Well, that of course is a question of law the Senator propounds to me. In my judgment, it is not a lien that can be enforced by the Government or by any individual.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I understand that——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. LANE. I understand that that is exactly what it is, and that has always been the explanation given to me, the land of the Indian, the entire reservation or so much thereof as may be in control of the Government, is pledged for the repayment of these funds to the Government. The way they proceed to recover the fund is by the sale of lands lying under the reclamation project to whites at a certain price fixed by the Government, as a rule.

Mr. NORRIS. This land is the Indians' land?

Mr. LANE. It is the Indians' land. The Indians' land is pledged for the loan made by the Government. It is complained by many Indians that the lands of those Indians who have been given allotments upon high ground which never can be irrigated are also held for repayment with the lands of those Indians whose allotments are made under the ditches. The department is trying to correct that; but the fact, as I understand it, is that the money is repaid from the sale of the Indian's land. The Indian is allotted small tracts, such as he is considered capable of farming, and his reservation is restricted by the amount of land which is sold to pay for the irrigation scheme.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, if he will give his attention to the amendment, commencing on line 23, page 3, which I will ask the Secretary to read, he will see exactly that it is set out how returns shall be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided further, That hereafter the proceeds of sales of material utilized for temporary irrigation work and structures shall be covered into the appropriation made therefor and be available for the purpose of the appropriation: Provided further, That the rights of the United States to water for use on Indian reservations are hereby confirmed for use on land to Indians in severalty: Provided further, That for lands irrigable under any irrigation system or project within the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Secretary of the Interior may fix maintenance and operation charges, which shall be paid as he may direct, such payments to be available for use in maintaining and operating the project or system for which collected: Provided further, That irrigable land allotted to Indians in severalty may be leased for cultivation under irrigation for a term not exceeding 10 years, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and he is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying this provision into full force and effect.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. LANE. That is a new provision, is it not, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska was recognized. Does he yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I want to say, in regard to the provision which has just been read, that the Indians are very much dissatisfied with this provision. They say that the returns from rental belong to them. This provision directs that they be used for maintenance and operating charges of the irrigation system. I have an idea that they feel that this law is not constitutional; that it is contrary to treaties; that it is open to the objection that it is defrauding them of property which they actually own.

Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota says that the rents go to them. I read:

Provided further, That for lands irrigable under any irrigation system or project within the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Indian Affairs the Secretary of the Interior may fix maintenance and operation charges, which shall be paid as he may direct, such payments to be available for use in maintaining and operating the project or system for which collected.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me a moment? That is true. That is for the cost and maintenance and operation of the system. Then the same section goes on to provide:

That irrigable land allotted to Indians in severalty may be leased for cultivation under irrigation for a term not exceeding 10 years, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and he is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying this provision into full force and effect.

The provision does not take the rental of the Indian's individually allotted irrigable lands away from him. There are two provisions here.

Mr. PAGE. What is done with that?

Mr. CLAPP. Why, that would naturally go to the Indian, of course. It would require no law. The moment an Indian is allotted a piece of land and the Government leases that land, without any law at all, the rental goes to the Indian, unless there is some specific provision to divert it. Now, the provision for the cost of maintenance is found in lines 4 to 10, which apply to the cost of maintenance and operation. That is for lands that may be taken by white people as well as Indians; but whenever the Indian's allotted irrigation district is leased, the rental would go to the Indian.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, the Senator may be right, but here is the language. It reads very plainly, and yet it is certainly ambiguous if the Senator from Minnesota is correct:

Provided further, That the rights of the United States to water for use on Indian reservations are hereby confirmed for use on land to Indians in severalty: Provided further, That for lands irrigable under any irrigation system or project within the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Indian Affairs the Secretary of the Interior may fix maintenance and operation charges, which shall be paid as he may direct, such payments to be available for use in maintaining and operating the project or system for which collected.

It is true that after the lands have been alloted the Indian receives the benefit from the rental, but in the case of the land owned in severalty he does not.

Mr. CLAPP. Why, Mr. President, there is no authorization for the leasing of irrigated lands owned in severalty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the question before the Senate is the adoption of the amendment in line 7, page 3. Is there objection to that amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was using this amendment in an endeavor to get some information in regard to the matter, which I think is perfectly proper.

Mr. FALL. I do not think it is possible to vote intelligently upon the amendment now pending unless this entire provision is understood. It all goes together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was simply calling attention to the fact that the second amendment, and not the one now pending, was being discussed.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I do not know who has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was recognized and yielded to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. I am perfectly willing to yield the floor. I am simply trying to get some information about this matter.

Mr. FALL. I simply want to ask a question along the line of that asked by the Senator from Minnesota. It seems to be the impression of that Senator that the irrigable lands held in severalty are not leased. The last portion of this amendment distinctly provides that they shall be leased. It does not provide that they may be leased by the Indian, but provides that they may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior; nor does it provide who shall receive the benefit of any such lease at all. The Senator's idea is that without such provision the proceeds of the lease naturally go to the Indian. Now, without such provision the natural supposition would be that the Indian had the right to lease his own lands which belong to him, and possibly with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; but this provision does not cover that at all. By this provision the Secretary of the Interior makes the lease, and not the Indian at all.

Mr. CLAPP. First, I want to correct my statement, if I used the word "severalty." I meant in tribal ownership, of course.

Mr. PAGE. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. CLAPP. That was an inadvertence. As to the other point, in the first place, to answer the question of the Senator from Nebraska, you have got to take into account the language on pages 3 and 4, and also the provisions of the act of August 1, 1914. The two of them read together make the provision for reimbursing this fund.

There could be no objection if any Senator desired to put in here a provision that this rental shall go to the allottee; but I do take it as elementary that where the Government leases the allotment of an individual Indian, in the absence of some provision authorizing the diversion of that rental money or lease money, it, of course, would stand to the credit of the individual allottee. There could be no objection, however, to a specific provision to that effect.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I want to suggest to him that, as this amendment stands, if adopted, the Indian himself has no voice at all in the leasing of his several allotment.

Mr. CLAPP. Because most of these Indians are Indians who are still under restrictions.

Mr. FALL. Then, why is it, Mr. President, that they put in this provision on lines 2 to 4?

Mr. CLAPP. That is, for the Government to make the application for the water in order to protect it for the use of the Indian.

Mr. FALL. That is exactly what it is not for, as I understand it. It is confirmation by Congress of the waters which might have belonged to the Indian had his allotment remained upon the reserve. In the event that a portion of the reserve, for instance, is thrown open and becomes public land, and settlers locate upon such public land, and there has been no appropriation of the waters for use upon these lands which were formerly allotted, but which have now become part of the public domain, the Indian is entitled to his allotment upon them. No appropriation has been made of any kind or character whatsoever. An apropriation may have been made under the law of the State, and beneficial use may have been had of these waters for 10 years by some citizen of the United States, and now you are confirming to the Government the right to take away from that citizen the rights which he has acquired under the local law and by custom and by actual use.

Mr. CLAPP. Why, no, Mr. President.

Mr. FALL. Then I should like to know what it is for.

Mr. CLAPP. I will tell the Senator. Congress can not change the law of appropriation of water nor interfere with the right. These appropriations are made for irrigation projects, and, of course, the water can not be appropriated in the first instance by the Indian Department or the United States acting through the Indian Department for the Indians' use in severalty. It is a general appropriation of the water of a stream by an irrigation project.

Mr. FALL. Under what law, Mr. President?

Mr. CLAPP. Under the law of the State, of course. It must be under the law of the State.

Mr. FALL. I will answer the Senator. If he does not want me to interrupt him now I will answer him later. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but we want to get at the truth of this thing, and the law. I shall undertake to show what it is, and what the custom is, when the Senator completes his statement.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, in order that these rights may be confirmed to the Indians in severalty, they not being citizens clothed with the power of citizenship as individuals to acquire the rights, most of them still being subject to a limitation upon alienation, this provision is put in here not that the rights of anybody else, not that the rights of a prior appropriator of the water, but "that the rights of the United States to water for use on Indian reservations are hereby confirmed for use on land to Indians in severalty."

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I do not object to any part of this language on the bottom of page 3 and the top of page 4 until we come down to the proviso on page 4.

I know that the Indians believe that we are wronging them by this provision. It is hardly necessary to say to the Senate that the Indians believe that in many of these matters of legislation they are practically without representation here. They feel that the white man is represented here by his Senator or his Representative. They complain, and I think justly, that the net result of this legislation is against them. For one, I want to protest against this class of legislation in general, such as we have commenced here in this bill to-day.

It seems to me very clear that in this proviso, from lines 4 to 16, we are legislating in an appropriation bill; and I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold that point. Just see the position it puts this matter in. We are making provision here for irrigation out of certain funds, and we make these funds reimbursable.

Mr. PAGE. I will withhold the point of order temporarily.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that we have not yet reached the amendment to which the Senator has addressed his point of order. The question before the Senate is the adoption of the committee amendment on page 3.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. The Senator has said that the United States makes appropriations of these waters under the local laws. I want to say to the Senator that there are three cases pending now in the United States courts—one in the United States court for the southern district of Colorado—in every one of which the United States has absolutely denied the jurisdiction of the local tribunal. The Interior Department have recently adopted that theory, and they are fighting every step of the attempt of a State to maintain its jurisdiction over any of the reclamation projects or any of the projects on an Indian reserve. They are objecting to the jurisdiction of the State courts, although the State laws provide the methods by which water rights may be obtained by the United States or by anyone for whom they are acting, or by individuals, and insisting that the United States is not subject to the local rules and regulations. They have insisted upon their right to remove every case from the State courts to the Federal courts for trial, not under the State laws; not under the local laws. Although the reclamation act directly provides that the United States shall operate under the local laws of the States, the Interior Department have filed objections in every case pending, with one of which I am thoroughly familiar, because it comes from my own State, to the jurisdiction of the State courts. Although Congress itself has said that they must submit to such jurisdiction, that case is now pending. The question has not yet been decided; but instead of complying with the local rules and regulations there they arrogate to themselves the right to make laws by means of the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior in defiance of the laws of Congress.

The Senator is mistaken again, if I can read the English language, about the last proviso—the one to which the Senator from Vermont is referring as being objectionable to the Indians. Instead of being allowed to receive the proceeds of the lease of their allotments in severalty, they are being deprived of some of their rights, because the Secretary of the Interior invariably takes a portion of the amount derived from the lease of those lands for the maintenance and operation of the ditch, whether it is a severalty allotment or whether it is the land in general under the irrigation proposition before it has been allotted. That is the process through which they are going; and the Secretary of the Interior here, by this provision, has the sole right to lease the severalty allotment of the Indian, although it may be as much his land under the law as is the farm owned by the chairman in his own State or land owned by the Senator who is defending this provision. There is no provision here that the Indian has any voice in the lease of his allotment. Who leases it? Under this provision the Secretary of the Interior. There is no requirement that the Indian shall be even consulted about his allotment. Under the broad wording of this section the Secretary of the Interior can take the allotment of any Indian made in severalty, and upon which he is now living, away from him and lease it for the full period of 10 years, and dispose of the proceeds in his discretion. That is the wording of this amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FALL. I have not concluded yet. I want to say, Mr. President, that I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I was not present at the time these provisions were put in this bill. I was absent from the city. I construe the legal effect of the first proviso, commencing in line 1 and ending in line 4, on page 4, in a different way from the Senator from Minnesota. I do not agree with his legal conclusions upon that proposition, as I said a few moments ago in interrupting him.

I want to protect the Indian absolutely in every right which he has. I want to protect him in his property, and at the same time I want to protect the citizens of the United States on the public domain of the United States. As it happens, with due respect to the Senator, whose great ability and familiarity with questions of this kind I fully recognize, I have been dragged through the United States court in just exactly such a matter as will be covered by this provision.

There are two or three suits which have been instituted by people in my State to quiet the title to their water appropriation. In one case the Indians on the Mescalero Apache Reservation were allowed, or compelled, by their agents to construct new ditches for the use of an additional amount of water which never had been used by the Indians. More than 50 years before that a settlement had been made by citizens of the United States at the mouth of the canyon down which these waters ran. A town had been established, a town site selected under the laws of the United States, lands taken up under the desert-land act and acquired under the homestead act and other public-land laws of the United States. Appropriations for every drop of water had been made and the water had been beneficially used by the appropriators, citizens of the United States. About 8 acres of land had been cultivated by the Indians, as to which they had a prior right to the use of the water, or a right equal to the rights of these appropriators below. Fifty years afterwards citizens are compelled to bring suit to establish their right to any water whatsoever. Ditches were taken out on the Indian reserve, carried up on the sides of the mountains, carried over the divide so that the waters used would never find their way back into the natural drainage, and the people below were deprived of the use of the water even for drinking purposes.

Suit was brought and finally an adjustment was had. The people were compelled to submit. They could not fight the United States Government. They were compelled to submit. The Indians acquired the use of 50 times as much water as they had ever appropriated or beneficially used, and it took away from the people below. Every step in that suit was fought by the attorney for the United States, and finally the question was raised as to the right of any one to sue the Indians, who had not been allotted their lands in severalty, because they had not received leave to sue the United States, and that, as a matter of fact, a suit against Indians in the position of the Mescaleros was a suit against the United States; and under threats of this character the people were compelled to sign a stipulation deeding away their rights. I am not going into details to show the injustice of it and that there were sufficient lands upon other portions of this reserve.

If the construction which the Senator places upon this proviso contained on page 4, to which I have just referred, is correct, then there is no need whatsoever for the proviso. If the law is as he states it there is no necessity whatsoever for putting in this proviso. If this proviso does not do exactly what I said it did where an allotment has been made, various reserves have been thrown open—one of the reserves of which the Senator is speaking and concerning which we have heard so much recently and for which one of these reimbursable appropriations is now being used. A portion of the reserve has been thrown open after allotments have been made. Then it becomes public domain, except that the Indians have their segregated allotments. Citizens have filed there upon lands and upon water rights, and the effect of this amendment, as I construe it, would be to say that citizens who have acquired prior rights to water would now be deprived of it because at some time the United States had jurisdiction over those waters.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I can not understand how there is any conflict between the Senator and myself as to the law upon this subject.

Mr. FALL. There is not if the Senator agrees with me.

Mr. CLAPP. I think I agree with the Senator. My statement was that we could gain no rights against prior appropriations by this act or any act that we passed; that the purpose of this provision was that where the Government had made this appropriation by laying out and instituting an irrigation project it carried over to the individual Indians, when they came to have their allotments made of the irrigable land, the water rights that the United States acquired.

Now, I do not think the United States—and I am not responsible for these suits that are being brought, of course—can add anything to its rights against either a State or prior appropriation by the citizens of a State of the water of a river.

Mr. FALL. Suppose, however, that after waters have run off the reservation and have been acquired under the local laws and customs by appropriators and have been beneficially used until even the statute of limitations has run in favor of the appropriators the United States Government lays out a system of irrigation on the Indian reserve, the stream upon which the prior appropriations have been made by the citizens arising on or running through the Indian reserve. The United States Government, then, without going before the local tribunal and making its appropriation exactly as the American citizen has to do, simply lays out, under authority of Congress, an irrigation scheme upon the reserve. Suppose they take all the water, what is the recourse of the citizen?

Mr. CLAPP. Above the place where appropriation has actually been made by a citizen? Could they do that?

Mr. FALL. They do do it.

Mr. CLAPP. I am not speaking of what they are trying to do. I am speaking of their legal rights.

Mr. FALL. Well, then, what is the recourse of the citizen if they do?

Mr. CLAPP. I suppose he would have to go to law.

Mr. FALL. How are you going to sue the United States? In what tribunal? Where? Under what law?

Mr. CLAPP. The citizen could sue the individual property owner when the land was divided up.

Mr. FALL. Exactly; and you can sue the United States with the permission of the United States, and without it you can not.

Mr. CLAPP. But it does not seem to me that this enlarges one iota——

Mr. FALL. Well, then, let us leave it out.

Mr. CLAPP. No; for this reason: I have no more interest in it than the Senator has.

Mr. FALL. Certainly not. I understand the Senator has no personal interest in it.

Mr. CLAPP. We both want the same thing, of course; but it occurs to me that where the Government has gone on and made this project, laid it out and initiated it, it may be desirable, in transferring and dividing up that project, segregating it, and making the allotments to the individual Indians, that the use of the water which the Government obtained through the Indian Office with the Indian tribe by the general system that it initiated is transferred to and confirmed in the individual Indian. That is my understanding of the situation.

Mr. FALL. Let me give the Senator a concrete illustration of just what the United States is doing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. To refer again for a moment to the reclamation act, under the general reclamation act, under the provisions of which the Government is constructing reservoirs and irrigating lands in the western country, it is specifically provided by Congress that the Government of the United States must subject itself to the local jurisdiction. Very well. In the case of the Hondo project in New Mexico—which is an absolute, miserable failure, after costing the taxpayers of this country several hundred thousand dollars, and it is so admitted—a suit was brought, and the local rules and regulations as to water rights invoked by the people of New Mexico, and the jurisdiction of the court denied and the jurisdiction of the State denied. That case is now pending, and I am informed directly from the Interior Department that they propose to take that position in every case of the kind hereafter arising. That suit is now pending in the southern district of Colorado.

Mr. CLAPP. Would that have relation to the language here?

Mr. FALL. Oh, no, Mr. President; it would not, because here we do not even provide that the local jurisdiction shall remain in the State courts. We are not guarding the rights of the people here, as we did in the reclamation act, by compelling the United States to comply with the local rules and regulations and submit their case to the local courts. In that act we did so. That act, however, has been defied, and in this act we do not attempt to do it.

Mr. CLAPP. Taking the individual cases to which the Senator refers, is there anything in this language that relates to those cases?

Mr. FALL. The Senator asks me a question which I will answer frankly. I think there was some case of exactly this kind in the mind of whoever drew this amendment or whoever inspired it; that there is some conflict, and necessarily must be, between the parties as to prior appropriations, and that they are now taking it out of the jurisdiction of the local tribunal.

Mr. ASHURST. Did the Senator address an inquiry as to the committee amendment?

Mr. FALL. No; I said it must be intended to cover a case of that kind—to take away from the local court jurisdiction they otherwise would have.

Mr. CLAPP. I can not spell out of this language any jurisdictional question, that the rights of the United States to water for use on Indian reservations are hereby confirmed for use on lands of the Indians in severalty.

Mr. FALL. How long do those rights last, rights which the United States may have that may be disputed by other appropriators? There may be a disputed question of right. You are confirming a right to one party as against the contestant, and then you are putting him in a jurisdiction foreign to his State.

Mr. CLAPP. There are two questions now involved by the Senator's statement. I will take them in the inverse order in which they were stated. I do not see how we would give jurisdiction. If there are disputed rights, unless the right is in the United States, it is not confirmed.

Mr. FALL. Congress can confirm a right upon an Indian reservation, because Congress has jurisdiction at this time upon the Indian reservation. Congress has undertaken in such cases as I have mentioned to confer jurisdiction on the local courts, and that power of Congress has been defied. Now you are undertaking to absolutely deprive the local court of jurisdiction to try these cases at bar.

Mr. CLAPP. Let me ask the Senator this question: The Government, through the Indian Office, we will say, has attempted to make an appropriation of water upon a stream from which water may be drawn for irrigation, but it has failed to comply with the law, or there are alleged prior appropriation rights existing. Now, does the Senator claim that Congress can settle that question by an act using the language confirming the right? Clearly not. If that appropriation has not been made according to law it is not valid. If there are conflicting rights which under the law have precedence over the attempt of the Government to appropriate the water no act of Congress can settle that controversy.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator, why does he want this act? What is the purpose of it?

Mr. CLAPP. As I said before, the Indian Department, acting for a tribe collectively, makes an effort at the appropriation of water and initiate an irrigation project. That is done for the tribe. In the course of time the tribal relation is dissolved, especially as to the ownership of property, and this land that has been placed under irrigation is divided up into 20, 40, or 80 acre tracts and each tract allotted to an Indian in severalty. Now, that the right which the Government secured by the appropriation, by the initiation of the irrigation project, may pass to the allottee in his individual capacity, this provides that the rights of the United States to water for use on the Indian reservation are hereby confirmed to the use of the land that the Indian holds in severalty. That is evidently the purpose of the provision.

Mr. FALL. Evidently.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CLAPP. I am taking a good deal of the time of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GRONNA. I was just going to say to the Senator from Minnesota that we are discussing an amendment which begins at the bottom of page 3 and ends at line 16, page 4. I believe there is some objection to that amendment. It is claimed that it violates property rights and takes Indian allotments for lease without their consent.

Mr. CLAPP. I will answer that.

Mr. GRONNA. The question before the Senate is the amendment on page 3, line 7. That has not yet been disposed of.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course this law proceeds upon the theory that as to an Indian whose right of alienation has not become perfect and to whom there is a restriction upon his right of alienation the authority to lease is vested in the Secretary of the Interior. I think every law that has ever been passed for the leasing of the land of an Indian who is still subject to restriction vests the authority in the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota if he is quite sure as to the last proposition that this pertains only to lands allotted but which have not yet been patented? Does not the broad language of the last provision exclude that idea so that it will pertain to any Indian lands that are held in severalty, whether patented or not?

Mr. CLAPP. It could not. Certain laws become self-operative. If an Indian has had his restrictions removed and has his final patent in fee as distinguished from a trust patent, Congress could not reach over and take jurisdiction of that Indian's property with reference to leasing or selling. Congress must do that within the period of restriction prescribed or existing by previous extension of the time of restriction.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the last proviso in this proposed amendment. We have had some trouble on the Crow Reservation in reference to the leasing of the tribal lands which also included the leasing of the allotments of the Indians. It occurs to me, Mr. President, that this proposition may be desirable providing it has the approval of the Indian allottee.

I was not present in the committee, evidently, when this amendment was adopted. If I had been, I certainly should have objected to a general provision to lease the irrigated allotments of Indians without the consent or approval of the allottee. I have always assumed that when we irrigated Indian lands we did it for the benefit of the Indian; that we did it with the idea that the Indian was going to take advantage of his allotment and farm it. Yet here is a proposition which will permit the Secretary of the Interior to lease the allotments of the Indians which have been irrigated without any approval even of the owner of the allotment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I observe that this bill is full of general legislation. The Senator from Michigan is a member of the committee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am a member of the committee.

Mr. BRYAN. Why does he not raise a point of order on this general legislation?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; I do not know that I am prepared to raise it. I am not objecting to it generally. I want to amend the provision, however. I want a provision which will require the consent of the owner of the Indian allotment before his land is leased.

Mr. CLAPP. Before the Senator from Florida makes his point of order will he let me explain this provision, and I believe he will see not only the right of it but the necessity of this supplemental legislation.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it is only to save time.

Mr. CLAPP. Time!

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; time is valuable. Other Senators have told me they intend to raise a point of order, but they are withholding it so that Sentors may debate the bill, in which there is legislation on almost every page.

Mr. CLAPP. Let me tell the Senator what will happen.

Mr. BRYAN. Just a minute. I know very little about the Indian appropriation bill, but I see that it is full of general legislation. It is my understanding that if this general legislation is to be discussed, it will take two or three days to pass this bill. It would take very little time to make the appropriations. There is a place for general legislation, and, as a rule, it is not upon appropriation bills.

I want to say to the Senator from Minnesota that two or three Senators have told me that when this discussion is over they propose to raise a point of order. If it is to be done, why not do it now?

Mr. CLAPP. When they come to realize what the point of order means it may be they will not make the point of order. Will the Senator let me explain it for just a moment?

Mr. BRYAN. I will listen to the Senator if he does not talk very long. If he undertakes to make a long speech, I am going to raise the point of order if no one else does.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I have no more concern in the point of order than the Senator from Florida has. We have taken the property of the Indian, and we have advanced to a certain point with that property. We have started irrigation projects on these lands under a law that makes the cost of the project reimbursable from the funds of those Indians. Now, as those projects have developed and have reached a point where the land is to be utilized, if an Indian is unable to utilize his irrigation allotment he either will lose it, or at best certainly will lose the benefit of it, unless at this point in the development of the plan we authorize the leasing.

I want to say to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] that I am in hearty accord with his proposition to make it subject to the approval of the allottee. I think it is a good time to change that principle in legislation.

If the Senator from Florida will bear with me a moment further, this provision on page 4 also provides the details of the manner in which this reimbursable provision shall be worked out.

Now, I want to say another word.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask the Senator if we have reached the amendment at the top of page 4?

Mr. CLAPP. In one sense, no; except the provision at the bottom of page 3 and top of page 4 is interwoven with the amendment on line 7 of page 3. It was to save time that they were discussed together.

Mr. BRYAN. Is the Committee on Indian Affairs divided on this amendment?

Mr. CLAPP. Not in the slightest, except that it has occurred, as it always occurs in a process of development of a matter, that the Senator from Michigan would put in the words "with the approval of the allottee." I do not think there is a member of the committee who would object——

Mr. ASHURST. There is no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Let us see if the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly it will be agreed to. I want to say to the Senator——

Mr. BRYAN. I wish to say to the Senator before he says anything to me that I have seen these Indian appropriation bills take a week for discussion.

Mr. CLAPP. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BRYAN. It has never been upon the items of appropriations. The bill for several years has been loaded down with general legislation, and in the economy of time a point of order should be made. We can not stay here three or four days considering the merits of the general legislation. In matters upon which the committee are agreed, if they are matters of importance, it might be well enough to waive the point of order; but if hours and hours are to be taken up in discussing general legislation, in the interests of time I am not going to sit here and submit to it; I am going to raise a point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. I say to the Senator from Florida, I think if there is a committee in the Senate where a man does penance in serving on it, it is the Committee on Indian Affairs. We are projecting ourselves constantly along a pathway we must more or less experiment upon. We have no given landmarks in advance.

Now, when you take the Indian in his tribal relation, where he is receiving every year so many annuities, so many pounds of pork and so many pounds of salt, it requires little legislation to administer his affairs, but when you segregate those Indians and put them on individual allotments, and take them by the hand and loan this one a little money and loan another some money to buy machinery with, and individualize the Indians, it requires a great deal of constructive legislation; and I think the Senator will bear witness it is impossible to get that legislation except upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRYAN. I can not agree to that altogether.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator will allow me to add in addition to what he says, I am no more in sympathy with delays than the Senator is, but here is a particular bill where there are certain things necessary to be done every year in connection with appropriations. Each new appropriation presents a new problem. If you are going to carry it out you have got in some way to protect the rights of the Indians. That, it seems to me, is absolutely necessary in the consideration of a bill of this kind.

Mr. BRYAN. That is one of the reasons I had in mind in addition to saving time. It does not seem to me that it is fair and just to the Indians in the consideration of an appropriation bill to put on legislation of a general nature that might vitally affect their interests and their rights.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is true, and they ought to be guarded. But we have also in this bill treaty items. We have practically to legislate in reference to appropriations in connection with treaty items.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me? I do not believe there is any opposition to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LANE. There is.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well, I will withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. LANE. I will say I do not think it cures the defect. I understood that there will be a point of order raised against this provision. I have been informed it does not cure the defect for the reason that the power is placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the maintenance and operation charges and that can be done in such a manner under administrations such as we have seen that it would be disastrous.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does not that apply to the administration of irrigation projects?

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Somebody has to do that. It has to be fixed by somebody.

Mr. LANE. I know; and so I say it has been done in the past in a way that has been disastrous to the Indian.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Unless that is done there can be no use of irrigated lands for an Indian.

Mr. LANE. Not unless you let him take care of himself.

Mr. ASHURST. Question!

Mr. LANE. Unless you turn it over to him and let him manage it through a council and fix his own charge.

Mr. JONES. With reference to the merits of allowing this land to be leased for 10 years, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether the department is in favor of this proposition?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rose a moment ago to state and should have stated before that this proposed amendment was drawn by the Interior Department, submitted to the committee as it now is, and was urged by the Interior Department.

Mr. JONES. I will state the reason why I asked the question.

We have a law under which the agricultural lands of the Indians may be rented for a period not exceeding 5 years. We have had that law for a long time. A good many years ago I got a provision passed allowing the leasing of allotted land on the Yakima Indian Reservation for not more than 10 years. Yet we have never been able to get a single lease approved for a period of 10 years. The department has refused to do it. It has been the policy of the Interior Department heretofore not to approve leases for any such term as that. That is the reason why I asked the question of the chairman. I wondered whether they had changed their ideas about it.

Now, I want to make a little further inquiry. In view of the language of this provision, which is not exactly as I thought at first, this thought has been suggested: Before the Indian was left out entirely in making leases when the department wanted to do it. I do not think that ought to be done. I want to say the great complaint which comes from the Indians on the Yakima Indian Reservation—and I refer to that because I am more familiar with it, as it is close to my home—is that they want to have the handling of money that comes from their leases.

Mr. ASHURST. I have just said that, as far as I am concerned, I have not the slightest opposition to such an amendment.

Mr. JONES. There has not been such an amendment suggested.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I propose to offer it.

Mr. JONES. I understood that the lease should be approved by the Secretary; but that does not dispose of the lease money. Here is the way they do on the Yakima Indian Reservation. They let an Indian have $5 a month or $10 a month, or whatever they think they ought to let him have. He complains of that. He thinks this land has been allotted to him and it is his. Some of those Indians have had their allotments for 10, 12, or 15 years, and they are pretty good business men. Yet they get only the small amount dribbled to them month by month and month by month, and they do not like it. I do not blame them for not liking it. So I thought it would be a much better policy if the Secretary would allow these Indians to have their rent money at least, unless they are dissipated or using it especially for that purpose. The leases on the Yakima Reservation, it is my recollection of the law, are made by the Indians simply subject to the approval of the Secretary, and the Secretary proposes such terms as he sees fit. At least the Indian ought to be first consulted with reference to the lease. He ought to make the lease, as a matter of fact.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection to that, but I do not want to offer the amendment if what the Senator from Florida says is true, that there are Senators here who are going to make a point of order on the proposition. If we are sure we can put it through, I should like to offer to perfect the amendment, because I think it is a most important one and quite important to the welfare of the Indian; but, as I said, I do not care to do it if there is to be a point of order made against it, because it is my judgment that it would be time wasted.

Mr. MYERS. I observe that the chairman of the committee awhile ago called for the question. I want to know what is the question? What amendment is before the Senate to be voted on?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment on page 3, line 7.

Mr. MYERS. Why not vote on it and get it disposed of before we go to the next amendment? I suggest that we vote on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the Senator was prepared to make a point of order, and if he does not do so I shall.

Mr. BRYAN. That is different, Mr. President.

Mr. FALL. I say I will make the point of order unless the Senator does.

Mr. BRYAN. If the point of order is going to be made, why not make it now, instead of waiting an hour or two? That is the point I have in view.

Mr. FALL. The amendment has not been read, I will say to the Senator. There is no desire on the part of the Senator from New Mexico to take up time. When we reach this provision which is subject to the point of order, I shall make it. It has not as yet been read, and so I have not yet made it. This provision has only been read for information, as I understand. Has the entire section been read?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir.

Mr. FALL. Then I make the point of order, Mr. President, against the proviso from the top of page 4 down to and including line 16 on the same page that those two provisos are general legislation.

Mr. LANE. At what point is that?

Mr. FALL. I refer to the two provisos beginning in line 1, on page 4. To the balance of it I have no objection at all.

Mr. THOMAS. Does that begin on line 4?

Mr. FALL. On line 1, page 4, of the two provisos, down to and including line 16 on that page. I make the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. JONES. I want to suggest that this is not only an appropriation bill to appropriate money, but it is to fulfill treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes. Therefore legislation to carry out those treaty stipulations would be in order on this bill.

Mr. BRYAN. This is an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The only question in the mind of the Chair is that this seems to be a point of order raised to a part of the amendment.

Mr. FALL. There are three distinct propositions. If the Chair will permit me for a moment, I think I can explain it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico ask for a division of the question?

Mr. FALL. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator raises a point of order on the proviso from line 4 to line 16.

Mr. FALL. On the provisos on page 4 from line 1 to line 16.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will sustain the point of order as to its being general legislation. The question is on agreeing to the first proviso. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and it is agreed to.

Mr. FALL. Did the Chair overrule the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Chair sustained the point of order.

Mr. FALL. Then I understand, if the point of order is sustained, the provisos are out.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Chair to the language on page 3, line 5, which is "reimbursable as provided in the act of August 1, 1914." That act provided that where the Indians had funds the reimbursement should be made out of those funds. The proviso, at least from line 4 to line 10, it seems to me, is carrying out the provisions of an existing law, furnishing the detailed method by which the reimbursement may be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There can not be any question of doubt that it is general legislation. It is in reference to how the irrigable lands of the Indians are to be allotted in severalty—the leases for cultivation, and all that.

Mr. CLAPP. General legislation, I understand, is not objectionable if it is for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of an existing treaty or of an existing law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has reference to an appropriation. It has not any reference to general legislation at all. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator having the bill in charge—the point of order having been sustained—does he still believe that the first part of that amendment should be agreed to? I refer to that part which reads as follows:

Provided further, That hereafter the proceeds of sales of material utilized for temporary irrigation work and structures shall be covered into the appropriation made therefor and be available for the purpose of the appropriation.

Does the Senator desire that part to remain in the bill, the other part having been stricken out?

Mr. ASHURST. That is the same provision that was in the appropriation bill of last year, and I trust the Senator from Utah will not make the point of order against it. I believe it is necessary to carry into full force and effect the provisions of the law. I therefore hope the point of order will not be made.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not rise to make the point of order; I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator, seeing that the point of order had been made on the remainder of the amendment, whether he really thought it was advisable to keep the first part of the amendment in the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. I think it is advisable to retain it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I shall make no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the remaining part of the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

For the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, $125,000.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to propose an amendment at that point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order of the Senate is that committee amendments shall first be considered.

Mr. OWEN. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 4, line 23, after the word "vaccination," to strike out "maintenance of hospitals and sanatoriums, for incidental and all other expenses for their proper conduct and management, including pay of employees, repairs, improvements, and for necessary expenses of transporting Indian patients to and from such hospitals and sanatoriums, and for the correction of sanitary defects in Indian homes, $350,000," and insert "$300,000: Provided, That not to exceed $90,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended in the erection and equipment of new hospitals for the use of Indians; and no hospital shall be constructed at a cost to exceed $15,000, including equipment," so as to make the clause read:

To relieve distress among Indians and to provide for their care and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including the purchase of vaccine and expense of vaccination, $300,000: Provided, That not to exceed $90,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended in the erection and equipment of new hospitals for the use of Indians; and no hospital shall be constructed at a cost to exceed $15,000, including equipment: Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually a detailed report as to all moneys expended in the erection and maintenance of hospitals and sanatoriums as provided for herein.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I notice that the committee has stricken out the provision for the maintenance of hospitals and sanitariums. In the last appropriation bill we passed, I think, $300,000 was appropriated for the very purpose of this paragraph, and we had $100,000 provided out of it for the erection of hospitals. Now, if we strike out the provision for maintenance of hospitals, how are we going to maintain them? Have we any hospitals constructed for the Indians, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee?

Mr. ASHURST. I will say, in reply to the Senator, that the provision to which he calls attention, and which has been stricken out, is provided for in another part of the bill.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the Senator how many hospitals had been constructed under the provision of the bill of last year, appropriating $100,000 of this fund now used for the construction of hospitals? I want to know how much of that money has been expended and how many hospitals have been erected.

Mr. ASHURST. A full statement of that expenditure will be found——

Mr. JONES. I should like to have it stated in a general way.

Mr. ASHURST. I will be very brief. The statement is found on page 29 of the House hearings, and is as follows:

Analysis of expenditures.

Salaries, wages, etc	$53,864.00
Traveling expenses	12,804.16

In the interest of time, I shall not read all of the items.

Mr. JONES. That is what I want, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. The locations of the hospitals are as follows:

These new institutions—

That is, the hospitals; and I will state that these estimates were made in October—

These new institutions will probably be located at the Turtle Mountain Indian School, Belcourt, N. Dak.; Blackfeet Indian School, Browning, Mont.; Pima Indian School, Sacaton, Ariz.; Mescalero Indian School, Mescalero, N. Mex.; at or near the San Xavier Indian School, Tucson, Ariz.; and Carson Indian School, Stewart, Nev.; also a contract has been made for the construction of a new hospital at the Laguna Pueblo under the jurisdiction of the Santa Fe Indian School. These will be ready for operation by July 1, 1915.

Mr. JONES. So, we have not as yet any hospitals constructed and completed under that appropriation?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, contracts have been let, the hospitals are being constructed, and they will be put into operation about the first of the next fiscal year.

Mr. JONES. Can the Senator point me to the item further on in the bill providing for the operation and maintenance of these hospitals?

Mr. ASHURST. I will do that as soon as I can find it.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Washington will pardon me for a moment, the matter was gone into very carefully by the committee, and provision is made for that in other parts of the bill. It will be difficult now to find and point out the separate items without taking considerable time, and I ask the Senator from Washington if he will not be willing to wait until we reach them.

Mr. JONES. Certainly; I will be glad to do so. I simply want to be sure that the matter is cared for.

Mr. ASHURST. It is cared for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

[Mr. SMITH of Arizona addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 17, after the word "children," to strike out "$1,440,000" and insert "$1,550,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for and for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, including not to exceed $40,000 for the support and education of deaf and dumb and blind Indian children, $1,550,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator why that increase of $110,000 was made?

Mr. ASHURST. I will state that that is in accordance with the estimate. A somewhat protracted hearing was held by the Senate committee and the House committee. It covers some eight pages of the House hearings; and it was ascertained that that amount, being the same as was estimated for last year, was necessary.

The distinguished Senator from Utah, in a question a moment ago, asked about the expenditures for the Papago Indians. Replying to that interrogatory propounded by the Senator, let me say that the department says:

This money—

Referring to the appropriation for the Papagoes—

This money is being expended; the schools to be established will be ready for use in the near future, and this will result in the enrollment of Navajo and Papago children whose education must be provided for by the use of this appropriation.

Of the Navajoes there are about 29,193 and of the Papagoes 6,965. Estimating upon a basis of 20 per cent, there would be of the Navajoes 5,838 school children and of the Papagoes 1,390 school children.

That, however, so far as the Papagoes may be concerned, will be somewhat lessened, because some of them go into the public schools, so I am advised.

Mr. SMOOT. The hearing in the House was held upon the increase to $1,550,000?

Mr. ASHURST. No; the hearings in the House resulted in the appropriation of $1,440,000, but the Senate committee increased it by $110,000.

Mr. SMOOT. But at the hearings in the House the $1,550,000 was asked for, and the House failed to grant it?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; the House did not come up to the estimates by $110,000, although the department estimated for the amount the Senate committee appropriated.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Utah that this is the same amount that was appropriated last year, and all of it was used by the 1st day of October, with the exception of $62,000. Of course every bit of that will be used up by the end of the fiscal year, so there is no increase whatever in the appropriation.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. I want to say generally in reference to the Indian appropriation bill that I have been in favor of liberality in the support of Indian schools. I know that there has been a disposition in several cases to cut down these appropriations. It seems to me that if we have a duty to perform that is especially pressing it is to see that the Indian has an opportunity to be educated—not well educated, perhaps, as we would speak of it were it a white school, but that he shall have an opportunity to become proficient in the ordinary lower grades of school work.

The number of Indians that must be educated is increasing from year to year, as I believe; and when the department ask, as they did this year, for the same and no more than they had last year, I felt that it ought to be granted. I still feel so. I think the $1,550,000 is none too large.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I will say for the information of the Senator who made the inquiry that I went upon one reservation and stayed for four days, and found, of the total population of children of school age of 900, that over 600 of them had no school to which to go. If we are going to educate them, let us do it. I do not know whether our methods will improve their general condition in the long run or not; but if we attempt it at all, let us do it right; otherwise, let us quit.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 6, on page 6, as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation, or any other appropriation provided for herein, except appropriations made pursuant to treaties, shall be used to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood whose parents are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they live and where there are adequate free school facilities provided and the facilities of the Indian schools are needed for pupils of more than one-fourth Indian blood: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the support of Indian day and industrial schools where specific appropriation is made: Provided further, That not more than $50,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not this amount of $50,000 is sufficient to pay the tuition that would be properly chargeable against the Indian children in the public schools?

Mr. ASHURST. I believe it is. It is distributed among the various States. The Senator will remember that last year a question was propounded by the distinguished senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] regarding that matter. It was ascertained that this was about the requisite sum to be distributed among the States.

Mr. JONES. Last year we appropriated only $20,000 for this purpose. Now we appropriate $50,000; and I wondered if the department had data from which they had determined that this $50,000 would cover the amount to be distributed among the States.

Mr. ASHURST. The sum of $50,000 is the amount estimated for; and I assume, of course, that that is the amount they require. They have not indicated that it is necessary to have a larger sum.

Mr. JONES. I know, but they might not feel it necessary to take care of all the proper charges in the different States, and that is what I wanted to ascertain—whether or not they have the data upon which they can determine the amount that they ought properly to pay in the different States for the public school facilities furnished in each.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; they have the data, and this is the amount at which they arrived.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 9, after the word "therewith," to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$440,000," so as to read:

For construction, lease, purchase, repair, and improvement of school and agency buildings, including sewer, water, and lighting systems in connection therewith, $440,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 5, after the word "Alaska," to insert "All moneys appropriated herein for school purposes among the Indians may be expended, without restriction as to per capita expenditure, for the annual support and education of any one pupil in any school," so as to make the clause read:

For collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian and public schools, and for placing school pupils, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of white families qualified to give them moral, industrial, and educational training, $72,000: Provided, That not exceeding $5,000 of this sum may be used for obtaining remunerative employment for Indian youths and, when necessary, for payment of transportation and other expenses to their places of employment. The provisions of this section shall also apply to native pupils of school age under 21 years of age brought from Alaska. All moneys appropriated herein for school purposes among the Indians may be expended, without restriction as to per capita expenditures, for the annual support and education of any one pupil in any school.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Upon the face of it, that is a most remarkable amendment. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill what the purpose of the amendment is. As it stands, this entire amount of millions of dollars can be expended upon one pupil, as I read it, if not more.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that provision has been carried in the Indian appropriation bill for many years. It has been found that in the various schools it is impossible to make these expenditures on a uniform basis. That is to say, the cost per capita at one school can not be the same in every case as the cost per capita at other schools; and it is merely intended to relieve them from embarrassment in the matter of administration.

Mr. THOMAS. If that is the purpose of it, it seems to me it is very unfortunately worded.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that that is the language that has been carried in the Indian appropriation bill for a good many years. If the Senator will permit me further, it was contained in the bill as reported to the House of Representatives, but I think was stricken out there perhaps on a point of order, a point of order being made in the House of Representatives against every provision in the bill that was subject to a point of order under the peculiar conditions that existed when the bill was being considered there.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph just read shall be a separate paragraph. It should be a separate paragraph.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no intention, in view of the explanation made by the Senator from Arkansas, of making a point of order against the amendment, although on general principles I believe that all general legislation should be eliminated from these bills; but, standing by itself, it appears to be a very remarkable amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will state further to the Senator that it was considered very carefully by the committee and the matter gone over fully, and the committee reached the conclusion that it was best to retain in the bill the provision which has been carried heretofore on that subject.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, I assume that it has been carefully considered, but it was so unique in its character that I wanted some explanation about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. May it be made a separate paragraph?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be made a separate paragraph.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 1, after the word "Indians," to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$450,000," so as to read:

For the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, and to educate Indians in the proper care of forests; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women and girls housekeeping and other household duties, for necessary traveling expenses of such matrons; and for furnishing necessary equipments and supplies and renting quarters for them where necessary; for the conducting of experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, cotton, and fruits, and for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; for necessary traveling expenses of such farmers and stockmen and for furnishing necessary equipment and supplies for them; and for superintending and directing farming and stock raising among Indians, $450,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the chairman of the committee whether this is not a new provision?

Mr. ASHURST. No; it has been carried in the bill. It was carried in the bill for the fiscal year 1915, the bill for 1914, and, if I remember correctly, in the bill for 1913. It is not a new provision at all. The amount of $450,000 is the amount estimated for by the department and the amount appropriated last year.

Mr. SMOOT. I have before me the appropriation bill for last year. I notice that there was the same amount of appropriation, but it was worded considerably different than it is this time. I suppose the object is the same.

Mr. ASHURST. The object is the same.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that there is quite a difference in the wording of it.

Mr. ASHURST. Only in form; not as to substance.

[Mr. SMITH of Arizona addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I suppose it is just as well to make no answer to items that are not up for a vote at this time, but I do not believe the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is in harmony with a majority of the sentiment in the United States. As to the first part of this section, which the Senator criticizes—namely, that relating to the education of Indians in the proper care of forests—of course there is no school that is maintained for that purpose, but the Indians live in the forest; they have some very valuable timber. Those forests are subject to fires; they are subject to destruction. It is the business of the United States to preserve the forests for the Indians just as much as it is to preserve the forests on the other public domain.

This is a proposition to teach in the schools with other lessons those modern ideas of civilization which would look to the preservation of the Indian's property. I repeat there is no school established for this particular purpose, but we have required of late that the department shall enumerate in detail what is taught and what is done in the schools. We are trying to find out what is done with every dollar of money that is appropriated by the Government. This is but one of the items that are enumerated as a part of the curriculum of an Indian school, and it seems to me that it is highly commendable.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I have heard with sincere regret the expression of disapprobation on the part of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] on the educational attitude of this country toward its Indian wards. It may be and probably is true among Indians as well as whites that many are not materially benefited by the class of education which they receive. The education of life is probably the best education they get. But we owe it to the Indian to give him as near as we can the same class of and as much education as we give to the white man. That can not be done, of course, in its entirety, but we certainly ought to strive toward that end.

I have no sympathy with the idea that the Indian is altogether bad, and that, therefore, we ought to leave him to go his bad way without attempting to educate him. It is true, as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has said, that we have asked the department to tell us not as to the general trend of education throughout all the Indian reservations but to tell us wherever any part of their money is used and the part used in certain sections of the country for the education of Indians and in the proper care of Indian forests.

It was my pleasure a few years ago to visit an Indian reservation in Wisconsin, the Menominee Reservation, an Indian reservation where there are hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of timber land. We have undertaken there to let the Indian conduct his business affairs. It is true we furnish a white superintendent, a white general manager, but there is an experiment in which we are attempting to see just how much the Indian can do for himself. He is working out the plan there of becoming a business man who will take care of his own reservation.

The Forestry Service sent their man there, and in the cutting of the timber on that reservation every tree is marked by the forester. They strive to educate those Indians so that that great quantity of Indian lands may be conserved that the Indians may from year to year take out the dead or matured timber, that he may remove the débris so that fires are not liable to occur. That is not perhaps a line of action that is pursued generally, but it is pursued in that reservation, and if we are faithful to our trust we will ask the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as he comes before our committee, to tell us what he has done in the way of educating the Indians, so that he may perform the duty that seems to be incumbent upon him there. That is the necessity for this particular sentence where it says "and to educate Indians in the proper care of forestry." It is not done generally, but it is done there. It is a proper thing to do, and we ought not to strike out this provision from the bill, in my judgment.

It is a proper thing to do, and we ought not to strike this clause from the bill, in my judgment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 19, after the word "three," to insert "permanent," and in the same line, after the words "Indian Service," to insert: "Provided further, That section 3709, Revised Statutes, in so far as that section requires that advertisement be made, shall apply only to those purchases and contracts for supplies or services, except personal services, for the Indian field service which exceed in amount the sum of $50 each, and section 23 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 861), is hereby amended accordingly."

So as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of goods and supplies for the Indian Service, including inspection, pay of necessary employees, and all other expenses connected therewith, including advertising, storage, and transportation of Indian goods and supplies, $300,000: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used for the maintenance of to exceed three permanent warehouses in the Indian Service: Provided further, That section 3709, Revised Statutes, in so far as that section requires that advertisement be made, shall apply only to those purchases and contracts for supplies or services, except personal services, for the Indian field service which exceed in amount the sum of $50 each, and section 23 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 861), is hereby amended accordingly.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a new provision put in this year's appropriation bill. I have not section 3709 of the Thirty-sixth Statutes at Large, which is amended by this provision. I will ask the Senator if he can state offhand what is the amount now that is expended under the requirement that advertisements shall be made?

Mr. ASHURST. One hundred dollars. This reduced it to $50. It seemed to be a salutary amendment. It impressed the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 15, after the word "Commissioners," to strike out "$4,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 21, after the word "agencies," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$200,000," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of Indian police, including chiefs of police at not to exceed $50 per month each and privates at not to exceed $30 per month each, to be employed in maintaining order, for purchase of equipments and supplies and for rations for policemen at nonration agencies, $200,000.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I am thoroughly opposed to this amendment. I think the House did right when they provided that the amount should be $100,000 rather than $200,000. I have taken a little pains to talk with Indians about this appropriation, and they say the class of men who hang around the reservations as policemen are of the cheapest kind, and they do not believe that we should increase the appropriation for these policemen. I do not know why it has been done. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I suppose it is necessary to increase the expenses for policing in proportion as we increase the appropriations for education. The two go together with the Caucasian, and it is the same thing with the Indian.

Mr. ASHURST. I may be wrong, but I thought that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] in the committee agreed to increasing the amount to $200,000. It is the impression of the chairman of the committee that it is a necessary and a wise provision. On page 72 of the hearings the following proceedings appear in the House committee hearings:

PAY OF INDIAN POLICE, $200,000.

The appropriation under this head provides for the salaries of Indian police and subsistence at nonration agencies, uniforms, forage for their mounts, equipment, etc. There are on the salary roll for the present fiscal year 646 Indian police, whose duty it is to assist in the maintenance of law and order, suppression of the liquor traffic, and other duties as affecting over 300,000 Indians scattered throughout the country and covering millions of acres of land.

The per capita cost is but 66⅔ cents. In 195 cities having a population of over 30,000 each the per capita payment for the police department is $2.04, and there is no doubt that the area of these cities will not compare favorably with the area of the Indian country. In the group which comprises cities having a population between 300,000 to 500,000 the per capita payment for the police department is $2.14.

The office is experiencing some difficulty in certain localities in retaining efficient and honest men at the salary provided for. As laborers they can earn from $1.50 to $2 per day, and with such opportunities they are unwilling to remain as Government employees at a salary of $30 or less. To increase their compensation reduces the availability of the appropriation, and as a result the efficiency of the service is to a certain extent impaired.

These employees form an important part in the administration of the affairs of the reservations and are an essential part of the machinery used in protecting the lives, property, and welfare of these people throughout the country. The entire amount of the appropriation is necessary.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I think I recall what the chairman of our committee has said as occurring before the committee. I might say to him that there are many, many items in this bill that we passed over on a purely ex parte showing. As you will find if you will go through the bill, the administration has asked us to increase the expenditures in almost every case, and in some cases they have been increased immensely. I have had occasion to make inquiry in regard to conditions outside of the committee, and I have become convinced that in many of these instances we have done wrong in increasing the appropriations. I believe we have done wrong in increasing this one. I received my information from those who I think are qualified to judge from having been on these reservations, knowing the facts. The facts are, and I think it will appear somewhere in our hearings, that the men who are engaged in the Indian police service are not a class of men who promote the welfare of the Indian as a rule. They are a cheap class of men, men who are hired for so small a salary that they can not be good men.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator, I know, is aware of the fact that these police are Indians themselves.

Mr. PAGE. Yes; but they are a very cheap class of men, and I do not think we ought to increase the appropriation. But I do not care to take the time of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I can hardly allow the Senator's statement to pass without saying that my observation does not bear out the Senator's statement. I think that the Indian police upon our reservations are, if anything, rather superior to the average Indians upon the reservations. I think there is no question about that, particularly upon the western reservations.

I will further call the attention of the Senator to the fact that their efficiency is not necessarily measured by the amount of money that they receive. An Indian is not much different from white people. Many people are willing to take a position of authority, a position of dignity, or a position of responsibility at quite a moderate salary, less than they, perhaps, would be willing to receive for manual work or for employment in other avenues.

But I arose to say that I believe the Senator is mistaken when he says that the Indian police are a cheap class of Indians. My observation has been exactly to the contrary.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Vermont that in the State which I in part represent we have perhaps 20,000 Sioux Indians on several reservations, and I had a chance to observe more or less closely for about 30 years. It is my impression that the police force, which is made up of the Indians themselves, represent a class of men who are above the average and who are a very necessary force in localities inhabited by the Indians where depredations are being committed, where desperadoes get in and sometimes raise a great deal of trouble, where whisky is being smuggled to the Indians. As a rule the men who are wearing the uniform of police are valuable citizens, are a trusty class of men, and my own impression is that the Senator's statement that they are a cheap lot, indicating that they are below the average, is not correct. I simply feel that it is only just and proper that I should say that, so far as my observation has extended.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I of course yield to the closer and more intimate acquaintance of the Senator from South Dakota and the Senator from Wyoming with the Indian Service. I certainly have tried to acquaint myself, where I thought I ought to do so, with some of the items which have been increased in the bill. I think perhaps I may say without violating any of the rules of the Senate, that one of the most efficient laborers in this Indian vineyard, so called, is the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee in the other House. I do not know that I ought to say that here; but I know that he and others with whom I happen to have acquaintance assure me that this is a bad amendment. I want to say generally that I probably shall have occasion before we pass through the bill to oppose several of the amendments increasing appropriations. We have increased these appropriations by, I think, more than $3,000,000.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My remarks to the Senator were not at all called out by the amount of the appropriation. I expressed no opinion as to whether the amount should be the sum contained in the original bill or the sum proposed in the Senate committee amendment. My remark was called out by the observations made by the Senator as to the character of the men who are engaged in filling these offices.

Mr. PAGE. I yield to the better judgment and better experience of the two Senators who have spoken on this matter. I simply say that information has come to me that they are not a high class of men. The very fact that they are willing to accept the service for perhaps a few dollars a month indicates that they must make their living out of something besides their salary.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I suppose there are very many useful employments and very many useful services in which the Senator from Vermont engages for far less than $30 a month.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PAGE. I yield.

Mr. FALL. Each of the Indian police of whom I have any knowledge has exactly the same interest in the tribal property that every other Indian on the reserve has, he has exactly the same means of support that the other Indians upon the reserve have, he has the same income that the other Indians upon the reserve have, and he has additional income for the services which he renders the Indians as a policeman. He has an extra hazardous employment on the Indian reserve, particularly in my part of the country.

I can say to the Senator that the Indian police have from time to time performed services not only to their own people, to their own tribes, which were worthy of all praise, but they have performed services as police officers to the citizens generally beyond any estimate. I want to say, sir, as to the police officers on the Mescalero Reservation, in which my own home partly lies in New Mexico, where I am brought into almost daily contact with some of them, there are no police officers in New Mexico or anywhere else superior to them. We have to-day, for instance, a condition existing there, which has been kept down so far by the Indian police. Over the opposition of the Senators from New Mexico, Senators will recall that the Fort Sill Geronimo Apaches were removed to the Mescalero Reserve, in New Mexico; and they have there been allotted the lands which the Mescaleros had always believed belonged to them. They have taken up the best of the grazing lands and farming lands that remain upon the reserve. They have deprived the Mescalero Indians of an income of more than $8,000, which has not been made up to them in any way by Congress or by the Indian Department. They have been almost at swords' points. From time to time it has been necessary to send Army officers who are familiar with the Indians there upon that reserve—while the matters have been kept out of the newspapers—for the purpose of keeping peace between the Fort Sill Indians and the Mescaleros. The Mescalero police—and the members of the police force are Mescaleros—have performed the duties of their office to the satisfaction of all parties to such an extent that they, and they alone, are responsible for the fact that there has not been the bloody outbreak which I prophesied would possibly occur upon the Mescalero Reserve. Those are the people who are working for $30 a month.

A short time ago, Mr. President, the value of their services was called in question in my county. A murder was committed by an Indian on the Indian reservation. The American citizens in the county were thoroughly aroused and insisted upon invading the reserve in force; insisted that the sheriff should collect a large posse to pursue the murderer. They knew nothing about who he was. They did by force invade the reserve and with a very large posse. The Indian police were called off by the agent and restrained from interfering with the trespass upon the reserve by the police officers; they were requested to remain quiet and to allow the sheriff and his posse to do what they could toward the apprehension of the murderer. The efforts of the sheriff, who was a brave man and an excellent peace officer, availed nothing; it was impossible for him to secure any evidence or to even find the trail of the man who committed the murder. Finally, after consultation between various citizens and the agent, upon the one hand, and some of the Indians and the sheriff on the other, the sheriff was persuaded to withdraw his posse from the reserve. He did so under protest, placing the responsibility entirely upon the agent for the apprehension of the murderer, stating that he would be held responsible if the murderer was not apprehended. The agent answered that he would take the responsibility; that he had confidence in his police, and that he believed he knew what they would do.

After the American posse had left the reserve he then called the Indian police around him and said: "Now, I want the man who committed that murder; you can find him, and I want him arrested." The newspapers were full of it, stating that the agent was not doing his duty and that the Indians would protect the Indian murderer—it was known, or supposed to be known, that it was an Indian who murdered the white man—that the Indians would protect one of their own tribe, and that they would not see him punished according to law. Now, remember that American police officers, and as good as we have in New Mexico, had not been able to effect the arrest nor to secure even a trail or a clew which would lead to the apprehension of the guilty party. Within 24 hours after the American posse had left the reserve the Indians brought the murderer in dead. They had killed him.

Invariably they can be counted upon, sir, to perform the duties of their office as very few American officers can be. I want to say that, in my judgment, the Indian police upon the Mescalero Reserve are superior Indians in every respect, and they receive very small remuneration for the labors which they perform, the services which they give, which are of advantage, as I have said, not only to their own people but to all Americans living in the community.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I want to assure the Senator from New Mexico that no man more than myself is gratified with the assurance that he gives in regard to the character of the Indian police. I can only say that in examining this bill I have applied to persons who I thought were qualified to give me the best possible information. One of my sources of information is, in my opinion, as well prepared to know and to judge as to these appropriations as any man in Congress, and his assurance is that $200,000 is unnecessary; that the $100,000 appropriated by the House is all that ought to be appropriated; and I have relied upon his superior opinion, rather than upon my own judgment, as to what we ought to do.

The other feature to which I have referred, namely, the character of the police, I presume varies in different sections of the country. I think there are sections of the country where if you make the inquiry, "What is the general character of the Indian police?" the reply will come, "In my vicinity, in my territory, they are a bad lot."

Now, I withdraw all that. So far as I am concerned I am simply applying my ideas to this bill generally. We have had purely ex parte statements in regard to the increase of these appropriations as a whole. The department comes to us and says, "We would like so many thousand dollars; the House has given us only so many thousand dollars." I think that nine times out of ten in the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, if I may be permitted to say so without any impropriety—and I think I may—we have accepted the suggestions of the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs. In doing so I am satisfied that we have made too large a bill for these days, when we are all struggling with the great propositions before the country, and when we are helping to pay the Nation's bills by putting a 1-cent stamp on every telegram that is sent out. I do not think we ought to be as liberal as we have been here. I believe we ought to be liberal in matters of education—I am the last man who would cut down an appropriation along that line—but when we come to increasing and doubling the appropriation for the Indian police, and I have the assurance that I have from what I believe to be a proper source, I deem it my duty to protest against the amendment.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Vermont, as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] has already said, that I had no reference in my remarks to the amount of the appropriation. I was simply giving the Senator my own ideas from my own experience as to the character of the Indian policeman, at least in those portions of New Mexico where I am familiar with his character, and particularly on the Mescalero Reserve, which, as the Senator understands, is the reserve of the Apaches, who a few years ago were wild Indians, and whom we were making appropriations to fight. I was simply giving my idea as to the character of the Indians on that reserve when they are intrusted with the enforcement of law and order as police, and was not referring to the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. PAGE. I have not the slightest doubt, Mr. President, as to the correctness of the Senator's statement. I simply feel this way in regard to these appropriation bills: I was present at the hearings almost every minute from the time they commenced until they were ended, and I confess that I have been sometimes shocked at the ease with which the committee would increase an appropriation from $100,000 to $200,000, or from half a million dollars to a million dollars.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the Senator from Vermont aware of the fact that this is not an increase in the appropriation; that the appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, carried the same amount? He has been discussing the matter as if it were an increase in the appropriation. We carry in this bill the same amount that was carried last year, and unless that amount is carried it will make necessary a reduction in the force of Indian police by nearly one-half. Of course, if the Senator thinks that the police are inefficient or a "bad lot," as he has said, his position, in my judgment, would be tenable; but from the investigations I have made, on the whole I think the Indian police compare quite favorably with white police.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I perhaps was wrong in not saying that this was an increase over the amount appropriated by the House bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. I dislike very much to oppose anything the Senator from Vermont proposes, because he gives a great deal of attention to every question that comes before the Committee on Indian Affairs; but I want to say to the Senator that it is my belief that it would be a mistake to reduce this appropriation. As the Senator from Arkansas has just stated, we appropriated a like amount, $200,000, last year, and it has all been expended with the exception of $8,000.

With reference to the class of men who are appointed as Indian police, I will say that I live in a State where there are located three fair-sized reservations, and the Indians who are appointed to these responsible positions are, as a rule, the very best class of Indians, and they perform very valuable services. If it were not that I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate, I should like to read the testimony of Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner, on this point. I will, however, read a short extract from his testimony:

> The CHAIRMAN. Don't you think that in view of the fact that so much of the work of these Indians is being policed by the State and the State authorities that we could very materially cut this appropriation?
> Mr. MERITT. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be unfortunate to cut this appropriation. We are somewhat embarrassed now because of the limitation. We find that the Indian police are of material assistance to the service in maintaining order and performing necessary duties on the reservations. We have at this time 646 Indian police who are paid out of this appropriation.
> The CHAIRMAN. Is it a part of the duties of these policemen to prevent the sale of liquors on the various reservations?
> Mr. MERITT. They help in that work.
> The CHAIRMAN. Then you have another appropriation for that purpose, have you not?
> Mr. MERITT. But this only supplements their regular work.
> The CHAIRMAN. Why shouldn't these two items be thrown together? Is it any more important that they be protected from the sale of whisky than anything else?
> Mr. MERITT. It is one of the most important things in the Indian Service, that they be protected from liquor.

I trust the Senator from Vermont will not oppose the appropriation of $200,000, because I really believe it is absolutely necessary to have that amount.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, if Senators will turn to the bill which we are now considering, I should like to call attention to pages 9, 10, and 11, because they illustrate the thought I am trying to impress upon the Senate in connection with this bill. I have not suggested my opposition to this increase from $100,000 to $200,000 without making an investigation and becoming satisfied from the best information I could get that the increase was wrong; but what I want to call attention to is this—and it is not to this particular feature that I especially refer; my point is applicable to almost every feature of the bill: We are now on page 9, line 21, but if you will turn to page 10, in line 9, you will find the appropriation there has been increased from $100,000 to $125,000; on page 11, line 22, the appropriation has been increased from $200,000 to $600,000. Bear in mind that, as a rule, we had before us in the consideration of this bill only one authority to whom we could go, and that was the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and whenever he said the department would like an increase we gave it to him. As the Senator from North Dakota well knows, that was almost universally the case. We hardly stopped to debate the question at all. None of us could debate it, because he knew all the facts and we knew nothing; but after going through the bill I took upon myself the labor of making an investigation outside. I tried to find men who were thoroughly conversant with the necessities of the service, and one of the best men I found—and I think he is one of the very best authorities on Indian matters—says that $100,000 is all that ought to be appropriated for the Indian police.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I realize that the members of the committee, perhaps, who have been acting with it for years and attending the hearings and considering the testimony, have an opportunity in that way to come closer to the material details in dealing with this great question than have Members of the Senate who are not on that committee. I take that into consideration in weighing my own view; but I feel obliged to say that from my own observation the expenditure of money as provided on page 11, in the sum of $600,000—

> For the purpose of encouraging industry—

Mark those words—

> For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops—

And so forth—

Is, in my opinion, money wisely and intelligently expended in that direction, and is a thousandfold more practicable and beneficial to the Indians than the maintaining of Indian schools far distant from their homes, such as the one in Pennsylvania, designed to teach what might be called "book learning." I am not undervaluing book learning—knowledge of arithmetic, reading, penmanship, literature, history. Of course I am not undervaluing it; but I say that millions of dollars are expended on these Indian boys and girls away from the reservations in these schools that are practically lost. They come from their homes, they go there, they learn to wear clothes and read in books, and then they go back to their natural habitat, and in a few weeks they are tearing the carcasses of animals and eating raw meat and going back into the old habits. But if you send intelligent men among them to get down close to the earth, to pursue the course of education that Mr. Washington is pursuing with the negroes at Tuskegee—to get down and teach them how to learn the simple lessons of industry and self-support—you are doing something for the Indians.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I want to ask him if he has ever been to Carlisle?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; but I have seen these boys, if the Senator pleases, and I have seen these girls, who have been away at school, who would write me letters in beautiful penmanship which looked like engraving, and who could read in books. I have seen them, after a year or two, back in the old habits, and, if anything, worse than the old, full-blood Indians who brought them into the world.

I simply desire to add that you can take a full-blood Indian—an old Indian who has come down here from out in his tepee, and who is giving his testimony to the committee through an interpreter—and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred there is more inherent honesty and integrity and manliness in that old, fullblood Indian than there is in any mixed blood who has been away and received a smattering of education, and comes back there and along with the smattering of education has learned the white man's vices. There is more integrity and rugged honesty and trustworthiness in that old, full-blood Indian than there is in this mixed blood with his smattering of education.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I have been to the Carlisle School, and have given it careful study. I have been to the Hayward School in Wisconsin. I have taken a great interest in these Indian schools; and the Senator is mistaken in his statement as to what they learn there. You go to Carlisle, and you will find there a good blacksmith shop. The Indian is taught to be a blacksmith, so that if he goes back to his tribe he can be a blacksmith. He is made a good wheelwright. He is taught to paint. He is taught to paper rooms. He is taught to do all those kinds of work which are essential in his tribe.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will permit me there, I admit all that, and that he learns those things; and I am not underrating the motives, the high purpose, the ideals of the men who have founded those institutions and the beautiful sentiment of the men who uphold them and vote the money to sustain them; but I ask the Senator, what becomes of that wheelwright, what becomes of that blacksmith, what becomes of that mechanic, when he leaves there with this knowledge that he has acquired?

Mr. PAGE. I should like to answer the Senator.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Why do you not find him at work over here in the shops of the Pennsylvania Railway? Why do you not find him, if he has learned bookkeeping, employed down here in one of the mercantile establishments in the city of Washington? Go all over the United States and look for these Indian boys in the fields of industry, and why are they not there? You do not find them.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Just answer the question. There is the difficulty. Why are they not there?

Mr. PAGE. I will answer the question. The Senator is half right, but he is also half wrong. I tell you, I have taken pains to follow up these boys who have graduated or who have gone from the Carlisle School, and many, many of them have gone out into white sections and have made good artisans and good business men.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Where are they?

Mr. PAGE. I say, they have gone into the walks of life in the eastern cities. A certain part of them, of course, like the white boys, are no good, and when they get back to the reservation, if it is a blanket country, they pretty soon get to wearing the blanket; and I have heard it said, and it is probably true, that a bad Indian slightly educated is perhaps the worst Indian in the world. But, generally speaking, those boys learn something that is for the good of their tribe, and the girls learn how to go home and prevent the spread of tuberculosis and trachoma. They go home prepared to be of genuine service to their people, and I believe in many cases they are.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, so far as the theory and the purposes of it are concerned, I could not stand up here and make war upon it; but I am looking at results. Take my own State: There are the different reservations there. There are all those schools. There is this attempt to educate them in this way that has been going on here for a generation. I go to every town in my State, the largest and the smallest; I go in there to see who the clerks are, who the bookkeepers are, and not a single Indian have I ever seen in one of them. I go to the different divisions and headquarters of the railway companies, I go down among the mechanics in the shops, in the places of industry, and I do not find them there. I go out on the farms, where we are short of labor, where high wages are offered for farm hands in agricultural pursuits, and I never find an Indian. After all these years, with the crop of boys and girls constantly being sent away and coming back again, go among the domestics in one of the States and try to find an Indian girl acting as a cook in a family or performing the service of a domestic in a household. Do you find them? Nowhere. What has become of them? What is the result of all of this?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Am I right in the assumption that the pending question is in relation to the Indian police?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; it has taken a wider range than that. The Senator is discussing the wisdom of these appropriations and attacking the increases, and the question of the expenditure of money for educational purposes in general has been involved in it. I think it is just as legitimate a branch of the discussion as anything else, and a good deal more legitimate than the debate that is often indulged in in this body.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the difficulty in this question of Indian education arises from the fact that, to my notion, we get at it rather from the wrong point of view and the wrong point of operation.

I have no fault whatever to find with Carlisle or any of the other institutions for the education of the Indian. I believe they are doing a good work for the Indian if the Indian wants to stay at Carlisle, or stay away from the Indian country, perhaps; but an Indian boy from Carlisle going back on the reservation—and the same thing applies to an Indian girl—finds himself up against this situation: He must either go back to the ways of the tribe to which he goes, or he must live out and away from and beyond them. He is either ostracized, or he goes back into the tribe—one or the other.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is true.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Occasionally in the western country you find a graduate from Carlisle in the Geological Survey, where, undoubtedly, he performs good service for the Government; but the boys who go back to the Indian reservations and the girls who go back to the Indian reservations in order to keep themselves in harmony with their own mates not only have to discard Carlisle but they have to go it one better. They have to get a little worse than the ordinary boy or girl upon the reservation, because they are looked upon with suspicion. It is believed that they feel a little bit higher for the reason that they have been to Carlisle or Hampton or some other place, and therefore, in order to make good, they have got to get a little shade under the other Indians.

Mr. President, I have often expressed the view that the money that is paid out at Carlisle or these other places for the education of the Indian, whether in domestic science or in mechanical arts or in any other way, would be better spent and better applied if that education were furnished right at home on the reservation. I have always had that view. I have it now, and I believe it is a view that is generally entertained by those who come in the closest contact with the reservations themselves.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I am not going to take much of the time of the Senate, and I have not been in the habit of occupying much of the time of the Senate, but I want to complete the idea that I have in my mind. I am not belittling the attempts in these schools, such as Carlisle, to do the work they have. They may be doing some good. I am perfectly willing that we shall keep on trying to do something in that way, but I say that it is incomplete and that it does not produce results, and it can not be expected to produce results unless we go to the habitat and environment from which these boys and girls come and build up a situation there that will continue after they go back. I say that in order to get that you want an appropriation like this $600,000 for encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I shall conclude in just a minute.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no idea of doing more than answering the suggestion the Senator has made. I simply want to say that the very appropriation of $600,000 to which the distinguished Senator from South Dakota refers is an appropriation made in accordance with a well-defined, well-thought-out, well-considered policy of the department that aid shall be extended to the Indian, so that when he goes home from school after having been taught the useful mechanical arts he will be enabled, by reason of this appropriation, to know how to cultivate the soil, to breed cattle, and to take care of live stock. That is the very purpose of the whole scheme and plan of the Indian Department as rearranged during the last year and a half. I think the remarks of the Senator are very pertinent.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am glad to hear the statement of the Senator from Arizona, and I am glad this provision is being made, because unless this book learning is supplemented by some practical work of that kind—which I regard as of vastly more importance than a smattering of book learning—unless that is provided for and patiently and thoroughly worked out, these attempts to give a smattering of knowledge found in books are not going to produce results.

Mr. ASHURST. What the Senator says is eminently correct, in the judgment of the committee, if I may be permitted to speak for them. I was going to ask, however, that we might pass on this item, and then we will reach the item——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator that I shall detain the Senate only a moment. Just a word or two more and I am through.

I simply want to emphasize the fact that by going among these people and patiently and in a determined way, year after year, standing there with them and teaching them habits of industry and self-support, and keeping everlastingly at it; teaching them the simple principles of honesty in the payment of their debts, that when they incur an obligation it must be paid, and that if they would live they must work; teaching them the habit of prudence, and to save their means, and to cultivate the soil, and to breed animals—when you get down upon the earth and teach them in that way and remain among them and teach them after they come back from Carlisle, because they are mere children, and the book learning they have gotten there is of practically no value to them, you are getting down to an education that is worth something.

Why, Mr. President, a great deal of this education is a failure. You can go to one of the institutions of higher learning and spend a little fortune educating your boy, and after he graduates from an institution of higher learning put him out on the sidewalk without a cent in his pocket, and he is one of the most helpless boys in the world. Does he know anything about stenography? Does he know anything about typewriting? Could he go into a telegraph office and do anything? Could he work at a trade? Not a thing. If with his knowledge of Greek and Latin and everything else he were thrown out without a dollar in his pocket, he would have to drive a delivery wagon for $6 a week to make a living. I am talking about one of your educated white boys. Now, you take the Indian boy down here at Carlisle and give him a little smattering of books, or take the girl and teach her how to make a biscuit or knead a loaf of bread, and send them back to where they came from, and withdraw your further efforts, and it is a failure.

I want to see this appropriation stay in the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I want to read, for the Senator's information, a short extract, and a very short one only, from the hearings showing that the Senator from South Dakota is correct in his observation. It refers to the $600,000 item on page 11, line 22. The department say as follows, to which I ask the Senator's especial attention:

> One of the most regrettable conditions which frequently presents itself to the service is the almost hopeless plea for help from many returned students. These are young men and women who have been educated at Government expense, and they go back to their homes equipped with a knowledge of "how to do things" but usually "without the equipment or funds" required to become active workers.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, allow me to suggest to the chairman of the committee and the Members of the Senate a state of affairs which exists in many parts of the United States. They send Indian boys and girls to Carlisle, and, as you say, they are taught some smattering, or they may be educated to a degree where they can pass examinations at Oxford, England; yet when those boys and girls are through with their educational work and return to their reservation homes in some of the far Western States they have not a dollar, they have not a plow or a harrow or a hoe with which to go upon the land and raise wheat or other crops. There is no opportunity presented to them. What are they going to do? It is not long until their clothing is worn out, and then perhaps they put on blankets, as anyone else would have to do; and it is not long—and it is happening now, today; it did yesterday and it will to-morrow—that they have nothing to eat unless they get out and kill and eat prairie dogs and skunks, if you please; and prairie dogs and skunks are not good eating.

Now, what do we do? We have got to go further than to send them to Carlisle. Even at Carlisle in many instances they are not kept long enough in any one department to thoroughly learn a trade and to become efficient and capable mechanics, and they are thrown into a position afterwards where it is impossible for the Indian boy or girl to raise themselves above a dead level of poverty and hunger. In many cases they have, despite these facts, done well. It is all due to the way we have been treating the Indians; and whose fault is it that they were not taught a trade or furnished means to go on the land and earn a living?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LANE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does the Senator think the education he receives at Carlisle has a tendency to make the Indian a willing farmer?

Mr. LANE. I do not know that it does. I presume it gives him the aspiration, the same as it does a white child, for different things; but even so, he is afterwards placed under conditions where it would be almost impossible for him to advance.

Mr. ASHURST. Question!

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, just a moment. I think I owe it to the Senate that I should correct myself. In discussing the appropriation of $200,000 I referred to the general trend of the appropriations, and said they had been generally raised. I want to say that I do not think they have all been increased without merit. With the item on page 11, where the increase is made to $600,000, I am in hearty accord. I simply mention that as of the general class which will be found running through the whole bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 9, after the word "available," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$125,000," so as to make the clause read:

> For pay of special agents at $2,000 per annum; for traveling and incidental expenses of such special agents, including sleeping-car fare, and a per diem of not to exceed $3 in lieu of subsistence in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior when actually employed on duty in the field or ordered to the seat of government; for transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Office of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for; and for other necessary expenses of the Indian Service for which no other appropriation is available, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 10, after the word "inspectors," to insert "exclusive of one chief inspector," so as to make the clause read:

> For pay of six Indian Service inspectors, exclusive of one chief inspector, at salaries not to exceed $2,500 per annum and actual traveling expenses, and $3 per diem in lieu of subsistence when actually employed on duty in the field, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANE. I wish to notify the chairman of the committee that I would like to add an amendment later on in the proceedings. I wish to reserve the right to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not necessary to reserve it. It is the Senator's right.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 11, on page 11.

Mr. SMOOT. There is just one question I should like to ask. I notice in line 16, on page 10, the word "property" is used. In all former appropriation acts the word "allotment" has been used. I ask the Senator why the word "property" is used, because it seems to me that if property is used it not only means the allotment but whatever the Indian may have outside of his allotment.

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to the inquiry propounded by the Senator from Utah, I will state that that change was made, if I remember correctly, because if it were limited to the word "allotment" there are certain species of property, especially among the Osages, that would not fall within the definition of the word "allotment." For instance, a certain leasehold might not be classed as an allotment. It was deemed by the department that the word "property" is the best word to use.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be the case, but it does seem to me the word "allotment" should be used to make the sentence complete.

> For the purpose of determining the heirs of deceased Indian allottees having any right, title, or interest in any trust or restricted allotment.

Not "restricted property." What would the Senator think was restricted property? He is an allottee, and it must be a restricted allotment—not restricted property.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection to inserting the word "allotment."

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the amendment the Senator has proposed?

Mr. SMOOT. To strike out "property," in line 16, page 10, and insert "allotment," so as to conform to the law as it always has been.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection to it, but I imagine there is a great difference there. Property might be distributed and there would be heirs entitled to it. An Indian child might be entitled to some inheritance that would not be in the nature of an allotment.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but that would not be restricted property.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It might be; but I have no objection to letting it go to conference, to be examined there.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire if there is not an agreement that the committee amendment must be considered first?

Mr. SMOOT. But I called attention to it, thinking perhaps the chairman would want to amend the bill in this particular as we proceed.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is not proposing an amendment now.

Mr. GRONNA. I would suggest that we pass it over for a while, because I think it would be a mistake to change it.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like the attention of the chairman of the committee. I wish to inquire of the chairman why it is provided here that these provisions, beginning on line 10, page 10, and running down the balance of the page, are not made applicable to the Indian tribes therein specified? Why are those tribes exempted from the provisions of this law?

Mr. ROBINSON. With the permission of the chairman, I will state that there is a special law governing these matters relating to those particular tribes. There is some legislation later in this bill relating to them.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I should like to ask the Senator—and I ask the question because it so often appears in the Indian appropriation bills that certain provisions do not apply to certain tribes—if the tribes exempted are here provided for by law, why was not the law made general and all included?

Mr. ROBINSON. Those matters are governed by laws heretofore passed by Congress covering the subject. That is the reason for the exemption. It would constitute a repeal of quite a number of statutes.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think the Senator caught the last question I asked him. Assuming that to be true, why should not the law be amended so as to include all these Indians; in other words, have one law cover all? Would not that be practicable?

Mr. ROBINSON. That would require a codification of the existing Indian laws, which would be an exceedingly desirable thing, but it would probably require Congress 12 months to do it. That is the real reason.

Mr. LANE. I may answer the Senator from Nebraska by saying that the land belonging to the Osage Indians, and in many cases the Five Civilized Tribes, is particularly and unusually valuable. The process of reaching them by ordinary legislation probably was not effective or speedy enough.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 11, line 22, after the word "crops," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$600,000," and on page 12, line 7, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops, $600,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, which sum may be used for the purchase of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable Indians to become self-supporting: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925: Provided further, That not to exceed $100,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended on any one reservation or for the benefit of any one tribe of Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 9, to insert:

There is hereby authorized to be continued during the Sixty-fourth Congress the joint commission to investigate Indian affairs, with powers and duties as provided in the Indian appropriation act of June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., 81) and the unexpended amount therein appropriated for the expense of said commission is hereby reappropriated and made immediately available for the purposes therein authorized. Said commission shall make their findings, conclusions, and recommendations to the Sixty-fourth Congress: Provided, That when any vacancy shall occur upon said joint commission by reason of the expiration of the term of office of any Member of the House of Representatives upon said joint commission, or of any Senator upon said joint commission, or from any other cause, the Speaker of the House, if the vacancy occurs with reference to a Member of the House of Representatives, or the President of the Senate, with reference to a Senator, shall fill such vacancy by appointment.

The amendment was agreed to.

PACIFICATION OF EUROPE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, there are several resolutions pending before the Committee on Foreign Relations with reference to a conference of neutral nations looking to the pacification of Europe. I desire to introduce a joint resolution upon this subject and ask its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations and its insertion in the RECORD. Its purpose is to give voice from an authoritative source to what is in the mind of everybody, outside of the warring peoples, that this war means loss to all and gain to none, and that it is better to declare it a drawn battle before the coming spring slaughter is inaugurated and all the possibilities of suffering and loss are realized.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 242) authorizing the President of the United States to invite foreign neutral powers to a conference in Washington, D. C., to consider measures for bringing to an end the war in Europe, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 242) authorizing the President of the United States to invite foreign neutral powers to a conference in Washington, D. C., to consider measures for bringing to an end the war in Europe, and for other purposes.

Resolved, etc., That the European war is a world-wide catastrophe, calamitous alike to peaceful and warring nations; that it involves widespread destruction of lives and property; the increase of widowhood and orphanage; the disabling or death of the fit, the strong, and the courageous, and the survival of the unfit, the weak, and the helpless; the decline of science, literature, and art; the impairment of high ideals in the advancement of humanity toward universal brotherhood; the substitution of the law of the jungle for that of Christian civilization; the waste of the accumulations of centuries of civilized effort; the imposition upon future generations of a burden of debt unequaled in history, to be slowly and painfully paid by the toiling masses; and, finally, the change of governments and dynasties by the swift and bloody process of revolution instead of the orderly process of evolution;

Second. That the effect upon the neutral nations is second only to that upon the warring nations, involving as it does radical changes in the currents of trade, the loss of markets, the disturbance of the relations between producer and consumer, buyer and seller, debtor and creditor, shipper and carrier, and the consequent prostration of trade, bringing about unemployment and want; and that it is the right of the neutral nations to protest against the continuance of a war entailing such disastrous conditions, and to counsel its discontinuance pending negotiations for a permanent settlement of issues involved;

Third. That the distinguishing characteristics of this war include the disclaimer by each of the warring nations of responsibility for its commencement and continuance, the assurance by each that it is not animated by a desire for conquest, the agreement by all participants that it is a senseless war, the declaration of each that it is fighting for its national life and not for aggression or increased dominion, and protests by all against dominant individual militarism either on land or sea;

Fourth. That without reference to the merits of such contradictory declarations, the highest qualities of patriotism, courage, and self-sacrifice have been shown by each of the warring nations, and that each has proved its right to an individual national life, the destruction of which would be a loss to civilization;

Fifth. That after more than six months of conflict unparalleled in the number of men engaged, in the loss of life, and the destruction of wealth, no appreciable permanent advantage has been gained by either side, and no material results have been obtained beyond the destruction of lives and property; that all have lost and none has won; that victory hereafter to be attained by any of the warring powers will be at a stupendous cost far exceeding its value; and that thus the only result of continued warfare will be the common deterioration of race and impoverishment of conditions;

Sixth. That the present conditions offer an opportunity of crystallizing into action the sentiment common to all civilized peoples that international justice should be administered as is national justice, without savagery, passion, or prejudice, and according to the orderly forms of law;

Resolved, therefore, That the United States of America, animated by a spirit of friendliness toward all the nations involved, invites a conference of the neutral nations for the purpose of urging upon the warring powers, first, a discontinuance of hostilities; second, a withdrawal of the forces of each nation within its boundaries and retirement from captured territory; third, a conference with the warring powers looking to the calling of a peace conference; and, fourth, the establishment, with the approval and cooperation of the belligerent nations, of an international court, tribunal, or executive body with power to adjudicate questions arising between nations, and to enforce its findings: And be it further

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to invite such neutral powers as he may deem advisable to participate in a conference to be convened at Washington as soon as practicable for the purpose of considering the foregoing questions in harmony with the spirit of this Nation as set forth herein, and to designate in such invitation the number of commissioners to be selected by each power, and to appoint such commissioners to such conference from the United States of America as he shall deem advisable, and to fix the compensation for their reasonable expenses to be paid out of the appropriation herein made; and that an appropriation of $50,000 be, and it is hereby, made for the expenses of such commissioners.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a favorable report from the Interstate Commerce Committee on Senate bill 7738, to amend section 20 of "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended June 29, 1906. I also submit a proposed amendment to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which I am authorized to offer, covering the same subject matter.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I am compelled to object to the receipt of that report except in the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to call attention to the conference report on House bill 17869, providing for the appointment of an additional judge for the southern district of the State of Georgia. I am quite anxious that the matter shall be disposed of, so that we may get it back to the other House.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Georgia that I have not the slightest objection to the consideration of the conference report, but a number of Senators have left the Chamber who want to be here to discuss it. One of those Senators has gone away, thinking that this matter would not come up this afternoon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am afraid that if I do not promptly get it back to the other House the bill will fail.

Mr. SMOOT. I can say to the Senator that he can just as well call up the report on Monday. I dislike to object to it, and yet I feel I shall have to do so, as the Senator to whom I refer is absent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I tried to get up the report last night, but it was objected to; and if I do not get it up now the Senate may adhere to its disagreement with the House on a certain proposition. If so, I want to get it to the House, to see if the House will recede. It has to go back to the House. I deferred pressing it last night on account of the absence of the Senator referred to.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I am responsible to the Senator who left the Chamber on account of having a special engagement to-night, and I think the Senator from Georgia knows what it is.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not know this matter would come up; and the Senator to whom I referred asked me if there was anything coming up, and I said "no."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] is here now. He is the Senator to whom the Senator from Utah refers, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. No; he is not the Senator to whom I refer. I repeat that I really dislike to object to the consideration of the report, but I do not feel justified in allowing it to be acted on in the absence of the Senator to whom I refer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the report?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What is the bill to which it relates?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was trying to get up the bill for the additional judgeship in the southern district of Georgia, and was desirous that the Senate should take one course or the other with reference to the amendment on which we have disagreed, so that we could get it over to the other House.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the purpose is simply to insist on the disagreement and to send the report back to the conference committee, I think there would be no trouble; but if the purpose is, as indicated to me last evening, it will lead to considerable debate, I fancy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, the conference report has been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was laid on the table; and there are two motions pending. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has moved that the Senate further insist upon its amendment numbered 1, disagreed to by the House, and ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes thereon——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is it exactly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate. Pending that, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] moved that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But, Mr. President, the conference report was agreed to; and then the chairman of the committee moved a further conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; and if the Senate recedes——

Mr. NORRIS. It is all over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The conference report was agreed to, and the conference report was an agreement as to two items and a disagreement as to one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report has been agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The conference report has been agreed to. The question was then on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], but the Senator from Nebraska submitted a motion, which took precedence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the Senate receding from amendment numbered 1.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wants to know whether there is any objection to the present consideration of the report.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I object to that, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, Mr. President, I move to proceed to the consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is in order.

Mr. ASHURST. I want to be heard on that motion, if it is debatable, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is debatable.

Mr. ASHURST. So far as courtesy goes, I try to extend every courtesy to every Senator on both sides of the Chamber.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not press the motion against the consent of the Senator from Arizona. I will only make the motion if he is willing to have me take the time to do so.

Mr. ASHURST. I am in favor of the bill and in favor of the position taken by the Senator from Georgia; but if the motion is made, it may result in disclosing the want of a quorum and interfere with the present unfinished business. So I hope the Senator from Georgia will make his motion at another time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have an agreement with the Senator from Arizona that I will not press the matter until later this evening, at any rate. I am very anxious about the matter.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; and I will not object to the Senator's motion at another time; but I wish now to proceed as far as possible with the Indian appropriation bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, asks for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PADGETT, Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, Mr. ESTOPINAL, Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21201) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, Mr. CLINE, and Mr. COOPER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 21563) granting the consent of Congress to the Keokuk & Hamilton Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at Keokuk, Iowa, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 136. An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion; and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea;

S. 5734. An act to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, to the State of Kansas;

H. R. 2504. An act to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution";

H. R. 19116. An act to grant certain lands to the city of Grand Junction, Colo., for the protection of its water supply;

H. R. 20814. An act to place Candler, Jenkins, and Evans Counties, Ga., in the eastern division of the southern district of Georgia, and to place Bacon and Thomas Counties, Ga., in the southwestern division of the southern district of Georgia; and

H. R. 21491. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 21563. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Keokuk & Hamilton Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at Keokuk, Iowa, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. PENROSE conferees on the part of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. LATTA, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

S. 2518. An act granting to the town of Nevadaville, Colo., the right to purchase certain lands for the protection of water supply; and

S. 3807. An act to authorize the Great Northern Railway Co. to revise the location of its right of way, and for other purposes.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HONOLULU, HAWAII.

Mr. SWANSON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5253) entitled "An act to amend existing legislation providing for the acquisition of a site and the construction of a building thereon for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, customhouse, and other governmental offices at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following: "sell and convey, by usual quitclaim deed, said site to the highest bidder, at public or private sale, after giving notice by advertisement for 30 days in at least two newspapers published in said city of Honolulu at a minimum price of not less that $165,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to arrange for the reimbursement of the contributors to the opening and dedication of Bishop Street adjoining said site, through any responsible fiscal agent in Honolulu whom he may designate: Provided, That the agent serves without compensation; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to deposit with such agent $35,000 of the amount realized from the sale of the present site, and take a bond from the agent for the full deposit; and the agent shall ascertain the names of the contributors, and the amounts contributed, and shall reimburse them, taking receipt in each case, the reimbursement to be the amount contributed without interest; and the receipt obtained by the fiscal agent shall be considered as evidence of the reimbursement, and the person so reimbursed shall have no further claim. The appointment of the fiscal agent and the conditions under which the reimbursement is to be arranged shall be advertised in at least two local newspapers of wide circulation a stated number of times, and no one of the original contributors shall be entitled to reimbursement unless the claim is filed with the agent within one year after the last time the matter referred to is advertised. The difference between the amount obtained for the sale of the site and $35,000 shall be deposited in the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt, and any balance of the $35,000 which the designated fiscal agent is unable to return to the original contributors shall also be turned into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt;" and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted insert "$275,000"; and the House agree to the same.

CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
JAMES E. MARTINE,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

FRANK CLARK,
JOHN L. BURNETT,
R. W. AUSTIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 13, line 9, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$13,000"; in line 10, before the word "horse-drawn" to strike out "forty" and insert "sixty"; and in line 11, after the word "vehicles," to insert "and not to exceed $20,000 for the purchase of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles," so as to make the clause read:

That not to exceed $200,000 of the appropriations made herein for the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall be available for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of superintendents, farmers, physicians, field matrons, allotting, irrigation, and other employees in the Indian field service: Provided, That not to exceed $13,000 shall be used in the purchase of not to exceed 60 horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and not to exceed $20,000 for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and that such vehicles shall be used only for official service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what kind of passenger-carrying vehicles have been used up to this time for the purposes mentioned in this paragraph?

Mr. ASHURST. In response to the Senator's question I will say that this legislation is made necessary as disclosed by the hearings. Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, said:

I may say that that legislation is made necessary because of section 5 of the legislative, executive, and judicial act of the current year, which prohibited the departments and bureaus of the Government from purchasing passenger-carrying vehicles and motor-propelled vehicles without first getting permission and authority from Congress.

Then he proceeded to say:

We are not asking for an appropriation; we simply ask permission to use out of the funds that have been available heretofore money for the purchase of new equipment necessary for the service.

The CHAIRMAN. What funds do you refer to as being available heretofore?

Mr. MERITT. For example, the fund for farmers. We can not use that appropriation for the purchase of a vehicle for a farmer when it is necessary.

This refers to motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, which means the modern automobile, I presume. It has been ascertained that the automobile has made a great change in the methods of locomotion; that the officials are enabled to get over a reservation 100 miles a day on a motor-propelled vehicle, where they might not have been able to get over it in five days with a horse-drawn vehicle.

We have in the Indian Service 118 automobiles, valued at $113,978, and 739 vehicles—valued at $77,538. The superintendents this year estimated for 76 automobiles and 126 vehicles.

I presume that means horse-drawn vehicles—

Mr. SMOOT. I was wondering why there was not a proviso inserted in this paragraph for the exchange of horse-drawn vehicles and the sale of the horses in order to partially pay for the automobiles.

Mr. ASHURST. That would be a salutary amendment, I believe.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that has been done in a number of the appropriation bills.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator will propose an amendment to that effect.

Mr. SMOOT. While I am on my feet I want to say that I believe the law which has been enacted preventing the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles should be repealed. There is not an appropriation bill now presented to the Senate which does not contain a provision specifically stating, as the appropriation does in this paragraph, that it is for such vehicles.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope when the Senate committee amendments shall have been disposed of the Senator will propose such an amendment as he has suggested.

Mr. SMOOT. After the committee amendments are disposed of I shall gladly do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 13, to insert:

For correction of sanitary defects in, and improvement of, Indian homes, $100,000; to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, said appropriation to be expended and reimbursed under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that all the amendments beginning with line 14, on page 13, and ending with line 13, on page 18, be passed over for to-night. They all contain new legislation, I will say to the Senator, and I hope he will allow them to go over and proceed with the remainder of the bill, and when we are through with the other amendments we can return to them.

Mr. ASHURST. That is a very reasonable request and entirely within the right and province of the Senator, but may I ask him, since the amendments are going over, will not the Senator do them the credit and himself the justice of reading the House hearings from page 34 to page 40 relating to the particular item?

Mr. SMOOT. I will gladly do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, all the amendments on pages 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, beginning with line 14, on page 13, down to and including line 13, on page 18, will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 2, under the head of "Arizona and New Mexico," on page 18, line 23, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$110,400" and insert "$119,500"; in line 24, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$7,500" and insert "$10,000"; and in the same line, after the words "in all," to strike out "$117,900" and insert "$129,500," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 700 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Phoenix, Ariz., and for pay of superintendent, $119,500; for general repairs and improvements, $10,000; in all, $129,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 13, to insert:

That so much of the Indian appropriation act approved June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., 85), as makes reimbursable out of the tribal funds of the Indians of the San Carlos Indian Reservation an appropriation for the construction of two bridges on the said San Carlos Indian Reservation in Arizona be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 21, after the name "Arizona," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$15,000," so as to make the clause read:

For improvement and sinking of wells, installation of pumping machinery, construction of tanks for domestic and stock water, and for the necessary structures for the development and distribution of a supply of water for Papago Indian villages in southern Arizona, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, do I understand that the amendment beginning on line 22 has gone over until Monday?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To what page does the Senator refer?

Mr. PAGE. Page 20.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That amendment is about to be stated.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 20, after line 21, to insert:

For enlarging the irrigation system for the irrigation of Indian lands, for protective works to prevent damage to irrigable lands by floods, and for development of domestic water supply on the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona, in accordance with the plans and specifications submitted by the chief engineer in the Indian Service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the total cost of this project shall not exceed $150,000: Provided further, That the cost of the said project shall be reimbursed to the United States in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LANE. I ask that that amendment go over until Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Which one?

Mr. LANE. I ask that that amendment and the one following go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can not understand the request of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. That the amendment just read be allowed to go over until Monday and that the amendment following it be also allowed to go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Chair put the question on the amendment, and declared it adopted.

Mr. PAGE. I ask that the amendments commencing with line 22, on page 20, down to line 18, on page 23, go over.

Mr. ASHURST. That requires unanimous consent, and to that I object.

Mr. PAGE. Well, Mr. President, I do not want to say that I will object to the amendments on the ground that they are general legislation, but if the Senator declines to let them go over, as I can probably make the point of order, I shall have to do so. I leave that for him to say.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not see what objection there is to letting the amendments go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the desire of the Senate—that the amendments go over or that they be considered?

Mr. ASHURST. I object to them going over.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I did not hear what the Senator from Arizona said.

Mr. PAGE. He objected to the amendments going over.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I not say a word to the chairman of the committee? As I understand, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] desire that these amendments go over, at least until we complete the remainder of the bill. It seems to me we would save time by allowing them to go over, and take up the other items and proceed with the bill. Of course, if we reach them before Monday, or at any other time, they can be taken up. It is only asked that they be passed over until the other amendments are considered.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator from Michigan asks that they go over, I have no objection, Mr. President.

Mr. PAGE. I make the request that the amendments go over, and if that request is not granted, I desire to be heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendments referred to be passed over.

SESSION FOR MEMORIAL ADDRESSES.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the following order:

That at not later than 6.15 o'clock this evening the Senate will take a recess until 10.45 a. m. to-morrow, when memorial exercises will be held commemorative of the lives and public services of WILLIAM H. WILDER, late Representative from the State of Massachusetts, and FOREST GOODWIN, late Representative from the State of Maine, at the conclusion of which memorial exercises the Senate will recess until 11 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to make that 6 o'clock to-night? I am obliged to leave here at 6 o'clock.

Mr. KERN. We are going to have an executive session. I changed it from 6 to 6.15 so that we might have a short executive session.

Mr. SMOOT. I have to leave at 6 o'clock, but that is all right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the order? The Chair hears none, and the order is adopted.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Out of order I submit a report from the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada has asked unanimous consent to make a report. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The SECRETARY. From the Committee on Interstate Commerce the Senator from Nevada submits a report on Senate bill 7738.

Mr. OLIVER. What bill is that?

Mr. PENROSE. What is the title of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask the Senator from Nevada where is the bill that accompanies the report?

Mr. OLIVER. I will ask the Senator to explain the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will send for it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, what is the regular order—the consideration of the Indian bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes. The Senator from Nevada is hunting for a bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HOLLIS. Out of order, I submit a report from the Banking and Currency Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. PENROSE. What is the report? Let us hear it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an objection. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on page 23, line 19, under the heading "California."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, do I understand that the remainder of the Arizona items have gone over?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that there was no objection to the balance of the items going over, to line 19, page 23.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, do I understand that the paragraph, beginning at line 22, page 20, and all the other items under "Arizona," have gone over?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what was asked for, and the Senator from Arizona said it was satisfactory.

Mr. ASHURST. I did not hear any request of that kind. I thought the Senator from Michigan asked that one item referring to the Papago Indians should go over, commencing at the bottom of page 20, line 22.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, what I did ask was this: I was anxious to make as much headway as possible, and I understood that there was some objection to those two items which might not be urged if Senators had time to consider them; and I thought we could gain time by passing over those, and proceeding with the balance of the bill until we got through.

Mr. ASHURST. There is no objection to those two items going over; but I have been informed that several items more than those two have gone over. I do not want to pass over all of them to which there is no objection.

Mr. CLAPP. The request was made, and it was made very distinctly, beginning at the bottom——

Mr. ASHURST. It may have been distinct to some Senators, but it may have been very indistinct to some on this side. The Senators on that side are not everybody, yet.

Mr. CLAPP. The request was to pass over the items from line 22 on page 20 down to and including line 18 on page 23.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If, however, the chairman of the committee thinks we could gain time by proceeding, I will withdraw the request to have them passed over. I think we will save time by passing them over, inasmuch as we have so much else to do on the bill, but I do not want to interfere at all with the desire of the chairman in reference to that. If he thinks time will be gained by proceeding with the matter, I do not want to ask to have it go over.

Mr. ASHURST. If there be any item in any individual paragraph to which there is objection, I shall be glad to have it passed over; but I do object to a whole section going over, including many paragraphs to which no specific objection has been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, what shall we do? We must do something.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the Secretary continue the reading of the bill, commencing on line 21, page 21.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on line 21, page 21.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 22, after the word "Reservation," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$25,000, to be immediately available and," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the development of a water supply for the Navajo Indians on the Navajo Reservation, $25,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, reimbursable out of any funds of said Indians now or hereafter available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 22, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the desirability and feasibility of purchasing the railroad lands within the Navajo Indian Reservation, in Arizona and New Mexico, out of a reimbursable appropriation, for the use and benefit of the Navajo Indians, and to submit a report thereon to the Congress at the beginning of its next session, which report shall include the estimated cost of said lands and such other information as may be deemed desirable, $1,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 9, to insert:

For beginning the construction of a dam and necessary controlling works for diverting water from the Gila River for the irrigation of Indian land and allotments on the Gila River Indian Reservation, Ariz., as recommended by the Board of Engineers of the United States Army in paragraph 217 of its report to the Secretary of War of February 14, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 791), $50,000, to remain available until expended, reimbursable as Congress may hereafter provide, the total cost not to exceed $160,000.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. I know how deeply interested the Senator from Arizona is in this item. I think I want to support it. I hope he will let it go over. I think if he should press it unduly the question of its being subject to a point of order might be raised.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection to its going over, Mr. President.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to have that and all between line 10, on page 22, and line 18, on page 23, go over.

Mr. ASHURST. I object to that, Mr. President.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arizona will yield to me now, I wish to move to take up the conference report upon House bill 17869. There will be no objection to it, I think.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, we do not know what the bill is or what the request is.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I simply ask unanimous consent to take up the conference report on the bill providing for an additional district judge in the State of Georgia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The pending motion is the motion by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment numbered 1.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, may the amendment be read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Amendment numbered 1 is on page 1 of the blue print, the proviso reading as follows:

Provided, however, That the President shall make public all indorsements made in behalf of the person appointed as such district judge.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York.

Mr. ROOT. I wish to say that I consider that provision unconstitutional, unjustifiable, preposterous, and almost insulting. I am wholly opposed to it. I shall not filibuster against the bill. I shall vote against it. I do not think we can properly make up for sacrificing the independence of the Senate by attempting to destroy the independence of the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I had not intended to debate this proposition, because of the lateness of the session and the desirability of getting on with other legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me for just a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not an advocate of the provision that the House placed upon this bill, and I do not want to be considered as advocating it; but I do not object a particle in this instance to the President furnishing all the information he has in connection with the appointment of this judge; and it is so important to the southern district of Georgia to have this bill passed that I am going to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, to get the bill through.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me the remarks of the Senator from New York can not be passed by unnoticed. I have no objection to a man thinking that a proposition of this kind is insulting; but if he feels that way, I really believe that if he wanted to be real gentlemanly he would keep it to himself.

In my opinion the proposition contained in the motion I have made is simply to do the public business in a public way. The House has a provision in this bill that the recommendations filed with the President in favor of the judge he shall appoint shall be made public. The appointment of a judge is a public official act on the part of the President. It seems to me that the President ought to be glad of an opportunity to give publicity to all the recommendations that may be filed with him. While there is no law against it now, they are considered confidential in their nature. If we had a law that provided that they should be public, it seems to me it would sometimes relieve the President of embarrassment.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. NORRIS. Not just now. Let me proceed for just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. At present I do. If, on the other hand, the President should decide that this is none of the business of Congress, that is for him to determine. I should think he would welcome it. If he considers otherwise, he can take such steps as he deems necessary; but it seems to me that to give publicity to recommendations filed on behalf of judicial appointments is something that would tend to give us better judicial appointments—and all other appointments, for that matter—than we have been getting in the past. At least, every man has a right to his opinion and to his judgment, and he has a right to say that he believes those things ought to be made public without his motives being impugned. The matter is of such consequence that the great Democratic Party, in its last national platform, had a plank in it in favor of this very proceeding, that publicity should be given.

Mr. President, in this particular case the motion is not of great importance, because it applies only to one man, and perhaps it is a doubtful question whether, if I offered the amendment in the nature of an instruction to make it general law, it would be subject to a point of order at this stage. I did it once before. If I had noticed this bill when it was going through, I would have offered an amendment that would have made it general. I want to give notice now that at the very first opportunity I get when any of these bills are going through providing for the appointment of judges I am going to offer an amendment making it general and providing that the President in all cases shall give publicity to the recommendations; and I am not going to find fault with the man who does not believe in it. He has a right to his opinion. He can vote against it. All I want is a vote, a roll-call vote, when that time comes. I will not ask for a roll call on this, because it is of very little importance, but when that opportunity comes I shall discuss it at more length than I feel I am justified in doing now.

I had said to the Senators who are in favor of hurrying this bill through that I would not debate the matter at all. I did not intend to say anything. I would not have said anything, but it seemed to me, after the remarks of the Senator from New York, that I could not have said less.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I simply desire to say a word.

The House provision in this bill is consistent with the declaration of the Democratic Party in its platform at Baltimore two years ago. This question arose in the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. There were some of us Democrats who felt that a decent regard for the platform of the party required us to insist upon inserting a provision on the subject such as the House embraced in this bill. I believe that it can do no harm. I believe that it may exercise a salutary influence.

It is popular now in both parties to speak of the great virtues accomplished by publicity. If people who preach of publicity and its advantages are sincere in their declarations, they surely can have no opposition to a bill requiring the President of the United States, when he nominates judicial officers, to file with the Senate all recommendations regarding the persons named.

I have only to add that I desire a yea-and-nay vote on this proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, this is not a new matter for the Senate nor for the conferees who have acted upon this bill. It has been up before this time and has been thrashed out in both Houses. The last case, I think, was the case of a Pennsylvania judge, where some amendment was passed by the House and disagreed to by the Senate and after two sessions of Congress the House receded from their proposition.

Mr. President, as far as I am concerned, I hope the motion of the Senator from Nebraska will not prevail, and that the motion made by the chairman of the conferees will prevail, that the Senate insist upon its disagreement and insist upon a further conference. I think that is due to the conference committee who made this first report.

I do not suppose anyone, particularly at this time, is moved by the idea that this or that or the other thing is or is not considered in any platform, Democratic or Republican. Even the wording of this amendment is unfortunate. It means nothing; it can accomplish nothing.

But, Mr. President, it seems to me clearly an invasion of the right of the President to select whom he chooses for nominations to the Senate. When the nomination comes to the Senate it is for the Senate to assure itself of the qualifications for office of the nominee. I can see where a President would be very much embarrassed. Suppose a good man were nominated for judge and some people who were not so good should indorse that nomination, it would prejudice the nominee and prejudice the choice of the President in the Senate by sending in such indorsements. The President would have to send them all in whether they were intended for the good of the nominee or otherwise.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the motion ought to be defeated, as it has often been defeated in the Senate before.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that this is an amendment to a conference report?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; it is an amendment offered to a motion made by the chairman of the conference committee.

Mr. NORRIS. It is a motion to recede, which means that the House provision of the bill will become a law if the motion prevails.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has held that the motion of the Senator from Nebraska has precedence over the motion to insist.

Mr. FLETCHER. That I understand, but as it was presented it seemed to be an amendment to the conference report, and I was going to suggest that such an amendment is out of order.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of supporting the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in favor of the Senate receding from the disagreement to the House provision, and to concur therein, which provision is:

Provided, however, That the President shall make public all indorsements made in behalf of the person appointed as such district judge.

Mr. President, what reasonable objection can be offered to this provision. I know of none; not one, except those objections which have always been made by those who desire the public business transacted in the dark and under cover of secrecy rather than in the open and in the light.

The spirit of the great Republic—the very breath that gave it life—was, "Take the people into your confidence." Mr. President, the Democratic platform adopted at Baltimore in 1912, upon which Woodrow Wilson was elected President of the United States, provides:

> We note with gratification the unanimous sentiment in favor of publicity, before the election, of campaign contributions—a measure demanded in our national platform of 1908, and at that time opposed by the Republican Party—and we commend the Democratic House of Representatives for extending the doctrine of publicity to recommendations, verbal and written, upon which presidential appointments are made.

By this platform declaration the Democratic Party is committed to support the provision which is here at issue, and I insist that we shall keep the faith, that we shall redeem another promise made by our party to the American people in our national platform.

The President, in appointing a Federal judge, acts as the agent of all the people. Why should the people, the principals from whom the agent derives his power and authority, be denied the right and opportunity to see and know the facts upon which their agent acted? What principal in the conduct and operation of his business affairs would allow his agent to secrete from him the facts surrounding a transaction? The great President who guides the destiny of this Republic believes in publicity. He has taken the people into his confidence in all things. He will do so in appointing a Federal judge. He will welcome such a law as is here proposed. He would submit, I have no doubt, to any citizen who requests it all recommendations made to him. We know that. What we want is to establish by law the principle of publicity, not only for this administration but for all that are to follow it. It is more important to have publicity in the selection of a judge than that of any other appointment, while it is important as to all. The Federal judge is appointed for life while other officers are appointed only for a short term of years. The Federal judge holds the scales in which are weighed not only the property of all the people, but the liberty and life of all the people.

Some say that to make public these recommendations would give the corporations, trusts, and privilege-seeking classes a chance to embarrass a candidate, or one whose name was under consideration, by indorsing him in order to defeat him or to embarrass him if selected. This argument will not hold water. In the first place my observation has always been that the corporation, the trust, and the monopoly never indorse those they do not want. They are too busy pulling wires to get selected the one they do want. Suppose they should resort to such a device or fraud as this? It would deceive no one; the people are not a lot of fools. They would see through this very quickly. The people can sift the wheat from the chaff. I notice one thing that stands out plainly, and that is the special-privilege class are all opposing this character of publicity. If it was such an easy device of deception, it is strange they are not all supporting it. It can never be said of the favor-seeking class that they "Do not know what they want." They always know and the light is one of the things they do not want—they work better in the dark. They do not want "publicity," because they work better privately and confidentially.

Mr. President, let us throw around the selecting of our judges the brightest light and the greatest publicity to the end that our courts may continue pure and above suspicion, for at least the safety and life of a Republic rests in the purity and incorruptibility of its judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will state it.

Mr. THOMAS. What is the form in which the question comes before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that the Senate recede from its amendment and assent to the House provision. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], and I withhold my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] and vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). Has the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have a pair with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. WALSH's name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. STERLING. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 7 with the original thereof, filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Oregon on the 18th day of February, 1915, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set may hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 18th day of February, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.] BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.
By S. A. KOZER, Deputy.

Senate joint memorial No. 7.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there is a limit on the amount of money that may be deposited by any person in the postal savings banks of the United States; and

Whereas the rate of interest paid by the Federal Government upon such deposits is 2 per cent per annum; and

Whereas the postal savings are loaned to private banks at the rate of 2½ per cent: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate, the house of representatives concurring, That our Representatives and Senators in Congress be, and are hereby, memorialized and requested to use their best endeavors to secure the passage of a law providing that all limitations upon the amount that may be deposited in postal savings banks be removed, and that the rate of interest paid by the Federal Government upon such deposits be increased to 3 per cent per annum; and further

Resolved, That the money that may hereafter be deposited in postal savings banks shall be used as a basis for the formation of a rural credit system in this country.

Adopted by the house February 16, 1915.

BEN SELLING,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 9, 1915.

W. LAIR THOMPSON,
President of the Senate.

(Indorsed:) Senate joint memorial No. 7, by Senator Dimick. J. W. Cochran, chief clerk Filed February 18, 1915, at 10.50 o'clock a. m. Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state, by S. A. Kozer, deputy.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21122) to validate certain homestead entries, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1045) thereon.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. HOLLIS. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 5542) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgages, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to provide a method of applying postal savings deposits to the promotion of the public welfare, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1048) thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILL INTRODUCED.

A bill was introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURLEIGH:

A bill (S. 7744) granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel Gurney; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL (H. R. 21546).

Mr. KERN submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to consider and adjudicate, under the act of Congress approved July 27, 1912, the claims of trust companies or other claimants for refund of taxes illegally collected on capital, surplus, or undivided profits, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to reimburse from the unexpended balance of the appropriation for "depots for coal," fiscal year 1913, certain persons, the same being the appraised value of the personal belongings of each of them which were lost while being lightered ashore at Katalla, Alaska, from the steamship by which transporting from Seattle, Wash., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHIVELY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $800 to pay Byford E. Long for extra services as clerk to the Committee on Pensions, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed.

Subsequently, Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the foregoing amendment, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

MERCHANTS BRIDGE, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. REED submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 554), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary or a subcommittee thereof be authorized, during the interval between the Sixty-third Congress and the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress or during a session or recess of the Sixty-fourth Congress, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ a stenographer, at a cost of not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with the subject matter of Senate joint resolution 111, Sixty-third Congress, now pending before a subcommittee of said committee, and to have such hearings printed for the use of the committee; that the expenses of such hearings be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the said committee and such subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate and may conduct said hearings and investigations in the city of Washington or elsewhere as it may deem proper.

ADVERTISEMENTS BY PATENT ATTORNEYS.

Mr. JAMES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 7427.

Mr. OLIVER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. JAMES. I believe the Senator will not object if he hears the bill read. It is a bill introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I think every Senator here will be interested in having it passed.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like——

Mr. JAMES. The bill is not four lines long. A lot of patent lawyers have gone around and gotten Senators and Representatives to give them letters, and they have been advertising in order to get the patronage of the public. This bill proposes to prevent that sort of business. It is solely for the protection of Senators and Representatives.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there was a unanimous-consent agreement to go into executive session at 6 o'clock and to take a recess at 6.15. I think that agreement should be carried out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent agreement is that not later than 6.15 o'clock the Senate shall take a recess.

Mr. JAMES. If the Senator is going to make that point, of course the unanimous-consent agreement has to be carried out.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., Saturday, February 27, 1915) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Sunday, February 28, 1915, at 10 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 27, 1915.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, we would draw near to Thee, that by the contact with infinite purity and goodness we may be able, in spite of the temptations which assail us, to live clean lives; to forgive our enemies, if we have any; to overcome evil with good by doing unto others as we would be done by, after the manner of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, KEOKUK, IOWA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to consider an emergency proposition introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENNEDY]. All parties at interest have agreed upon an adjustment of it, and all that remains is for an old bridge to be placed under the general bridge act. I wish to ask unanimous consent to consider that bill now.

The SPEAKER. If it will not take over five minutes the Chair will recognize the gentlemen.

Mr. ADAMSON. It will not take any more than the time necessary to read it. Everybody interested has agreed on it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21563) granting the consent of Congress to the Keokuk & Hamilton Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at Keokuk, Iowa.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Keokuk & Hamilton Bridge Co., and its successors and assigns, to reconstruct, maintain, and operate their bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Keokuk, Iowa, in the county of Lee, in the State of Iowa, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 20975. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bill of the following title, had insisted upon its amendments, asked a conference with the House, and had appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. JONES as the conferees on the part of the Senate:

H. R. 21201. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 21491. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 20643. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and the widows of such soldiers and sailors.

H. R. 21089. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and the widows of such soldiers and sailors.

H. R. 21218. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

CONFERENCE REPORT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 19422, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

Mr. MANN. Has the conference report heretofore been submitted?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I submit, Mr. Speaker, the conference report. It is in the hands of the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not make any point of order against the conference report—and I am not sure the point of order would be good—but this conference report in orderly procedure ought to be considered by the Senate first under the practice of both bodies. The other day the gentleman will recall that a bill was signed by the Speaker and Vice President as having been duly passed and enrolled. Unless we observe orderly procedure, it is almost impossible for the enrolling clerks and the Committee on Enrolled Bills to keep track of these matters and to know when and how a thing is passed, especially in these days of the session. I hope that nobody else is going to violate the practice and precedents.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman will allow me, I do not care to be held up here as violating the customs and rules without making a statement, at any rate, as to why I do so. The conferees recognize the fact that under ordinary procedure these papers would have gone first to the Senate, but upon not only the consent but request of the Senate conferees the papers were turned over to the House.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means the House conferees retained possession of the papers?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. We retained possession of the papers at the suggestion of the Senate conferees.

Mr. MANN. Well, I know; but after all, it is a bad practice. As I say, the enrolling clerks and the enrolling committees have a right to assume that the proper procedure is followed, and without that it is a very difficult matter for them to keep track of these proceedings.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I recognize the truth of what the gentleman says, and ordinarily I agree with him.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not sure I have the same report, but it is a copy of the report that was before the House in which objection was made with respect to the item for the board of education.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman will allow the statement to be read, I will make an explanation of that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to reading the statement in lieu of the report?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that is not this report. This report is made within the last six days of the session, and we did not wish to consume time to print.

Mr. MADDEN. My purpose in asking was to ascertain if it had the same language.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The same language is not in this report, but I will make a full explanation as to that.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the reading of the statement as long as the report has not been printed, but I desire to reserve the right to make a point of order against the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the right to make a point of order against the report. Is there objection to the reading of the statement in lieu of the report? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and the Clerk will read.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1461).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 7, 8, 14, 16, 17, 25, 27, 28, 30, 32, 35, 37, 39, 43, 46, 48, 52, 58, 59, 64, 67, 68, 73, 75, 76, 77, 79, 85, 89, 99, 103, 110, 111, 112, 118, 119, 120, and 121.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 19, 20, 29, 31, 33, 34, 38, 40, 44, 45, 47, 49, 50, 53, 55, 57, 60, 61, 65, 66, 69, 70, 71, 72, 80, 82, 83, 84, 86, 87, 88, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 100, 102, 106, 107, 108, 109, 115, 116, 123, 124, 126, 127, and 128, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$47,576"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and on page 17 of the bill, line 7, strike out the words "force and," and in line 8 strike out the words "fire department," and in line 7, after the word "police," insert the following: "Crossing police, park police, and fire department"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For constructing market buildings on the site of the present municipal fish wharf and market, including refrigerating and cold-storage plant, which shall be equipped for the accommodation of such retail business as may obtain at that point and shall serve as the wholesale receiving and distributing point for marine and other products to be retailed elsewhere in the District, within a limit of cost of $185,000 which is hereby fixed, $125,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$110,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$28,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$29,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$118,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$160,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$49,015"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 33 of the bill, line 6, strike out "$124,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$119,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$27,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "to be immediately available"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$48,600"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 81: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$131,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to reserve a point of order on the conference report. I want to ask the chairman of the committee—I notice in the conference report there is an agreement on certain expenses for improvement of streets in the District. Is there any appropriation in there for the improvement of streets otherwise than under the Borland amendment?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. There is not. The Borland amendment is now permanent law, and it is not carried in this bill at all.

Mr. BORLAND. That covers the improvement of streets?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House how many items are still in disagreement?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Only one, which has been read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Which one?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Amendment No. 1 is still in disagreement.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose there has been eliminated from the bill the question of the appointment of the members of the board of education as provided in the point of order sustained by the Chair the other day?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes, sir; it is eliminated from the bill entirely.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield a moment to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adhere to its disagreement as to Senate amendment No. 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House adhere to its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to amend Senate amendment No. 1 by offering a substitute. I ask if that is in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. As a motion to concur with an amendment, it is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I desire to send the amendment to the Clerk's desk. I move to strike out all of Senate amendment No. 1 and concur with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. In other words, my motion is to concur, with an amendment by striking out all of the Senate amendment and substituting in place thereof the language which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, it is not a Senate amendment; it is a House provision.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I concur in the Senate amendment to strike it out, with an amendment striking out all of the House provision and inserting in lieu thereof the language sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. UNDERWOOD moves to concur in the Senate amendment No. 1 by striking out all of the House amendment and substituting therefor——

Mr. MANN. Striking out the language in the bill and inserting in lieu thereof.

The Clerk continued as follows:

And inserting in lieu thereof:

"Provided, That a joint select committee shall be appointed, consisting of three Senators, to be named by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, and three Members of the House, to be named by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, whose duty it shall be to prepare and submit to Congress a statement of the proper proportion of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, or any branch thereof, including interest on the funded debt, which shall be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, together with the reason upon which their conclusions may be based; and in discharge of the duty hereby imposed said committee is authorized to employ such assistance as it may deem advisable, at an expense not to exceed the sum of $5,000, and said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for that purpose."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the amendment, because it is not germane.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in Senate amendment——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make my point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I can not recall the precedent now, but some years ago this same condition arose before the House, where there was a substantive proposition pending, and a motion to appoint a committee to investigate and report was offered at this stage of the proceedings in lieu of the provision in the bill; and it was then held to be germane to the proposition, because the real issue before this House was the question of the half-and-half agreement between the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia in reference to the raising of revenue and the levying of taxes. Now, that is the question in issue between the two Houses. The House of Representatives has offered a provision affecting the present half-and-half agreement.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will suspend a moment, the Chair will state that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is preferential over this whole business at this stage of the proceedings. If that is voted up by the House, why, then, the rest of this is unnecessary; and if that is voted down, the Chair will hear the gentleman from Alabama and also the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the Speaker ought to pass on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the use of passing on a point of order that would not be pertinent if the motion of the gentleman from Illinois prevails?

Mr. MANN. When the motion was made it was in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman, then. He may proceed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his motion, if he will, for this reason: As far as I am concerned, I should like to have this matter thoroughly investigated, with facts brought before the House on which we could find a verdict or something on which to base it. But if the proposition that I proposed can not prevail, I would vote for the gentleman's proposition rather than to tie this House up and beat this bill by a motion to adhere. And I should like to vote for this proposition.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that I suppose that no rights would be lost if the motion to concur were at present withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to make it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion to concur at present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will not take up the time of the House and the Chair at this time in attempting to discuss the merits of the proposition that I sent to the Clerk's desk. If the Chair rules it is in order, I would then like to discuss it. But, as to the point of order, the question at issue before the House is a proposition to change the present half-and-half agreement between the Government and the District of Columbia, the House proposing to make a change and the Senate refusing to accept the change.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield to me at that point? The gentleman has several times in the last few minutes used the words "half-and-half agreement." Now, the gentleman does not mean to convey to the House the impression that there is any agreement with regard to a half and half between two contracting parties, but that it is embodied in a piece of legislation by Congress passed in 1878, which is of the same dignity and power, and no greater, than the piece of legislation now before the Congress.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I referred to that as an agreement. It is a legislative agreement.

Mr. BORLAND. The word "agreement" was simply a figure of speech.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is an agreement.

Mr. BORLAND. The legislation now before Congress is of the same dignity, power, and force as the legislative act of 1878.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not contending that Congress has not the right to change the law it has already made. But there is a legislative agreement, written on the statute books, to the effect that the people of the District of Columbia shall pay one half of the burden of maintaining the District government, and the other half, in lieu of taxes to be charged against the Government, shall be taken out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. BORLAND. Who were the parties to the agreement?
Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Government of the United States.
Mr. SIMS. Itself?
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.
Mr. SIMS. Nobody else.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. But that is not material. I just wanted to state the case.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this matter being in issue, the real issue is whether or not we shall maintain this legislative agreement or legislative provision as to the division of the payment of the revenue, one-half by the Government and one-half by the District of Columbia. Now, the provision that I have offered—the two Houses having disagreed—is to appoint a committee of the two Houses, a joint committee, to ascertain all the facts in reference to this same matter and report back to the next Congress the facts they ascertain for the Congress to pass upon.

Now, I say that the proposition that Congress, instead of passing upon the situation now, should refer the matter to a committee is germane to the original proposition. If it were a matter before the House it would always be in order to refer for further consideration by Congress. Now, here is a matter pending between the two Houses, a matter in dispute, and my proposition is to refer the very proposition pending between the two Houses to a joint committee for further consideration.

It seems to me it is clearly germane and would be in order, if it were solely a House proposition, to refer for further information, and my proposition is to refer to a joint committee. It seems to me it makes it clearly germane to the proposition.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. Speaker, the proposition pending before the House is a District of Columbia appropriation bill, a bill making appropriations to run the municipal government of the District. Under the act of June 11, 1878, half of the amount appropriated for the expenses of the District of Columbia is to be paid out of the Federal Treasury. This House in its wisdom, by a vote of 186 to 100, saw fit to repeal the act of 1878, which act is of no higher dignity than this act, should it become a law, by providing that the Federal Government should not contribute one-half of the expenses of the District of Columbia.

Now, that is the question at issue between the two Houses. I am sure no one will controvert the proposition that an amendment to that amendment must be germane to it to be in order. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], in my judgment, is not germane to it. That amendment does not affect the amount of money paid out of the Treasury of the United States in accordance with the provisions of this bill. It has no effect whatever on the moneys appropriated in this bill, but that amendment deals entirely with a different subject matter, to wit, it provides for the appointment of a commission to investigate certain matters and to make a report to the next Congress.

The SPEAKER. Not a commission; a committee.

Mr. CRISP. A joint committee; yes; which is the same proposition, because it will have to have the approval of the President to create this joint committee or joint commission. The amendment provides that they shall take up a matter that has no connection whatever with the matter in dispute between the two Houses; it provides that they shall investigate an extraneous matter. It provides an appropriation for making this investigation. It does not affect this amendment and, in my judgment, it is not germane.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, in answer to what the gentleman from Georgia has said, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the proposition in amendment numbered 1, which is in dispute, is itself legislation. It had to be put on this bill by rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman is mistaken about that. Nothing of the sort ever occurred.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought it was a proposition for which a rule was required.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. I grant your proposition that if legislation is on the bill which is not in order it can be amended, but that amendment must be germane. In my judgment this is not germane.

The SPEAKER. What is the reason why it is not germane?

Mr. CRISP. Because the issue in dispute between the two Houses is whether or not the Federal Government shall be charged with one-half of the money appropriated by this bill. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama does not deal with this bill at all. It does not affect in the slightest how these moneys appropriated by this legislation before the House shall be charged, but provides that a joint committee shall make an investigation as to what part of the expenses of the District government the Federal Government should bear and to report the results of the same to some future Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And another question which arises, Mr. Speaker, is this: If one part of this bill is referred to a commission——

The SPEAKER. A committee——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Without the settlement of the whole matter, would not the whole bill go to it?

The SPEAKER. Of course not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not think it is a matter of course, but if the Chair would hold that, then it would become such.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Kentucky finished?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, my recollection is—and the Speaker himself may have a better remembrance of it than I—that some years ago, on the immigration bill, there was reported to the House and taken under consideration a complete immigration bill, and some gentleman—I am not sure who; I think it was Gen. Grosvenor—offered an amendment or substitute providing for the appointment of an immigration commission, and that amendment was held in order and was voted for by the House.

That amendment was held in order providing for a commission. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] states that the amendment for a commission was offered as a substitute for the literacy test in the immigration bill. I do not recall myself; I do not recall the arguments or whether a point of order was made. Doubtless it was, because it was a very hot contest, and the commission amendment, as a substitute or amendment for a provision in the bill, was held to be in order.

It looks to me as though that were on all-fours with this proposition. Here was a legislative provision inserted in this bill under a rule of the House as a matter of legislation, to determine how the money should be paid out, or from what funds it should be paid out. That matter is in controversy now between the two Houses. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] proposes to submit that matter in a way to the test of a joint committee. I can not see how the proposition is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I should like to address myself briefly to the point of order. The provision of the House bill is as follows:

> That the following sums, respectively, are appropriated, in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916. That all moneys appropriated for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the revenues of said District to the extent that they are available, and the balance shall be paid out of money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, but the amount to be paid from the Treasury of the United States shall in no event be as much as one-half of said expenses, and all laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

That was offered from the floor by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] as an amendment in lieu of the words of the original bill, which words of the original bill are embodied in the Senate amendment, as follows:

> That one half of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, namely:

At the time the bill was submitted to the House the words of the bill were as the Senate amendment now is. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] offered an amendment embracing the words as the bill left the House. That amendment was held in order without a special rule. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] does not recall, but it was held in order without a special rule, on the ground that it was within the terms of the Holman rule, and necessarily reduced the amount carried in the bill, because it provided that not as much as one-half should be paid out of the Federal Treasury, whereas the original bill provided that one-half should be paid out of the Federal Treasury.

Now, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has offered a substitute or a motion to concur with an amendment to the Senate amendment, in which he seeks to restore the original language of the House bill with a legislative provision creating a joint committee of Congress and authorizing it to do certain work and to expend certain public money. There is no doubt in the world but that it is a pure piece of legislation, an additional appropriation not authorized by law, and under no circumstances would it be germane or in order on this bill if it had been offered originally before the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] offered his amendment. If this bill was pending in the House with the original language in it, and the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama was offered, it would be held subject to a point of order without a moment's discussion.

The SPEAKER. On what ground?

Mr. BORLAND. On the ground that it is legislation, that it creates a joint committee of the House and Senate, that it authorizes that committee to expend certain money to investigate certain things and therefore is not germane to the proposition embodied in the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I think he is mistaken in his statement of fact that the original proposition would be germane because it reduces expenses. It does not do it in this bill. It might do it in the end, but it does not do it in this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. And this might do it in the end.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that the only question here now is whether this is germane, not whether it is new legislation, or anything of the sort.

Mr. BORLAND. That is the question I want to discuss. Whether the new amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama would reduce expenses is purely argumentative. On its face it does not reduce expenses. On its face it provides for additional expenses.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but that has nothing to do with this question—is this amendment of the gentleman from Alabama germane to the proposition that the Senate has put in here?

Mr. BORLAND. It is not germane, and it can not be made germane on any but a purely argumentative theory that the whole subject under discussion is the half-and-half act of 1878. Now, it is argued here that because this bill changes the method in which the appropriations are paid and the proportion of the way in which they are paid out of the Federal Treasury and the District treasury, therefore the whole act of 1878 is ingrafted on this bill in some argumentative form and is open to the investigation of a committee. That is the weakness of the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. He says that at one time some immigration legislation was here and a substitute was offered to appoint a commission to investigate a subject under discussion. But his question was clearly broader than the question here, which is, How shall this money be paid?

Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] simply provides that the money shall be paid in a certain way which makes a less burden upon the Federal Treasury. The amendment of the gentleman from Alabama does not touch that question at all, but goes into a very much wider field—that of the act of 1878 and its binding force upon the Federal Government at this time—which is clearly not germane. It broadens the proposition infinitely beyond what was embraced in the original proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend my point of order to this amendment, because it is legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. If it is germane to the Senate amendment, the gentleman's last point of order does not lie.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, awhile ago I referred to the ruling on the immigration bill some years ago.

On June 25, 1906 (p. 9166 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date), while the immigration bill was under consideration, Gen. Grosvenor, of Ohio, moved to strike out section 38 and insert an amendment which provided for a commission. Section 38 was the section which provided for the literacy test. Gen. Grosvenor's amendment provided that a commission is hereby created, and so forth, defining the jurisdiction and authority of the commission.

Mr. Watson, of Indiana, was in the chair. He was a very able parliamentarian, and his decision sustaining the amendment and overruling the point of order is found on page 9166 of the RECORD. Of course, here in the House we are governed very largely by precedent. It seems to me that the precedent is squarely in point.

The SPEAKER. As far as the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is concerned, this proposition of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has nothing to do with the way in which the money of this particular bill is appropriated. The motion of the gentleman from Alabama is to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The original section in the bill was struck out on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], changing the half-and-half plan, as follows:

That the following sums, respectively, are appropriated in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916: That all moneys appropriated for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the revenues of said District to the extent that they are available, and the balance shall be paid out of money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, but the amount to be paid from the Treasury of the United States shall in no event be as much as one-half of said expenses, and all laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

That amendment was secured under the Holman rule, as has been stated. The Senate struck out all of that and restored the original language of the bill as it was reported to the House, as follows:

That one-half of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, namely—

Both the original amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky and this Senate amendment have reference to appropriating money and nothing else. The language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama is simply an addendum to that, and reads as follows:

Provided, That a joint select committee shall be appointed, consisting of three Senators, to be named by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, and three Members of the House, to be named by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, whose duty it shall be to prepare and submit to Congress a statement of the proper proportion of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, or any branch thereof, including interest on the funded debt, which shall be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, giving the reasons upon which their conclusions are based, and in discharging the duty hereby imposed said committee is authorized to employ such assistance as it may deem advisable, at an expense not to exceed the sum of $5,000, and the said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. CRISP. Will the Speaker pardon me for one suggestion?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. The Chair stated that the amendment restored the old language and added new matter. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the unbroken practice of the House that if any part of an amendment is out of order the whole amendment is out of order, and I would like for the Speaker to think whether the new matter he speaks of would have been in order had it been offered as an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Georgia a question; he is a good parliamentarian. The rule in regard to new legislation does not apply on an appropriation bill when it comes back from the Senate, does it?

Mr. CRISP. I think it would, as this is offered as an amendment; and I think nothing would be in order that was not germane.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And this is a House amendment, too.

The SPEAKER. But we are operating upon a Senate amendment.

Mr. CRISP. Striking out a part of the text that the House passed.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. CRISP. I call the attention of the Chair to the proposition that if any part of an amendment is out of order the whole fails.

The SPEAKER. What part of this amendment does the gentleman claim is out of order?

Mr. CRISP. The appointment of a commission and direction to report to the next Congress as to what proportionate part of the expenses of the District should be paid out of the Treasury. I claim that is new legislation and not germane to the Senate amendment, and it does not affect appropriations in this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question of whether it is new legislation would have applied originally, but it does not apply in this situation, and the Holman rule has nothing to do with the amendment. In the opinion of the Chair, the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] contains a proposition which is germane, and therefore the point of order raised by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is overruled.

Mr. UNDERWOOD rose.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. MANN. In the amendment the gentleman has just offered it was not very clearly stated just what the motion was.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My motion was to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment striking out all of the language of the House bill in reference to this point in dispute and inserting in lieu thereof the language that I sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MANN. But that leaves out the appropriating clause of the bill. What the gentleman intends to do is to concur in the Senate amendment by adding the language sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, have I the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has the floor. Does the gentleman from Illinois wish to renew his motion that he withdrew?

Mr. MANN. I do not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I would like to see if we can not agree upon time for debate.

Mr. MANN. I think we had better proceed a little while without an agreement.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. What does the gentleman think of an hour?

Mr. MANN. I think we had better proceed. It is entirely within the control of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. All right; we will proceed for the present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, as the proponent of the proposition I would like to have 10 minutes to state the case, and then I would like to have 5 minutes additional in order to answer any questions that may be asked.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Then I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama 15 minutes, and he can use it as he sees fit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak for 10 minutes, and to reserve the remaining 5 minutes.

As the House knows, an arrangement was made by legislation 30 or 40 years ago providing that the District of Columbia should not collect taxes from the Government on Government property, and that in lieu of those taxes the Government should pay one-half of the expenses of running the District, and the people of the District should pay the other half by taxation.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. For what purpose?

Mr. CRISP. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is it?

Mr. CRISP. Did the Government ever pay taxes in the District on any property, or in any State of the Union?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not advised as to that proposition. I am stating the reason why this agreement was entered into. It ran satisfactorily for a great many years. The question now has come as to whether or not it is a fair proposition to pay one-half of the expenses of this District, and for the taxpayers of the District to pay only the other half. The position that I take before the House is this, that the Government of the United States ought not to put the entire burden of running this District government on the people of the District.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not yield much time. I will yield for a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will ask the gentleman if there is any such proposition pending before Congress, such as he has just stated?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not say that there is any pending. The only question pending before the House is my proposition, and I am glad to see that the gentleman from Kentucky by his question concedes that I am right, as I understand him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Well, the gentleman fails to understand me.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the gentleman from Kentucky maintains that the people of the District ought to carry all of the burden of this government? Is that right?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have never said that. I have always said to the contrary, and the amendment which was adopted and put upon the appropriation bill is exactly the contrary to what the gentleman from Alabama says.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then that is what I said in the beginning—that the gentleman conceded that the people of the District ought not to bear the entire burden of this District government. I just want to get the gentleman's position accurately. It is conceded by the gentleman, who is the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I suppose by everyone else in the House, that the entire burden of this District government ought not to be put on the people of the District. Then the question is, How much ought they to carry? Mr. Speaker, we may talk about some people having great palaces in the District of Columbia, but the people of that class do not live here as a rule. They pay on their real estate, but the balance of their taxes are paid back in the States where they live. That is true of most of them. The burden of the taxes in this District rests on the plain people who live in the District and who earn moderate salaries. We are keeping up a great city with wide boulevards and great parks, and we are keeping it up as the pride of this Nation, and I am proud of it, and I believe my constituency is proud of it.

It is manifest that the fact that the Government has this large number of Government buildings here that must be maintained, that must be protected from fire, that must have general police protection outside of the police protection that is in the building, with the other functions of the city government that must be performed, so far as the District property is concerned—it is manifest, I say, that the burden of keeping up the property of the Government of the United States ought not to rest, in justice and fairness, on only the people who live in the District of Columbia. They could not carry the burden. It would be an impossible burden, if it rested on them, and there ought to be some fair adjustment of it. The situation will remain as it is, and it will be a bone of contention Congress after Congress unless we reach some reasonable, sane, proper settlement of the difficulty. I do not think the proposition in the original language of this bill in any way solves the difficulty in a capable way. As I understand the language in the bill which the gentleman from Kentucky seeks to adhere to, it merely provides that the same proportion of taxes shall be levied, or, in other words, that taxes shall be levied as under existing law to-day, and that then, after that levy is collected, be it great or small, the Government shall pay the balance. I think I state that correctly; and if not, I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will correct me—that the Government shall pay the balance after you have levied the taxes under existing law. With all due respect to the gentleman who offered the proposition, I do not believe that that is a fair, just, or proper way to determine this question. There is a certain amount of property in this District owned by its citizens. There is a certain amount owned by the Government.

The citizens of the District receive certain benefits and the Government receives certain benefits. You should not go out and tax a man just because you can tax him. You should only levy taxes to the extent that the exigencies of the Government require, and in distributing the burden it should be distributed not as a matter of charity to help the District out with so much revenue that it can not pay, but there must be some place, some line of demarcation, where you can determine that the Government ought to pay a certain portion of the burden and that the people of the District ought to bear the other portion; and when you fix that, then you ought not to levy a dollar more of taxes than the exigencies of the Government require. You do not want to levy taxes on the people unless your Government requires the money to run the Government. Therefore, I say that the logical way to settle this proposition is to have a determination as to what is the fair share for the Government to pay, and after you have ascertained that fair share then levy your taxes accordingly. My proposition is to appoint a committee that can go out here and ascertain these facts and ultimately bring them back to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARNER). The Chair will state that the gentleman has used 10 minutes of his time.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the proposition which is now before the House is the same old ruse that has been employed from time immemorial to defeat the interests of the people. The amendment which the gentleman from Alabama has just offered is a copy of a proposition offered in the Senate by Senator GALLINGER.

The gentleman from Alabama proposes that the half-and-half principle shall be continued during the proposed investigation. Why should the House not stand to its proposition and, during the pendency of the inquiry or investigation, let the better plan, the equitable plan, prevail in the meantime—that the District of Columbia should be taxed at only a reasonable rate, that all the money derived during that time shall be expended upon its own projects, and during that time that the Government of the United States furnish whatever balance may be necessary, not exceeding one-half. The plan proposed by the gentleman from Alabama is the same one which the railroads and other great corporations of the country have adopted to defeat the interests of the people during all the years gone by; that is, to continue a wrong while an appeal is being made to the courts. This wrong is to be continued while an appeal is to be made to this commission. And what kind of a commission is proposed? I will tell you the kind of commission that is proposed. The kind of commission that is proposed was suggested by the Washington Evening Star of January 13, 1915, in which it says:

> This commission should be, in short, the same sort of body as the committee that worked out the present financial system and form of government for the District of Columbia.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not propose a commission. The purpose of this proposition is a committee—three to be appointed by the Speaker of the House and three to be appointed by the Vice President of the United States—and I am sure that the gentleman will not contest the fact that the Speaker and the Vice President will appoint Members who will fairly represent this body.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will comment upon that in a moment. Further, quoting from the Washington Star on the date just named, I find this language:

In the selection of its members—

Referring to the commission—

the real character of the commission should be borne in mind, so that it will not be prejudiced in advance of its inquiry against the existing system or in favor of a radical departure therefrom.

Now, that is Senator Gallinger's proposition, and that is the proposition the gentleman from Alabama has brought in here, that this commission should not be in favor of a radical departure from the present plan.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I deny entirely that is my proposition, and on its face it shows it is not. I am not standing for any commission, but I am asking for a joint committee, one-half of which committee will be appointed by the Speaker of this House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is no difference between a commission and what is proposed and designated as a joint committee. A joint committee was appointed back in the seventies to inquire into this very subject, and it reported that the District of Columbia should pay 60 per cent of the expenses of the District of Columbia, and that the Federal Government should pay only 40 per cent, and it took the local lobby three years to defeat that proposition and get the half-and-half.

The gentleman from Alabama would have you to understand that the location of the Federal Government here is a burden upon the District. The Federal Government in its local pay roll occupies the same attitude to the District of Columbia that local factories would occupy. We hear the plaint every day that the District of Columbia has no factories and consequently no great pay roll, but the Federal Government maintains in the District of Columbia the best of all factories—a money factory—and its pay roll is unequaled by any other factory of which I know. Six million dollars are distributed in the District every month in the way of salaries. What sort of manufactories would distribute more money than that?

The District of Columbia owes its existence to the Federal Government. It owes its future existence to the Federal Government. Remove the Federal Government and the value of property here would go to pieces for the want of this great pay roll. How can anybody insist that the location of the Federal Government here is a burden upon the local people? If you propose to tax the Federal Government because it has its property here and has its money factory here, which give substance to District of Columbia values, you would next be wanting to impose taxes upon the sun, which gives light to the District of Columbia; you would want to impose taxes upon the Potomac River, which gives water to the District of Columbia; one is as reasonable as the other. But the Federal Government gives to the District of Columbia everything it is. They talk about the tax rate and the reasonableness of it. The tax rate on real estate here is $1.50 a hundred on a two-thirds valuation. That is a dollar a hundred on the real valuation. I and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] have time and again shown you 40 cities in the United States that compare to the nearest in size to the District of Columbia and have shown you that the lowest rate prevailing among them is right here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. CULLOP. In the event the gentleman's amendment is adopted, which provides that in no event shall the Federal Government pay one-half of the taxes, who will settle the proportion to be paid by the District and the proportion to be paid by the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Congress will do that in making its appropriations.

Now, then, as I was about to say when the gentleman from Indiana interrupted me, only a few days ago I took a clipping from a Bloomington (Ind.) paper, under date of February 15, which gives the rate of taxation in Indiana cities, and it is as follows:

Loogootee, $3.70; Shoals, $3.57; Madison, $3.46; North Vernon, $3.76; Salem, $4.04; Campbellsburg, $3.82; Washington, $3.71; Montgomery, $3.84; Elnora, $3.27; Versailles, $2.90; Osgood, $3.90; Scottsburg, $3.65; Bedford, $3.84; Mitchell, $4.44; Hope, $3.98; Edinburg, $2.95; Columbus, $3.04; Jeffersonville, $3.59; Charlestown, $3.11; Bloomington, $4.60; Paoli, $4.29; Orleans, $3.65; French Lick, $4.96; West Baden, $4.42; Corydon, $3.62; Seymour, $3.56; Crothersville, $3.51; Brownstown, $3.37; Bicknell, $4.19; Vincennes, $3.59; Sullivan, $3.48.

That list is a fair comparison of what the rates of taxation are in this country with those in the District of Columbia, and shows that Indiana towns are taxed between three and four times as much as the District of Columbia—in rate, I mean.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the local press here has outlined in advance a course of procedure by which the House will be asked to abandon its position and accept the position of the Senate.

I read now from the Washington Times of Tuesday, December 15, 1914. More than two months ago they outlined their plan of procedure to compel this House to yield its position to the Senate. The article says:

Senators who are concerned about District legislation do not believe there will be any serious collision between the two Houses over the District bill. The Senate will pass a bill which will observe the half-and-half plan. The bill will then go to conference. Senators believe the House will recede from the Johnson rider after a reasonable length of time.

But in case the House conferees should insist on sticking to the Johnson rider and trying to deal a death blow to the half-and-half covenant, then there is little reason to doubt the Senate would simply refuse to pass the pending bill at all.

And it further says in quoting Senator GALLINGER:

I am strongly opposed to the Johnson amendment—

Said Senator GALLINGER.

I have always opposed the destruction of the half-and-half plan, and I adhere to that position.

Let me ask the House this question: When did Senator GALLINGER and when did the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] conceive the idea of referring this question to a commission? As long as the District of Columbia was having half of its taxes paid by the taxpayers in the States, neither Senator GALLINGER nor the gentleman from Alabama raised a voice in protest, nor did they have one word to say about a commission. But when this House had acted in behalf of the people of the States and had said that these people are taxed at a greater rate than are the people of the District of Columbia, then, and not until then, a commission is asked for to inquire into rates and relations. Senator GALLINGER openly says that he took his position from former knowledge. The gentleman from Alabama comes and says notwithstanding he has been here 20 years, that to-day he has no opinion upon this subject, and asks that it be referred to a commission in order that he may be enlightened. Members of this House who have been here many years less than he has have gained information sufficient for them, by a large and overwhelming majority, to stand by the people of the States upon this question and not yield to the blandishments which are showered by the people of the District of Columbia in a further effort to have half of their taxes paid by the people of the States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman conceded awhile ago that he thought the Government ought to pay a portion of this tax.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to correct him. When the gentleman misunderstood me, I did not interrupt him further, because he had just shown he did not desire to be interrupted; but the position I have always taken is this: That the people of the District of Columbia should be taxed at a reasonable rate of taxation. Let that rate bring what revenue it will, and let it be applied to the expenses of the District of Columbia, and then, if that is not sufficient, let the United States Government supply the rest. But the people of the District of Columbia should not be permitted, as they are now seeking, to compel the people of the States to pay half of their taxes, when they will this year have between two and three million dollars left in their own treasury as a surplus.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I did not understand the gentleman's position when I stated it awhile ago, because it is different from what I stated. But he does not take the position, then, that there ought to be any fixed division of the taxation, whereas I take the position that there ought to be an honest ascertainment of how much burden should be borne by one and how much by the other.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States has its seat in the District of Columbia under a provision of the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution created the District of Columbia and located the Capital of the United States here, and retains to itself exclusive jurisdiction and legislative power. The people of the United States have their Central Government here and have their Capital here. The people of the District of Columbia have no power over the Capital of the United States. The people who live here are citizens of Alabama, and of Kentucky, and of Iowa, and of Kansas, and of all the States of the Union. No matter whether they have been here 2 years or 10 years or 20, they still claim their residence in the States, because that is the only place where they have a home, where they can exercise any influence or any authority as citizens of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Make it very brief. I have only five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I should like to ask the gentleman if he owns property in the District of Columbia?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not a cent's worth of property in the District of Columbia, except some second-hand furniture.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I should like to ask the gentleman if he has a brother by the name of John?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And I should like to ask if he owned a piece of property on P Street?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And I should like to ask the gentleman when he sold it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. He sold it some years ago.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Let me ask——

Mr. CAMPBELL. I spurn the gentleman's questions. They are beneath him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield to me to ask him if his brother owned that property, and who got the money for the sale?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can not yield for any such pusillanimous position as taken by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will you repeat that when you go out, after this is over?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from Kentucky may be influenced because he has no property in the District of Columbia. He may think other men are influenced because they have property in the District of Columbia. If I had $1,000,000 worth of property in the District of Columbia, I would still believe in the Federal authority controlling, as it does control, and in paying its share of the taxes, as it ought to pay, for the maintenance of the government of the District of Columbia. This is the Capital of the Nation. It is not like the county seat of a county, nor the capital of a State, secured by the people of the town where the county seat is located or the people of the city where the capital is located.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield just for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Make it very short.

Mr. CARAWAY. What is the tax rate in your home town—Pittsburg, Kans.?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think it is about a cent and a half, or something like that. I do not know.

Mr. CARAWAY. And you have property there?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have.

Mr. CARAWAY. Do you not know that you pay more than that? It is 1.90.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, it is coming up. But that is not the question. There is only one Capital of the United States; and does any man want the Capital of this Nation to be on a parity with the other towns and cities in America in its parks, in the manner in which its streets are kept up, in the manner in which it is policed, and all other things that go to make up the capital of a great nation?

Every American citizen, I care not where he comes from, ought to be willing to make this a great capital, greater than the capital of any other country, and I have never heard anybody except Members upon the floor of this House complain about the share that the people of the United States pay in maintaining the Government of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, lest this subject become any more confused or involved, let us get back for a moment to just exactly what this proposition is. I want to clear up two fallacies, or to my mind wrongful impressions, that were left and are left upon the minds of Members of this House by something that has been said by the advocates of this Gallinger-Underwood amendment.

In the first place there is no agreement between the people of the United States and anybody in regard to the taxes of the District of Columbia, and there can be no agreement. There never was such an agreement, and there never will be such an agreement. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], who is a good lawyer, has stated his position on that question very clearly. This Government owns the District of Columbia as the seat of government, and the Congress is the sole legislative body; and I deny that any set of gentlemen in the District of Columbia have the right, or can contend for the right, to deal on equal terms with the law-making power of the Federal Government. It is a legal absurdity, and the gentleman from Kansas explained it and made it as clear as I have.

Now, in the second place, the amendment which the House adopted, and which represents six years of patient investigation by this House, six years of amendment and discussion by this House, which finally crystallizes in the language of this bill, provides that the revenues of the District of Columbia shall be applied to local purposes, so far as they are available, and the balance, if any, shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. It is not true that there is any proposition here to place all of the burdens of local government upon the taxpayers of the District, and it is not true that the taxes of the District are going to be raised as the result of this amendment.

Now, what is true? The private property in the District of Columbia now pays 15 mills by law, which is one-half, approximately, of the taxes which each of you gentlemen pays in his own town; approximately one-half. But there is no proposition to raise that 15 mills in this act. It would take substantive legislation by Congress to do that. But that 15 mills, which is imposed only on the small home owners and the small merchants in the District of Columbia, raises now $7,000,000 a year. If we adhere to the half-and-half principle you will have $14,000,000 as the combined sum; and if you decide in your wisdom, as you did decide, that you ought to spend only $11,500,000 in the government of the District, and in doing it still have $2,500,000 left, the question is whether you will use that $2,500,000 to further reduce the taxes, which are now only 15 mills, or whether the surplus belongs in the Treasury of the people who have been contributing for years to these expenses.

Now, when this half-and-half principle was first adopted the amount contributed by the Federal Government was only $300,000. To-day it is $7,000,000, and if the District of Columbia next year should raise $8,000,000, they would claim $8,000,000 out of the Federal Treasury; and if the following year they should raise $10,000,000, they would claim $10,000,000 out of the Federal Treasury; and it would be necessary, then, either to spend it or return it to the Federal Treasury, or further reduce the 15 mills tax.

That is the proposition here. There is not a word here that raises the taxes of a single home owner. I will tell you what it does do. It strikes down the bulwark behind which the tax dodger in the District of Columbia has hidden heretofore, and behind which he has escaped the payment of taxes on personal and intangible property. The great fortune of the late Mr. C. W. Post, made by making breakfast food at Battle Creek, Mich., was represented on his death by $30,000,000 of property, of which only $150,000 was real estate, and the rest was stocks and bonds. He was a nominal resident of the District of Columbia. He had withdrawn the $30,000,000 from taxation in Michigan, and he paid no tax in the District of Columbia because the half-and-half principle protected him. How did the half-and-half principle protect him? Because if you taxed Mr. Post's property, his intangible wealth here, you would tax the Federal Government dollar for dollar in an equal amount as long as the tax stands. If you had taxed Mr. Post's $30,000,000 you would have put the same amount of tax on the people of the United States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and to advocate the motion proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], that the House adhere to its disagreement to this amendment.

I want to call the attention of the Members of the House who may not be well versed in parliamentary law as some others to the fact that the parliamentary effect of the motion to adhere is to frankly put the Senate on notice that the House will not give up its contention, and that the House does not care to have further conferences with the Senate on this amendment.

Now, that is the intention of the proponents of the motion to further adhere to the House disagreement. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would not do any injustice to the citizens of the District of Columbia. I am proud of the Capital. Neither do I desire to impose upon them unjust burdens of taxation. But neither do I desire for them to escape fair and reasonable taxation and have the people of the States, the people of my district and of your district, bear a part of the burdens that they themselves should bear.

Now, what does the amendment that the House has adopted do? It simply provides that there shall be a reasonable tax levied upon the property of the District of Columbia, and that the sum raised from that reasonable tax shall be first applied to maintaining the municipal government of the District of Columbia. Now, I do not believe that this body should act as the town council for the District of Columbia, as it does. I believe in local self-government, and I believe these people should govern their own affairs and pay their own taxes. But under the law we are their council.

Now, what is the practical effect of this amendment if it is adopted? There will be a reasonable rate of taxation levied. Then this body, the lawmaking body of the District, determines what amount of money is necessary to run this District government, and the amount raised by the people themselves is first applied, and then the Federal Government contributes the difference.

Now, you hear it talked—and it has been repeatedly talked—that the repeal of the act of 1878 works a great injustice on the people of the District of Columbia; that they now, under existing law, bear excessive tax burdens.

I desire to call the attention of the House to this fact, first, that the people of the District of Columbia pay no taxes on intangible personal property, and real estate is assessed for taxation at two-thirds of its value.

Mr. WALSH. Under the two-thirds assessed valuation, what tax rate does the gentleman think would be considered fair and reasonable for the District of Columbia under the plan proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. CRISP. Under the plan proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky we would not take up the question of tax rates. It would be left for Congress to determine what amount of money was needed to run the affairs of the government.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman any idea how much increase there would be in the tax rate under the same assessment?

Mr. KEATING. There would not be any.

Mr. CRISP. If you will make intangible property bear its just burden, as they do in my State and in yours, I do not believe there would be one cent of increase; but, on the contrary, I believe you could reduce the tax rate.

Now, I am going to give the House some figures that I used in a speech some time ago. These are not my figures. They are the figures of the United States Census Office.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, here is a man who knows something about the subject he is talking about, and I would like the opportunity to hear him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order.

Mr CRISP. Gentleman, these are the figures of comparative tax rates, prepared not by me but by the United States Census Office, and in all of the cities the assessment is on a full valuation of the property. The tax rate in Detroit is $2.35. In Milwaukee it is $1.42. And I want to add here that in these other cities——

Mr. HULINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. In a moment. Let me finish this statement. I want to add that in these other cities the taxpayers pay county and State taxes also, while in Washington there is only one tax.

Mr. HULINGS. It was just that point that I wanted to bring out.

Mr. CRISP. In Cincinnati the tax rate is $1.48; in Newark, N. J., $2.04; and in Washington $1 a hundred, and intangible personal property in Washington is exempt from taxation. In Minneapolis the rate is $1.40; in Jersey City, $2.20.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Let me finish this statement of figures. In Indianapolis the rate is $1.31; in Louisville, $1.79. My good friend, Judge PROUTY, has also put in the RECORD figures of the tax rate of a number of other cities. By comparing these figures you will see that Washington has the lowest tax rate of any city approximately its size, and all intangible personal property bears no tax.

Mr. MARTIN. In what way would the pending resolution affect the taxation of personalty?

Mr. CRISP. The pending resolution would not directly affect it at all; but, answering the gentleman, I will say if Congress repeals the law requiring your constituents and my constituents to contribute half of the taxes of this city, it will be a very short time before the real estate owners within the District will be advocating that intangible personal property be taxed, and it will follow as the night the day that Congress will put a tax on intangible personal property within the District. And I will say to the gentleman that when the so-called act of 1878 was passed it provided that intangible personal property should be taxed; but under the operation of the law, even after reducing the tax rate, they could not spend the money raised and make the Government pay half the expenses, so it was necessary to reduce the amount collected in some form, because the people would not stand——

Mr. PARKER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Not now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CRISP. The people would not stand for the Government to continue to appropriate funds out of the Federal Treasury to relieve the tax burdens of the people of the District of Columbia, and at the same time the District of Columbia was accumulating a big balance in the United States Treasury, so therefore the sacred organic act of 1878 was amended; and instead of relieving the general taxpayers of the country, Congress sought to further relieve the people of the city of Washington from further taxation and exempted intangible personal property from taxation.

Now another thing. While I have the attention of the House I am going to take the privilege of repeating some statements that I made in a speech delivered in this House over a year ago which I do not think very many of the membership of the House heard. It is freely stated that it would be an injustice for the Government to withdraw its aid, and the inference is that if we do it we are a barbarous Government, and acting differently from other governments. Now I want to call attention to the fact that the Government of the United States owns property in your State and my State and in the States of all of us. Before the Government will invest in that property your State and my State cede jurisdiction to the Federal Government, and the Federal Government will not pay one cent of taxes on any property owned in your State, and it owns many thousand acres in some of the Western States, and we are all glad to have the Government own property in our States, even if the Washington papers do say we are "pork-barrel" statesmen. We are not "pork-barrel" statesmen, but we are statesmen superior to Webster and Benton when we open the Treasury of the United States and give to the District of Columbia. Now I want to show how the other governments of the world deal with their capital cities.

The Senate of the United States adopted a resolution calling on the various ministers of the United States to inquire of the Governments to which they were accredited as to how those Governments treated their capital cities in the way of taxation. Let us see how the foreign Governments of the world deal with their capital cities, so far as the ownership of property is concerned:

The Russian Government does not pay taxes on property unless the property is rented to individuals and yields a revenue. Portugal pays nothing on its property nor contributes nothing to the municipality. Brazil pays no tax on its property. Chile pays no tax on its property. The Netherlands pays no tax on its property. Japan pays no tax on property owned by it. In Spain property used for governmental purposes is not taxed by the municipality. Argentina pays no tax on property used for governmental purposes. France pays no tax on property owned in Paris which produces no revenue, but the French Government contributes to the city of Paris to remunerate them for services rendered in sweeping the streets and draining to the sewers and for like services rendered. Our mother country—England—pays no tax on property owned in the city of London, but the English Government, as a matter of gratuity, makes a contribution to its various municipalities by reason of owning property therein exempt from taxation, but the amount of the contribution is fixed by the English Parliament. The Italian Government pays no tax on certain Government property, but on other property it pays assessments to the municipality, and the German Government pays no tax on a large part of property owned by it. The German Government engages in business in competition with private persons, and on such property taxes are assessed. The correctness of this statement may be verified by reference to Senate Document No. 163, Sixty-third Congress, first session, which contains a report of the various ambassadors and ministers of the United States accredited to the forenamed foreign countries of the world. While a few of the foreign Governments do pay taxes to the municipality of its capital city, it likewise pays the same tax to every other municipality within its realm on property owned therein, but, Mr. Speaker, the United States pays not one cent of tax to any State or city within the United States by reason of its ownership of property therein, and why should it discriminate in favor of the city of Washington?

In 1878, when the act we seek to repeal was passed, there was 6,110 acres being cared for, 3,606 of it in streets already laid out and mostly paved, and the Government owned 1,523 acres of the 6,110, the Government land being mostly in parks. Now, the people of the United States are bearing half the burden of caring for 38,406 acres, of which amount 15,228 acres are in streets, many of them yet to be developed, and the Government only owns, including all parks within the 10 miles square, 5,212 acres. Excluding the parks, the Government does not own 100 acres that are used exclusively for Government use. It is manifestly unjust to longer require the taxpayers of the United States to pay half the expenses of the District of Columbia.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Do any of the Governments named by the gentleman from Georgia, in their constitutions, give the sole authority to the National Government to make all the laws for the municipalities in which their respective capitals are located, as is the case with this country?

Mr. CRISP. I can not answer that question.

Mr. COOPER. Is not that a very important factor?

Mr. CRISP. Prior to 1874 the city of Washington had a mayor and city council and regulated and ran its own business, but it gave up that right for the advantage of having the Government bear one-half of the burdens of their taxation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 21201, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if the bill has been printed with the Senate amendments?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I have not seen it, but I think it has.

Mr. MANN. I sent to the document room for it a short time ago, but failed to get it. There are two or three Senate amendments that I think we want a separate vote upon in the House. One is in reference to the Panama Exposition, and one in relation to an appropriation for an international conference. Can not the gentleman call it up some time later in the day?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The reason I ask to call it now is that the Senate conferees have asked for a conference at 2.30 o'clock. I know the amendments that the gentleman refers to, and the conferees on the part of the House will give the House an opportunity to pass upon them.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that at this stage it may be more desirable to have a vote in advance rather than to wait until Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the request.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY].

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Speaker, as these words I shall now utter will probably be the last statement I shall be permitted to make on this subject, I wish to have the calm thought and consideration of my fellow Members. I know that a good many of you have thought that I have been very zealous; that I have some personal grievance or grudge. Such is not the case. I was appointed by this House as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and feeling that it was my duty, having been appointed on that committee, to investigate closely and carefully and candidly the relations existing between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia, I did so.

I reached certain conclusions, that the present situation is, to my mind, simply intolerant, and I have therefore perhaps seemed to Members of this House to be overzealous and overactive, and perhaps they have thought sometimes pugnacious.

I think the whole trouble with the situation is the fact that Members of Congress have not thought about it. I heard a little remark made over here in the House Office Building as I was coming out the other night that I think exactly illustrates the situation. Two charwomen were discussing a certain question—I do not know what it was—but finally one looked into the face of the other and said, "Is that so; I never thought to think about that." [Laughter.] That is the trouble with the Members of this House—I will be perfectly frank with you—you have never thought to think about it. I do not believe there is a man on the floor of this House, including the patriotic gentleman from Kansas, who is willing to go on record and say that he believes the people of the United States outside of Washington should contribute to the payment of taxes of the people here in Washington, who only pay one-half of the taxes that they themselves pay. That is the fact; there is no varnishing it over, no talk about patriotism, and its being a great city, and that we are proud of it, and all that will change that fact. It is simply a clear, straight business proposition. Are we, the representatives of the people of the United States, coming from our various districts, willing to continue to tolerate the situation, which every man who thinks about it knows, that we are compelling them at home to pay taxes twice what are paid here and then contribute to relieve the people of the District of Columbia?

Now, take sidewalks; we build half the sidewalks here and at home I build the whole sidewalk. We paid for all the pavement here until we got through a little amendment. People at home pay for half of it here besides paying for their own. They pay for all of their own schools, twice as high a rate as the people pay here, and then they pay half of the rates here. Such a condition is intolerable, and there is no man that will sit down calmly with me in the cloakroom and say that it is not.

Now, there is a whole lot of misconception and ambiguity that gets into this thing always at every discussion of it. The gentleman from Kansas made the bold statement that the Government owned the District of Columbia. The Constitution of the United States provides that a certain district not exceeding 10 miles square that might be ceded from the States to the Federal Government should be used for the Government's Capital, and in the same connection gives exclusive jurisdiction over them and the property that is ceded for public purposes. In other words, the Federal Government——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think the gentleman should read the Constitution correctly.

Mr. PROUTY. Oh, I know more about the Constitution than the gentleman does. [Laughter.] In other words, the relation of the Federal Government to the municipal affairs of the District of Columbia is exactly what the relation of the State legislature is to the municipalities within the jurisdiction of the various States, no higher in any respect. When Maryland and Virginia ceded certain territory to the United States Government, it did not convey the title. It conveyed simply the question of jurisdiction, and if we yielded it back to-morrow the title of not a single particle of property would change. It is the question of jurisdiction over it, and not ownership of it.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] laid a great deal of stress upon the fact that this Government was under obligations to take care of the District of Columbia. Has it ever occurred to you—and that is one of the first things I looked up when I was put upon this commission—that for 75 years our forefathers and their descendants never conceded or recognized the fact that because we had retained jurisdiction, sovereignty, over it, that we were therefore under any obligation to pay a portion of the burden of taxes here? For 75 years under the early administration of the fathers of the Republic it was never conceived that we owed the people here any obligation of paying for half of the education of their children or for building half of their sidewalks or pavements. It never was thought of. The same gentleman speaks a great deal about the pride that he has in the Capital. I have as much pride in the Capital as he has, I believe, though may be not. I have not lived here as long as he has, and I have noticed that the longer a fellow lives here the more pride he gets in the Capital—at least the more he forgets the people whom he represents at home. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, there can be pride and justice at the same time. I may have pride in my two daughters, but I can not be just with them at the same time if I take from one of them and give to the other. I am proud of this great Republic, but I am not proud enough of it to take part of the money that belongs to the individual and pay it over to the Government. Right is right.

The question was asked here, Does this change the rate? No; it does not change the rate. I think the rate ought to be changed; but I am not going to discuss that. This bill does not change the rate of taxation, but it does change the amount of money to be paid out of the Federal Treasury. Under the amendment as proposed by Mr. UNDERWOOD there would be about $3,000,000 that is collected now under the law, under the system of taxation, still left in the Treasury unappropriated, while we send out to my State and to your State to get money to educate these people and to build their sidewalks and their pavements.

There is one thing that has impressed me profoundly of which I want to speak before I leave this House, and that is the truckling of this House to the other end of the Capitol. [Applause.] I have seen this House again and again undertake to be economical, to deal justly and fairly, and the bill goes over there and some addition is put onto it, and I have stood here in shame to see this House yield on almost every proposition. Did it ever occur to you that under the Constitution of the United States we are the Representatives of the people in the levying of taxes? I said to a distinguished Senator not long ago in private conversation, "How in the world are we going to take care of all of these appropriations? Every bill that we send over to the Senate is added to and increased, and we are supposed to take charge of the finances and control them, because we are supposed to be close Representatives of the people. What are we going to do? Every time we send over an appropriation bill you add something to it." He said, "Why, there is only one thing for you to do, and that is to levy more taxes." Mr. Speaker, that is a great question that will be some time heard of in this country. It will be a question of whether or not one body that was not by the Constitution given the power to fix the amount of taxation will, by indirect methods, be able longer to say, "We will make the appropriation and force you to levy the taxes." Right here, with all due respect, this little amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama is in fact an exact copy, printed, cut out, of the resolution offered in the Senate, and the effect of it will be to make a levy of $3,000,000 more upon the people of the United States. Is there any man, if he has "thought to think about it," who will be willing to do that?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. PROUTY. I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi to give me two minutes more. I was promised five.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. PROUTY. No one who has considered this question will believe that the people of the city of Washington are taxed even fairly, as compared with other people. They pay 10 mills on the dollar on their real estate. In my town I pay 22 mills. In your town you pay 23 mills. On personal property they pay 15 mills, and in my town I pay 22 mills. In my town I pay 5 mills on intangible property, and here they pay nothing. In my town, when I die, whatever property is left to my heirs is taxed, and here it is taxed not at all. And yet we are willing to have this condition remain, under the effect of the Underwood amendment, pending an investigation. If the gentleman would allow the method that is proposed by the House to continue during the years that this investigation will go on, I would favor that part of his amendment—the appointment of a committee to look into the matter—because the whole question ought to be dug up. But here is the real question: Will we allow the District of Columbia practically to rob the Federal Government of from three to four million dollars a year during the time that this investigation is going on? And that is the only question. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there is a practical question to be determined by the House. The House proposed that for the moneys required to be expended in the District of Columbia for the next year, the revenues of the District of Columbia should be used as far as available, and that then the additional sum required should be provided out of the Federal Treasury. The Senate proposes that the money shall be provided as it has been for thirty-odd years, half out of the District treasury and half out of the Federal Treasury. The House, by a vote of almost 2 to 1, decided in favor of the proposition which it proposed, and the Senate, by a vote of almost 2 to 1, was recorded in favor of its proposition.

All of the differences between the two Houses upon this bill—the bill which carries the money for the conduct of the government of the District of Columbia—have been adjusted with the exception of this question as to what proportion of the expenses of the District government for the next fiscal year shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. I have given considerable attention and thought to the question of the contribution of the Federal Government to the expenses of the District. I am convinced that the method proposed by the House is as fair, as just, and as reasonable as any thinking man can expect. [Applause.] I say this without the slightest hesitation. Not only do I say it, but I believe that a revision of the tax laws of the District of Columbia, so that they shall be reasonable and fair, not unjust or burdensome, would probably result——

Mr. PARKER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I prefer not to yield—in a very slight contribution under such a system from the Federal Treasury. I hope that such a system will be adopted. I do not believe it will be adopted at this session of Congress. I have no more taste for the performance of this House marching up the hill and then marching down at the last moment than the gentleman from Iowa or anyone else. I have marched up once or twice myself in such controversies, and the House stood with me, and we stood there and finally accomplished what we sought.

Mr. PROUTY. Do it again.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I believe, and I express my honest conviction, that the Senate will not yield at this time on this proposition. I should like to see an investigation made, not only of the question of what is the proper contribution by the Federal Government, but what additional legislation should be enacted to obtain revenues from the people of the District for the support of their government. Why should they alone, practically of all the people of the United States, be relieved from any inheritance tax? Why should not there be a proper inheritance-tax law applicable to the District of Columbia, the revenues of which should be applied to the expenses of the District? I would be very happy to see the gentleman from Iowa a member of a commission appointed by the Speaker on behalf of the House [applause], so that the House should have the advantage of his wide information, his ripe experience, and his sound judgment upon the questions involved. I believe such an investigation should be made. A report could be submitted to the House by the next session. Then there could be ended these pleas that there has not been a suitable investigation or inquiry for more than 30 years.

So long as we defer such an inquiry or such an investigation just so long will we continue to have this struggle and have it end unsuccessfully. For these reasons I shall vote for the motion of the gentleman from Alabama. I do not believe the Federal Government should pay one-half the expenses for maintaining the District government. I wish to see something done that will make it possible to stop what I believe to be an injustice to the Federal Treasury. The continual plea that there has not been an investigation, that there has not been a report, that there has not been any information available for Members of Congress, will fall if such an investigation be made. Let us gather and submit the information to Congress and then make the fight. I believe that no one can justify antagonism to such a proposition.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for an hour.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the gentleman to give me a few minutes more.

Mr. SISSON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two or three minutes—about three minutes.

Mr. SISSON. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What the House proposes is so simple and so fair and so just that it is difficult to understand the opposition to it. What is the House proposition? That under the present tax laws of the District of Columbia, a taxing system which imposes as slight a burden upon the taxpayers of the District as any taxing system in existence in the United States, that the money which is collected under that system shall be used to pay the expenses of conducting the municipal government in the District of Columbia, and that the balance shall be made up out of the Federal Treasury. I can not understand the antagonism to that proposition.

The justice of it is convincing and conclusive. I do know, however, and I do understand the difficulties in getting legislation of this character. I know it is repeated time and again here and there that not since 1878 or 1879 has there been that exhaustive investigation and report upon which Congress is justified in determining this question, that years ago the present system was established and it would be unjust to change it without full information. Therefore I favor this investigation and report so that the one slight ineffective argument now urged can be forever refuted. Personally I am so convinced myself of the justice of the House proposition that I would be willing to stand up against the Senate, but I know what will happen. Next Thursday this Congress expires by limitation. We will drag on and at the last minute we will quit on our side of the controversy, and we will not have this investigation authorized, and we will be just where we started—with the club in the hands of the opposition——

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. BORLAND. If we adopt this Gallinger-Underwood proposition, will not we, then, be tying our hands for an indefinite time, and does it not seem better to leave the proposition as it is and to stand by it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would put in an amendment requiring a report next November——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say, if the gentleman will yield, that I will offer an amendment that there shall be a report on the 1st day of January.

Mr. COX. December.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The committee will be Members of Congress, and it is better to give them 30 days after they get back here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think such an amendment should be inserted. I do not want to be completely defeated by getting nothing at all at the windup, as will happen, as we must appropriate the necessary money to carry on the Government.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the people of the District of Columbia have no direct political power. They can not elect a Member of Congress or a Senator.

The power to tax is the power to destroy, and it is always dangerous to those who have no representation. But we are doing it in the District of Columbia, and the danger, perhaps less probable, is not impossible because you divide the amount of the tax to be collected. Congress with its absolute power can make appropriations in this District in such volume that to pay one-half would practically confiscate the property of the people of the District of Columbia. But will it do it? We can authorize great, wide streets, avenues, and other improvements here and direct that they shall be made, and provide that one-half of the cost shall be paid out of the current revenues of the District, and make a rate of taxation that will raise the money, even if it is $5 a hundred. But will we ever do such an unjust thing as that? Never. Then if our sense of justice can be relied on not to abuse our power with the half-and-half plan, why can not our sense of justice and right be relied on not to place an excessive levy upon a people without voice and without opportunity to defend themselves? Absolute protection against unreasonable taxation lies with Congress by fixing the rate and the subjects for taxation. When we provide that the rate shall not exceed a certain per cent in value of taxable property, and name the subjects of taxation, then if Congress should appropriate $50,000,000 for one year, the people of the District of Columbia would not have to pay one cent more than the tax produced by that just, honest, and reasonable rate. And when gentlemen get up here and claim that we want to make victims out of the District of Columbia, I want to say that we could do it now if we wanted to. When I first went on the Committee on the District of Columbia the people of the District came before that committee and appealed for a law authorizing the Government to loan them money without interest to pay the annual appropriations, or their part of it, in excess of what the levy produced, because they complained——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Without interest.

Mr. SIMS. Without interest; that Congress had authorized large and permanent improvements that it was impossible for them to pay for out of current revenues. They asked for it without interest. We finally let them have it at 2 per cent interest out of the Treasury of the United States to pay the excess of the appropriations over and above the amount that the tax rate produced to enable them to pay their one-half. Did we rob them then? Did we show ourselves enemies or friends when they were in distress? Their complaint then was that the half-and-half plan worked a hardship on them, and it did at that time. Now, then, if we put a fair rate upon such property as is usually taxed in the States, it does not make any difference how big or how little the appropriations may be, they can not be hurt; they can not be mulcted; they can not be injured. Some gentlemen try to leave the impression that some here hate the people of the District and want to get even with them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Can the gentleman give me more time?

Mr. SISSON. I am sorry to say that I can not.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I want to address a few remarks to the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], which motion will come before the House if the motion of the gentleman from Alabama should not be agreed to.

The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House adhere to its disagreement to the Senate amendment. If the House takes that action, it means that we will have an extra session of Congress. Under ordinary conditions a motion to adhere is a discourtesy to the other body, and is so taken, and if at this stage of the proceedings the House votes to adhere to its disagreement the other body will probably vote to adhere to its amendment and all proceedings between the two bodies will stop, unless in the end one of them, with a woeful lack of pride, moves to recede from its position, a very awkward attitude for either body to take. I predict without hesitation that if this House now moves to adhere to its disagreement it will either later in the session swallow its pride and with ignomy retreat from its position or else there will be an extra session of Congress.

If there is anyone here hankering for an extra session of Congress, he has a good way to help it on now. This sort of thing comes before Congress a good many times in the last few days of Congress. Gentlemen, without duly considering that both the House and the Senate must treat each other with ordinary courtesy if they expect good results, in a moment of overenthusiasm or passion, excited by the circumstances, think that one body can say, "I am Congress." Now, Congress consists of two bodies.

I have seen this sort of situation several times since I have been in the House. There is no escape from the proposition. If the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] prevails, we will either retreat or we will come back. I am not in favor of taking a position and retreating from it where it is a matter of pride, and I am not in favor just at present of an extra session of Congress. If we have an extra session of Congress, I am going to do my best to keep Congress in session all this year. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield to me for a moment? I desire to ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the proposition which I offered, to strike out, in the first proviso, the word "Provided" and add a proviso that is on this paper and which I will ask the Clerk to read. Strike out the first word "Provided."

Mr. SISSON. Can not the gentleman wait until the debate is closed?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to have the proposition before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent to strike out the word "Provided."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I submit the following proviso at the end.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the word "Provided," at the beginning of the amendment, and at the end of the amendment add the following:

"Provided, That the report of said committee shall be submitted to the Congress not later than the 1st day of January, 1916."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will make the motion when I get the floor.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I believe the most remarkable statement I have heard on this floor since I have been a Member of this Congress came from the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in his concluding statement. He said he had seen this kind of condition arise before, and it resulted in the House swallowing its pride and retreating; and inasmuch as he did not want to retreat, he was going to vote to retreat now. That is what it amounts to—that it is to swallow our pride, to rurrender the position that we have heretofore taken on this measure, and in order to save his pride he will surrender before he is asked to do so.

So far as I am individually concerned, I do not want an extra session. But before I would be driven from a position which I thought I was justified in taking I would let the extra session come.

I have noticed this since I have been here: Gentlemen who are appealing for the continuation of the half-and-half arrangement invariably take one of two positions. First, they say they are proud of this city as a National Capital. That is the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. He has made it twenty times since I have been here. I had read it in the Washington newspapers before I heard him make it. I know as well what he is going to say when he gets up to talk upon this question as if he had already concluded. And I want to say to him that whenever a man has more pride in his National Capital than he has love for the people who elect him, he has altogether too much pride in the Capital, and has stayed here too long. [Applause.]

If he represents the people here to the extent that he is willing to tax the people in his home town in order to exempt these people here from paying taxes at all, I think his people at home ought to elect some one else who will represent them awhile, and not return the gentleman, who always represents the District of Columbia as against the interests of his people at home.

The people in Pittsburg, Kans., the gentleman's home city, do not have the advantages that the people here have. They have not the wide streets, they have not the public libraries, they have not the art galleries, they have not the parks and the fountains and the pleasant drives; and yet they pay more than twice as much taxes as the people of the District of Columbia, and the gentleman from Kansas comes here and says, "Well, bless their souls, they live in Kansas, and have no rights, anyway." [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, you did not say it in words. You did not have to. Whenever you say you are willing to tax the people at home, and do not even know what their tax rate is, but you are willing to lay the taxes on them, regardless of the rate, in order to relieve these people from all taxes, you, in effect, say what I stated.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I pay them without question.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course you do; and you let your people pay them also, without representation, too. [Laughter.]

Whenever gentlemen urge us to abandon our rights because either pride in the District of Columbia or because we will be forced to an extra session, I believe that argument ought to fall upon deaf ears, and that it is going to do so.

Now, with all due respect for the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the time has been when I would almost be willing to follow him with my eyes blinded. But when here, in the very last days of this Congress, the question arises as to whether the people at home should be relieved of a burden which they ought never to have borne and it becomes apparent that the only way to continue this wrong is to propose a commission or committee to investigate some abstract question, thereafter I am unwilling to follow the gentleman another inch, blindfolded or otherwise.

I have heard it stated here that nobody at home complains of this abuse. Well, the reason they do not complain is because you never told them the truth about it. That is the reason. [Laughter.] I know and you know there is not a man in the States of either of the gentlemen that would not complain if you should tell him the people in the District of Columbia, with more wealth, with more advantages, with more opportunities to acquire wealth, are undertaxed, and yet that we generously pay the half of their taxes merely because they are so fortunate as to live in the District of Columbia. And you tell me that man would not object? I know he would object. I have never heard a man yet who did not live in the District of Columbia that did not, when told of this wrong, object. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in my experience in the House I do not recollect a time when we have been confronted with a situation that so clearly indicated the unwisdom of legislating upon appropriation bills as the present situation. We passed a Post Office appropriation bill and placed a very great deal of legislation upon it and that bill comes back with the legislation largely stricken off. We passed the District of Columbia bill and placed important legislation on it. The Agricultural appropriation bill, leaving the House without much in the way of new legislation, comes back with some very important legislative propositions on it. We are expected to settle these matters as the result of conferences in the last three or four days of the session. There can be but one result. We can not possibly legislate wisely, legislate intelligently, under these circumstances. We complain because the Senate places important legislation upon the appropriation bills. We start it ourselves by placing important legislation on the appropriation bills in the House.

Now, I am not in favor of either the proposition placed on this bill which it is proposed to amend or the amendment, and I am not in favor of them largely because of the way in which it is proposed that we shall legislate. We should not attempt to do this thing on an appropriation bill. There is a proper and an orderly and a decent way to accomplish all good things that may be accomplished by legislation. If the Committee on the District of Columbia will bring in a well-digested plan for a modification of the present system as between the Federal Government and the city of Washington, if they will bring in a carefully considered plan for a commission to investigate the matter, personally I would be very glad to follow the committee. But instead of that we are expected, on an appropriation bill, in a brief paragraph, to settle questions that ought to be settled after careful consideration and reports from committees.

It might be a good thing to have a commission appointed. I am not altogether certain about that. But of this I am certain: There has been so much feeling with regard to this matter, certain gentlemen have taken such a decided attitude and have expressed such extreme views with regard to it, that I am frank to say that I do not believe that they, as members of a committee, could arrive at a fair and unbiased judgment with regard to the proper relations as between the District and the Federal Government. Furthermore, it occurs to me that before a commission is appointed Congress should determine, if possible, the basis of the participation of the Federal Government in the expenditures of the District. If we can have it settled and determined, the basis or theory on which we are to pay part of the expenses of the District, a commission could secure the facts on which to fix the proportion that the Government should pay. In all the time I have been here I can recall no subject that has been discussed with regard to which there has been so much of exaggeration, so much, as I think, of downright misstatement, as there has been in regard to taxation in the District of Columbia with regard to the alleged relief of the people of the District from the burdens of taxation as compared to other cities. It seems to me that when we take the sums that are raised by taxation in this District and compare them with cities of equal size elsewhere and the sums they raise, these reckless statements made by gentlemen with regard to the tax-paying possibilities of the District are shown to be extravagant in the extreme and without any reasonable foundation.

It is probable that the present relation between the District and the Federal Government is not an ideal one. It is possible that the United States Government is paying more than it should toward the maintenance of the District government; but we will never arrive at a solution of the problem, in my opinion, until the question is brought before us on the report of a committee, considered carefully and dispassionately. So far as this particular proposition now before us is concerned, we ought to know, as has been suggested by several gentlemen here, that we are simply talking against time. We will take this march up the hill and down again, for the Senate will unquestionably insist, as they have the right to insist, that we must not place on an appropriation bill legislation which does not meet their approval.

Mr. SISSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, whatever the contention on either side of this question may be, I think it is only fair to say that before we can rightly settle the question involved in this controversy we must make the kind of an investigation that will lead to information which will give us the intelligence we must have in order to reach just conclusions.

It may be that the Government of the United States pays more than its proportion of the expenses of the District of Columbia, but I think no man can say that for certain. So that in order that we who are to pass on this question may be in possession of information we should have some commission authorized first to ascertain what is the value of the Government property in the District of Columbia, what other conditions there are that will justify the imposition of a part of the expense of the government of the District of Columbia upon the Government of the United States, and then we should ascertain by some scientific investigation whether the people of the District of Columbia are as a matter of fact being taxed less than they ought to be or whether they are being taxed more than they ought to be. Such a commission as is proposed in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] should be able to obtain this information and place it in possession of the House. When such a commission has acted, we will have before us reasons for what we do; for when such a commission has concluded its work it is fair to assume that it will have concluded that work as the result of unbiased investigation, and when the information which it is able to submit to us is before the Congress every man here will then have something to guide him in his action. I believe there is no other just way to solve this intricate problem, for no man now knows just what proportion of the expense of maintaining the District government should be paid by the District and what proportion should be paid by the Government of the United States. So I submit that there can be no more just proposal submitted to the House than that embodied in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I hope it will be adopted, and that such a joint committee may be appointed as will not only have the confidence of all the people of the District of Columbia, but every man in both Houses of Congress; and when they report I hope that we will accept their conclusions as the thing that ought to be done, not only for the people of the United States but for the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SISSON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. It gives an opportunity hereafter to vote intelligently and satisfactorily, to myself at least, on an issue that has been before the Congress ever since I have been here. I do not want to vote to injure the people of the District of Columbia, and I do not want to act unjustly toward the people of the country or my district. Yet here is an issue that comes up every session; and frequently on District day, when we are required to consider matters pertaining to the District, we hear this same subject discussed, with more or less acrimony, and I am confused. This motion gives an opportunity for us to get the information that will give a basis upon which to vote. I would not vote to uproot a relationship with the District which has existed for many years without further investigation. At the same time I have listened to the presentation of facts touching the issue that seemed very strong. Then, on the other hand, presentations are made which convince me that I can not support the contention of the opponents of this motion. I am glad that this opportunity comes for us to vote for a joint committee to supply the necessary data, the information upon which we can act intelligently. Therefore I hope that the amendment will prevail.

Mr. SISSON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, during the last 12 or 15 years I have given a good deal of attention to this question. I believe it is an outrage to tax the people of the United States to improve streets and build sidewalks and set out shade trees in the District of Columbia. I shall vote for the motion made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. SISSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, like the gentleman from Arkansas, I have heard with some amusement the arguments advanced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. Each of them has served notice that in time he is going to retreat. The statement of each reminds me of the old story that we have heard, coming down since the days of the Civil War, when one of the soldiers said to the company with which he was serving, "Boys, before this is over we will be compelled to retreat, and as I am a little crippled and am not very enthusiastic anyhow, I am going to start right now." [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I have allotted to me I wish to invite the attention of the House to one fact that, in all the arguments I have heard upon this subject, has never been advanced. We have it drummed into our ears every day as to the extent of the Federal Government's ownership of real estate in the District of Columbia. Everybody who cares to know does know that less than 100 acres out of the entire 45,000 acres in this District are used exclusively by the Federal Government. I wish the attention of Members when I invite their minds to the act of July 1, 1888, by which every piece of Federal-owned land in the District of Columbia which is not being used exclusively by the United States, which brings a revenue, donates one-half of that revenue directly to the District of Columbia. Then when the Federal Government, under the half-and-half plan, comes to put up it finds itself compelled to match dollar for dollar every dollar that the District government has, under the act of July 1, 1888, received from property owned by the Federal Government. So that the result is that the entire revenue from every piece of ground in the District of Columbia owned by the Federal Government goes to the District of Columbia.

A few moments ago I propounded to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] a question, as to whether or not he owned any real estate in the District of Columbia. He answered me that he did not. His manner indicated that he took umbrage at my question. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that those who have any interest in the subject matter of this legislation should vote upon this question. Neither do I believe that the vote of another should be influenced by anyone who has local interests here.

If I am correctly advised, and I entertain no doubt that I am, a piece of property on P Street, in Washington, several years ago was sold. When the seller of it came to convey title he made the title to John Campbell, a brother of the gentleman from Kansas. Notwithstanding the fact that the title of the property was in John Campbell, the gentleman from Kansas occupied the property. By and by Mr. John Campbell sold the property on P Street.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman give me two minutes more.

Mr. SISSON. The time is all allotted. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be increased two minutes and that the gentleman from Kentucky may have it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks that his time be increased two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Reserving the right to object, if the gentleman from Mississippi will ask for an extension so as to give me five minutes, if I want to use it, I will not object.

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks that his hour be increased by seven minutes, the gentleman from Kentucky to have two minutes and the gentleman from Kansas five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, by and by the gentleman from Kansas, according to my information, purchased a piece of real estate consisting of about 40 acres at the southern end of the Highway Bridge. When he came to pay for that 40 acres of ground the house and lot on P Street, the title of which was in his brother John, was conveyed as part payment for the 40 acres of ground at the south end of the Highway Bridge. When the title came to be made to the 40 acres of ground that title was placed in the name of the gentleman from Kansas, and not in his brother John.

Now, I am also informed that that is a very valuable tract of land, and that the gentleman has refused $1,000 an acre for 10 of the most undesirable acres of that tract. If the gentleman from Kansas had not shown such petulance and apparent indignation when I asked him the question, he would not have left the implication that it was not the correct thing for him to have done to have been investing in real estate in the District of Columbia, and then take the position on the bill which he does take. That would have ended the matter so far as I am concerned. But from the gentleman's manner and what he said I am clearly convinced that he agrees with me that that was not right, and since there was no opportunity for me to even state the premises upon which I put the question to the gentleman from Kansas, I have said what I am now concluding.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a very important public matter, and the gentleman from Kentucky seems to have given a great deal of attention to my private affairs. I think he will have to go over this matter again and ascertain the real facts in regard to it. That is all I have to say. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to amend the amendment that I have pending on the desk in the way that it will be reported by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out at the beginning of the amendment the word "Provided," and adding at the end of the amendment the following: "Provided, That the report of said committee shall be submitted to the Congress not later than the 1st day of January, 1916.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, do not do that.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I will withdraw it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment to the amendment be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the amendment to the amendment be agreed to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the amendment that has just been agreed to relieves any objection to the proposition in the matter of delay. The committee appointed by the two Houses will be compelled to make its report by the 1st day of next January.

Now, I do not agree with what some of my friends have said here about our standing out regardless of the consequences for what we think is right in this bill. In the first place, the House must bear in mind that this initial proposition is legislation on an appropriation bill, and according to the custom of the two Houses for generations past when you put legislation on an appropriation bill, and the two Houses disagree, it always been the custom that the House that proposes the new legislation must yield in order that the appropriation bills may go through and the money necessary to supply the Government be furnished. So according to the custom, and a necessary custom—because we should not legislate on appropriation bills ordinarily, and should not stop supply bills—in the last analysis, if the Senate does not agree to the House proposition, it will be the duty of the House to yield on its proposition rather than defeat this bill. There can not be any question about the attitude of the Senate on this proposal. Time and time again it has refused to accept the proposition. If you vote for the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] to adhere to the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment, then that means that we will not go back to conference, that we will not consider an agreement with the Senate any further. That is what it means when we agree to a motion to adhere. It is not a question of further insisting, but it is a question of adhering, which says to the Senate, "You must accept this amendment or let this bill fail." There is no question about what that means. It means an extra session of the Congress.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman thinks that, as a cardinal principle of the Democratic Party, the Holman rule is right?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; but that has nothing to do with this.

Mr. BORLAND. That an amendment to an appropriation bill reducing a charge on the Federal Treasury is properly in this bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the Speaker has ruled this morning that that has nothing to do with this.

Mr. BORLAND. That has something to do with it as to whether the House shall recede.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is nothing in this bill that reduces expenditures as the bill stands. It might ultimately do it.

Mr. BORLAND. There is something in the bill that does reduce it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not a thing. So that you must yield if the Senate does not agree. I do not ask to yield. I have never contended that the half-and-half system is the correct one. I have always contended that the Federal Treasury should bear a proportionate share of the burdens of the government of this District, and I believe that that is right, but as to what proportion I am free to say I am not informed, and I have not the information that will satisfy me as to what the proportion ought to be. I can not tell what we ought to fix on the Federal Government and what proportion of taxes we ought to fix on the citizens of the District. This question has been battered around in this House for 10 years past on almost every District day and almost every District bill. You must come to some conclusion, some solution. How can you do it better in this contingency than to appoint a committee? You can not assume that a committee appointed by the Speaker of the House and the Vice President of the Senate is not going to be a fair and just committee and report back the facts to you as that committee see them.

The report of that committee does not bind you to vote for their report. When they make their report you can determine the matter, and I hope it will be determined away from an appropriation bill, where we can consider it as a legislative matter and settle it in the right way. I have not injected this proposition. I have believed for a long time that we ought to have a thorough investigation of this matter before we decide it, but, feeling that there was sentiment in the House in favor of the House proposition, I have not attempted to interfere. I have stayed here and I have not insisted on the House receding, until here we come to the last moment. I say that we have no right to throw this supply bill over, and you are up against one of two questions if you do not adopt the compromise that I have suggested to you and appoint this committee. You are up against the question of agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to adhere, and, if the Senate does not yield, throw this bill out, with the resultant consequences, or you are up against the proposition of agreeing to the motion that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has indicated he would make—of concurring in the Senate amendment—and throwing the whole proposition out and letting it stand where it is to-day without any effort to solve the problem. I say under these circumstances the proposition that I offer to the House is a reasonable one. It is clearly indicated that you can not carry your proposition. I do not think the House wants to concur in the Senate amendment and throw it all out and say that we will not solve the question; but we can say to our constituents and to the people of the District of Columbia that before we come to a final vote in the next Congress—and it is going to the next Congress whether you adopt this proposition or not—we will give an opportunity for a committee of this House and of the Senate to review all of the facts that anybody wants to present to them, and have that information laid before this House for its intelligent action.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back three minutes.

Mr. HARDY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, it is a question, I believe, of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARDY. I just wish to state that, having some property in the District of Columbia, while I have, I believe, always voted with my friend from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], I wish to be excused from voting on this proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman wants to be excused from voting on this proposition because he owns property in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. That can only be done by leave of the House.

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, because the gentleman wears woolen goods, does he think himself disqualified from voting on a tariff bill?

Mr. HARDY. My statement was more to give notice. I have some doubt. I do not think it disqualifies me.

Mr. MANN. Of course it does not.

Mr. HARDY. But, to be on the safe side, I prefer not to vote.

The SPEAKER. Will the House excuse the gentleman from voting?

Mr. MANN. I do not think the House ought to excuse the gentleman from voting on this ground. The gentleman can refrain from voting.

Mr. HARDY. I think it is only a matter of giving notice to the House.

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman can refuse to vote when he desires to. They tried to make John Quincy Adams vote here once, and they worked at it for two or three days, but never did do it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, quite a good deal of time has been consumed on this proposition, but I think it is one of the most important propositions that has come up for the consideration of the House, so far as the government of the District of Columbia is concerned. Now, in the first place, we ought to find out exactly what relation the Federal Government originally bore to this territory. The only portion of this great domain controlled by the American people which has passed out from under the control of the people who live within the various subdivisions of the Government is the small territory known as the District of Columbia. The State of Maryland and the State of Virginia ceded the District of Columbia to the Congress of the United States, and by divesting themselves of that sovereignty invested Congress with that sovereignty, so every man who moves into the District of Columbia, every man who owned property at the time of the cession to the Federal Government, owned that property subject to the terms of the cession. The cession was that it should be the seat of government, that the rights of the individuals should always yield to the rights of the Federal Government. In the States the other doctrine would prevail where the majority of the people control the State. The government there exists for the benefit of the people of the State. Here the District of Columbia exists for the benefit of the Federal Government. So much then for the rights of a man buying property in the District of Columbia. If he decided that he wanted to buy property here and take advantage of all of the benefits of living at the National Capital, he has the right to do so, and he buys it with the distinct understanding that he is buying property in that portion of the Federal Government in which he surrenders his sovereignty as a citizen if he lives here, because the sovereignty is in Congress. If this should cease to be used for governmental purposes, it would go back to the State of Maryland and become a part of her domain. So the rights of the citizen or the property owner in the District of Columbia is an entirely different proposition from the ownership of property in the States. That was the contract made when the State of Maryland surrendered her sovereignty here.

Now, what is the proposition being presented? We propose by this bill not to change the rate of taxation, not to change the amount of the assessment, but to use in the District government all of the money collected at the present rate and under the present assessment; and if there is not enough to pay the expenses of the District government as Congress thinks the District ought to be run, then Congress pays out of the Treasury of the United States the balance of the money, not to exceed as much as has been paid by the District. Now, if the rate of taxation is fair—and no man says it is unfair; if the rate of assessment is fair—and no man says it is unfair, except there is complaint that the poor home owner pays on a greater proportion of the value than does the man who owns the city property, and no man says the home owner's property is badly assessed—then what is the injustice of this proposition that the people of the District of Columbia shall be treated just as the people elsewhere, and a little better? We do not propose to raise the taxes. We do not propose to raise the assessment. We do not propose to increase the rate of taxation. We simply say to the people of the District of Columbia, "You pay that which you now pay; if that fails to get enough money to run the District government, the Federal Government will bear the balance of it." Now, who are insisting on this commission? Why, those gentlemen who always have been unalterably opposed to change what they call the sacred half-and-half plan——

Mr. SIMS. Opposed to changing it.

Mr. SISSON. Opposed to changing the present half-and-half plan, but when they find an overwhelming majority of this Congress have been convinced of the fairness of this proposition, when they find that for the first time in thirty-odd years a voice has been raised in the Senate of the United States in favor of the taxpayers outside of the District—and there were twenty-odd Senators to follow him, and I think it only needs a change of heart of 10 or 12 Senators to make this proposition accepted in the Senate—the people of the District of Columbia became alarmed. Why? Because they realized that at last a light was beginning to dawn on the Senate. For the first time in years some consideration was given over there in the Senate to a District appropriation bill. [Applause.] And when the truth began to dawn, then it was that Senators commenced to see the light; they realized the injustice being done the taxpayers at home; they realized the special privileges that the property owner of the District of Columbia was enjoying. Now, we do not seek to injure the taxpayer of the District in the least. We simply say to him we are going to collect a reasonable tax, and we are going to make it so that the balance shall be paid out of the Federal Treasury. Now, in response to the question as to an extra session. Why, no man believes that the Senate of the United States would bring about an extra session on account of this bill. That is another bugaboo brought up to scare men. Why do not the gentlemen appeal to the justice of the proposition? Why do not they say it is just and fair and right? No; but they must make up a bogie man; they must make a ghost; and they are trying to frighten men from voting their honest, conscientious convictions, with the idea that "I will consult my convenience, because I want to go home." I am surprised that that sort of a proposition should be urged here for the purpose of getting men who honestly believe this is a good proposition to desert their colors and do violence to their own convictions for their advantage and convenience. I do not believe that many Members of the House are going to heed that sort of an appeal. It is on too low a plane. All that this motion to adhere, made by the gentleman from Kentucky, means is that we have for the last three or four years discussed this matter repeatedly, and a vote for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama means that you concede the right of the taxpayer of the District of Columbia to have the Federal Government contribute an arbitrary amount to run the District Government. I deny that right. They have no right to any arbitrary amount.

If they pay a tax like they pay in my State, like they pay in the States in this Union, I am satisfied. They should pay the same rate of taxes that we pay at home. They then could raise enough money to run the entire Government. But nobody is asking for that. I am willing for Congress to say, "You fix a fair rate of taxation, fix a fair valuation, and spend that money honestly, and if it is not what Congress thinks ought to be paid, we will put up the balance, as we have a right to do, in accordance with the interests of the Federal Government, its dignity, its standing before the country, and its standing before the world." And I can trust Congress to do that, and so can you. This motion to adhere simply means we are in earnest about this proposition, and the Senate would make a very serious blunder, certainly, if they said they were willing for the bill to fail entirely. The same influence that holds in the hollow of their hands this matter will insist that these gentlemen concur with the House, and they will concur. If not, a resolution to continue the last year's appropriation will certainly be agreed to, and this unworthy argument to do wrong to avoid a special session fall to the ground. The moment the Senate of the United States makes that proposition to the taxpayers of this District, that moment they are going to tell their friends from the Senate and, if the newspapers are telling the truth and represent the views of the people of the District, which are largely the views I have heard uttered for this resolution on this floor—I have read it before in the newspapers—if that is the sentiment of the people in the District of Columbia, they will ask the Senate then to recede and let this bill become a law; and the Senate will recede, because they are not going to forego the advantages of the magnificent appropriations in this bill for new school buildings, for new streets, for street improvements, and for bridges and other things in the District of Columbia. The people of the District of Columbia will be clamoring when they find out that this House is in earnest, will demand of the Senate to recede, and the Senate will recede. When Members of the House have the courage to stand by their convictions, the Senate even will respect us, and the country at large will applaud us. We have already repeatedly voted that the House amendment is just and fair and honest.

No man has said, no man can say, no man will truthfully say, that this amendment does any man in the District of Columbia one particle of injustice. No man can say that it increases his taxes a penny. No man can say that it increases the assessment on his property one penny. No man can say that at the next session of Congress you may adopt this House amendment, the so-called Johnson amendment, and, as a separate proposition, as a separate measure, do what? As a separate measure have this resolution. What is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] doing? What are these other proponents doing, who criticize legislation on an appropriation bill? They are endeavoring to force upon the Members of the House and Members of the Senate a proposition to have a commission appointed. To do what? To change the method of taxation? No. To change the rate of taxation? No. To change the system of government here? No. What is the single proposition, what is the single issue, presented by the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama? The single resolution is to determine the one proposition, the ratio of expenses to be borne by the Federal Treasury and by the District property here; to fix an arbitrary amount that should be paid in the future; and it may be that that arbitrary amount in the next few years will be as unjust, will be as unfair, and as execrable on one side or the other as the half-and-half plan is now. And if you fix it arbitrarily and it gets to be wrong, it gets to be unjust, then you have got to have another quarter of a century's fight to change it. Gentlemen, the proposition submitted to you, and which you adopted by an overwhelming majority and sent to the Senate, is no such foolish proposition. You sent an honest proposition to the Senate to leave the taxes as they are and let them raise the amount they now raise, and then the Federal Government will pay what they think is necessary to supplement the amount in order to meet the expenses. There is nothing unfair about it; there is no bugaboo man in it; and there is no complication in it, and no mystery.

This thing got to be a mysterious and difficult problem to certain interested gentlemen in the District and to certain interested gentlemen on the floor of the House and to certain other interested gentlemen in the Senate. It became a marvelous and stupendous and overwhelming burden upon the minds and hearts of Congress to determine the arbitrary amount each should pay. These gentlemen hope that this commission will be the grave of this good legislation. They know the only way to do justice is to have an honest assessment, an honest rate of taxation, and fix it for all time to come. This the proponents of this commission do not want. This resolution begs the question and gives the special-privileges class here another year of grace. Let the District pay an honest and fair amount of taxes, and that will end it. There will then be nothing more to do; and when Congress has exercised that sovereign right which she ought to exercise it will have dealt fairly with the District people and she will then have to deal fairly with the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman reserves the balance of his time. The gentleman has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I shall not consume the 11 minutes; but before the vote is taken I want to make a statement for the RECORD as to the figures in this bill. The bill as passed by the House carried $11,313,048.45. There was added in the Senate by way of amendment $1,029,276. By the action of the conference between the two Houses this amount was reduced and the bill carried, as the conference report has been adopted in the House, $11,859,584.45, or $312,955.04 less than the current law.

Now, one word relating to the pending motion by the gentleman from Alabama and the existing law as to the meaning of the expenses of the conduct of the District of Columbia. For the fiscal year 1915 the estimated revenue from the collection of taxes in the District of Columbia, matched by an equal amount from the Treasury of the United States, was, in round numbers, $14,500,000. The committees of the Congress, and Congress itself, in making appropriations for the District for the fiscal year 1915, appropriated $12,172,539, leaving a surplus of $2,327,000 in the Treasury. The estimated revenues for the fiscal year 1916, from taxes collected in the District of Columbia, is estimated at $8,000,000. That amount, matched under the present law by $8,000,000 from the Treasury of the United States, would make an available sum of $16,000,000 for the conduct of the affairs of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year for which we are legislating. The conference report as adopted this morning, providing for all the various activities of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1916, carries $11,859,584, leaving a surplus of $4,140,416 in the Treasury of the United States. If the gentlemen of this House will take those figures and analyze them they will say, in my judgment, that we have more money under the present plan than can be properly expended for the conduct of the affairs of the District of Columbia. That, to my mind, answers this whole question. The Johnson amendment provides, if it were adopted——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In one moment. The Johnson amendment provides that out of the appropriations in this bill of $11,859,584.45, $8,000,000 of it, in round numbers, would be paid by taxes raised upon property in the District of Columbia and $3,859,584 would be paid from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BORLAND. Without increasing the rate.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; without increasing the tax rate or the assessment or any other element touching the tax rate in the District.

Mr. MADDEN. I was going to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if the great surplus in the Treasury to which he alludes is not due in large measure to the fact that the committee has not authorized a great many permanent improvements that the District of Columbia ought to have made?

Mr. MANN. There is no surplus.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; I think not. The estimates made by the commissioners to this Congress, coming to this Congress for the year 1916—and I have not the exact figures before me—were a little more than $12,500,000, according to my recollection; so that we are meeting the needs of the District of Columbia. In fact, we have in this bill appropriations for which the District commissioners did not estimate, and we are building schoolhouses that they did not ask for. We are meeting all the needs for the current conduct of the government of the District of Columbia, and, in addition, making permanent improvements.

Mr. MADDEN. Now will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. The committee has recommended legislation authorizing the children of the State of Maryland to attend the public schools of the District of Columbia, which will entail an expense on the people of the District of Columbia. Does the gentleman think that in the face of that character of legislation the Government of the United States ought not to pay part of it?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Well, I never have said, I will say to the gentleman, that the United States Treasury ought not to pay a part of it. We are paying, if the Johnson amendment were in vogue to-day, out of this $11,859,000, for the conduct of District affairs, out of the general fund in the Treasury, an amount of $3,859,000 to meet the expenses of this District. I will say to the gentleman what I have said on this floor repeatedly heretofore, that I believe there is an obligation on the part of the National Treasury to the District of Columbia, and that obligation is met when we meet the needs of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was going to say that under the present assessment, instead of its being 50 per cent it virtually becomes 66⅔, in the relation of $8,000,000 to $4,000,000.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes. Now, Mr. Speaker, as one of the conferees of this House, trying to get this legislation, I want directions from this House. It has voted 2 to 1 for the so-called Johnson amendment, and as a conferee of the House, with my colleagues on that conference, we are not going to yield until this House yields. [Applause.] We are not going to assume the responsibility, as the agents of this House, of laying down upon a proposition that has been voted in by a vote of 2 to 1 in the House of Representatives; and it is up to you, and, as conferees, we are to carry out your will. But we want you to express your will.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, the gentleman can not say with any definiteness, but does the gentleman expect the Senate to yield on this proposition?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I do not see any reason why the Senate should not yield any more than that we should yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Has there been any indication that the Senate would yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; nor has there been any here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is it not customary, when legislation is put on an appropriation bill, for the House proposing it to yield in case of a deadlock?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think I will admit without any question that that has been the custom in the past. But I think there have been very few questions, even in the gentleman's long experience here, where there has been so decided a difference of opinion between the two Houses as there is on this proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If that is the case, is not the wiser course to accept this amendment as a compromise?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will answer the gentleman as I said awhile ago. That is up to this House, not to me as a conferee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I, as a conferee, will carry out the will of this House, whatever it may be; and I want that expression from the House this morning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman is entitled to have that.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the two motions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the previous question on the motion offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CRISP, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, and Mr. SISSON demanded a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 85.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Sixty-two gentlemen have risen—a sufficient number. The yeas and nays are ordered. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the motion will vote "yea"; those opposed will vote "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 165, nays 151, answered "present" 3, not voting 104, as follows:

So the motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. WILSON of Florida with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BARNHART with Mr. LINDQUIST.

Mr. DALE with Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas with Mr. CARY.

Mr. HENSLEY with Mr. BARTHOLDT.

Mr. SABATH with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.

Mr. CANTRILL with Mr. BARCHFELD.

Mr. BROWN of New York with Mr. CHANDLER of New York.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. BROWNING.

Mr. BURGESS with Mr. DRUKKER.

Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. EDMONDS.

Mr. DENT with Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia.

Mr. DOOLING with Mr. GOOD.

Mr. HAY With Mr. KAHN.

Mr. KITCHIN with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HART with Mr. GREEN of Iowa.

Mr. BRUCKNER with Mr. GREENE of Vermont.

Mr. FAISON with Mr. HAWLEY.

Mr. MAHER with Mr. JOHNSON of Utah.

Mr. NEELY of West Virginia with Mr. MOSS of West Virginia.

Mr. PALMER with Mr. KREIDER.

Mr. PETERSON with Mr. LEWIS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. RAKER with Mr. MORIN.

Mr. SAUNDERS with Mr. PORTER.

Mr. TAGGART with Mr. MCGUIRE of Oklahoma.

Mr. WALKER with Mr. GRIEST.

Mr. WILLIAMS with Mr. WALLIN.

Mr. HAMILL with Mr. TEMPLE.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I was in the Hall, listening, but did not hear my name.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CARLIN, and he voted "aye."

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening?

Mr. TEMPLE. No; I was in the lobby.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

The SPEAKER took the chair.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening?

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. I came in during the second roll call, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is, when your name was called on the second roll call, were you here and listening?

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not qualified.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I do not know how the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] voted. That is immaterial; but I failed to hear the Speaker put the qualifying question to him.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I happened to be occupying the chair at the time, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] stated voluntarily, without my putting the question to him, that he was in the Hall listening.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have no further motion to make with regard to the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Let them ask for a conference.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. ADAMSON. I wish to submit a request for unanimous consent. A good deal was said yesterday about a committee of Congress to attend the opening of the Panama Canal, and I have dropped in the box the following resolution. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 434) providing for a joint committee to represent Congress at the formal and official opening of the Panama Canal.

Resolved, etc., That the Vice President of the United States and 7 Senators, to be appointed by him, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and 14 other Members of the House, to be appointed by him, shall constitute a joint committee to attend and represent the Congress of the United States on the occasion of the formal and official opening of the Panama Canal by the President. For the purpose of defraying the expense of attending and participation by said committee the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman to withhold his resolution for the present. I do not think the matter ought to be taken up, if at all, until the legislative bill is passed and we know what has been determined upon about the general celebration.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not question the wisdom of the gentleman from Alabama in making the request to await the result of the other proposition, but I do not want to withdraw the resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am unwilling to give unanimous consent for consideration at this time.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ADAMSON. The resolution is in the basket and it will take its course.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUGHES] is confined to his room on account of illness, and I ask that he be granted leave of absence for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUGHES] have leave of absence for to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. RAKER, for three days, on account of death in his family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the District of Columbia bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks on the District of Columbia bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 21201, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21201) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have a separate vote now on Senate amendments 1 and 2, which come together, and amendments 22 and 23, which come together. I think it will take a very short time to do it. Will not the gentleman from Virginia ask unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table for present consideration and disagree to the other Senate amendments?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table and nonconcur in all of the amendments except Senate amendments 1 and 2 and 22 and 23.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 21201, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, and disagree to all the Senate amendments except amendments 1 and 2 and 22 and 23. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say that I would like 10 minutes on amendments 1 and 2.

Mr. MANN. That will come up later.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report Senate amendments 1 and 2.

Mr. MANN. Reporting the amendments will give little information. Senate amendments 1 and 2 are in relation to the International Boundary Commission between the United States and Mexico. The House appropriated $7,500, and the Senate has increased it to $25,000. The House made $5,000 of that available to resume and continue the work relating to the distribution of water, and the Senate has increased that to $16,000. I do not wish to move to concur, but I want to emphasize the attitude of the House when the gentleman moves to disagree to the amendments by asking for a division. If anyone wants to concur in these amendments, now is his time to take the chance.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to Senate amendments 1 and 2. I am a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and these amendments are in reference to the International Boundary Commission between the United States and Mexico. We appropriated $7,500, $5,000 of which was to be made immediately available to resume and continue the distribution of the water, as set forth on page 10 of the bill.

We gave this matter thorough consideration and appropriated $7,500. We appropriated all that they can possibly use at this time.

The Senate has seen proper to make it $25,000 instead of $7,500, and to make $16,000 available for the investigation and distribution of water. The idea of this $16,000 is to go there and devise plans of impounding the water of the Rio Grande River for distribution. It is absolutely impossible for them to do any work at this time; they could not do it on the Mexican side, and it would be useless to try to do it on the American side without cooperation with the Mexican commission. The Mexican commission is not doing any work, they are taking no part in the matter, and $7,500 provides ample salaries for those to look after the distribution of the water.

So far as undertaking to lay down plans for the distribution and impounding the waters of the Rio Grande River, it is absolutely impossible to do it, and it would be merely a waste of the $17,500 which the Senate put in the bill. We went into the matter thoroughly and concluded that $7,500 was all that could possibly be used and all that would be used to any great advantage at this time.

I am opposed to it because we can not make any use of it. Mexico and the United States are not on speaking terms, at least the Governments are not, and there is no Mexican commission to cooperate with. You could merely stand on the hills and look over onto the Mexican side to see what would be practicable. As for expending $16,000 to any advantage, it is absolutely impossible and a waste of Government money.

I do not want to go into the matter too deeply, but the committee looked into the whole affair and determined exactly what money could be used. I am opposed to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House disagree to the Senate amendments 1 and 2.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 117 ayes and 6 noes.

So the motion to disagree was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendments 22 and 23.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 22:
Page 29, line 10, strike out "$25,000" and insert "$100,000."
Amendment 23:
Page 29, line 13, after the word "country," insert: "$75,000 of which, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended for the erection, on land donated to this Government by the Government of Panama, of a suitable building, which may permanently stand as a bureau of information and commercial museum to exhibit and draw attention at all times to the industrial and commercial standing of the United States, and the residue to be expended."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in Senate amendments 22 and 23.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is the item for the Panama Exposition, by the Government of Panama. The Department of State originally asked for $75,000. The House appropriated $25,000, leaving out the provision for a permanent exposition building. The matter was discussed quite fully in the House when it was before the House. The Senate has made it $100,000, of which $75,000 shall be used for the construction of a permanent exposition building. I will undertake to say that, in my judgment, if the entire membership of this House should go to Panama and view the situation, there would not be 5 out of the 425 or more Members who would be in favor of constructing this exposition building at the place where it is proposed now to construct it. I wish to emphasize if I can the action of the House, if they are opposed to the amendment, by disagreeing, so that it will back up the conferees.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HELM. Is this building to be constructed on the Canal Zone?

Mr. MANN. It is not.

Mr. HELM. Where is it to be constructed?

Mr. MANN. Away across the city of Panama, on the other side of the city from the Canal Zone.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Out in the country away from everything.

Mr. MANN. It is a place where they would like to promote a very nice suburban real-estate boom.

Mr. HELM. Do I understand the gentleman is opposing the location of the building and the proposition as a business proposition?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not say that we might not properly erect a permanent exposition building there at some time on the Canal Zone, but that has nothing to do with this proposition.

Mr. HELM. This is simply the location of the site?

Mr. MANN. This is for the construction of a permanent exposition building out in the country on ground to be given to the Government by the present owners, in order to have us construct a permanent building, away from the Canal Zone.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Virginia to yield to me.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I think there is a great deal of merit in the proposition to have an exposition building on the Canal Zone somewhere, some kind of a business museum or exposition building. It may be that the location of this particular site is ill advised, but the proposition of having an institution where American goods, wares, and merchandise may be put on exhibition and viewed by the people of Central and South America who must traverse this Canal Zone, utilizing the Canal Zone as a highway of travel, I think is important.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Does the gentleman not think it would be a better business proposition to fix up some of our post-office buildings in the United States than to go outside and to build an exposition building?

Mr. HELM. Oh, the gentleman is clear off the track. This is a serious business proposition. I think it promises good results if it is properly handled, and I do not think it ought to be treated lightly.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Foreign Affairs reported this item as it passed the Senate. In the House the $75,000 went out on a point of order. After hearing what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who had personally investigated the property on his visit to Panama, said about the location of the proposed building, I was convinced, and I believe other members of the committee that reported the bill were convinced, that his position is correct. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that this appropriation is for the erection of a building at a particular spot which is designated in the bill itself.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HELM. I am not taking issue with the chairman of the committee. It may be that all he says is correct, that this may be in a very ill-advised situation, but I am in favor, generally speaking, of a proposition that will afford an opportunity to exhibit American products.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That may be all right as an original proposition, but it is not before the House. This is a proposition to erect a building on the other side of the city of Panama from the Canal Zone, in a particular locality, designated in the bill. I think the House ought to disagree to the Senate amendments. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to disagree to Senate amendments 22 and 23.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 117, noes 1.

So the Senate amendments were disagreed to.

The Chair announced the following conferees: Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, Mr. CLINE, and Mr. COOPER.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 20415) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to take the Agricultural appropriation bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if any arrangement can be made for those who wish to vote on the rural-credit amendment? I favor immediate action on rural credits, and unless I can have that amendment considered and concurred in, either with our without amendment, I shall object.

Mr. LEVER. To what amendment goes the gentleman refer?

Mr. WINGO. To the McCumber amendment, 89.

Mr. LEVER. Amendment 89?

Mr. WINGO. Amendment numbered 89.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that personally I have no objection whatever to some arrangement being entered into by which a separate vote on amendment No. 89 may be had. The gentleman understands, of course, that it would take unanimous consent to make such an arrangement. Personally I shall not object to unanimous consent being asked for that purpose.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, then, to disagree to all amendments except amendment No. 89——

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman from South Carolina make the request.

Mr. LEVER. I prefer not to make that request. Let some one else make it.

The SPEAKER. What is the request the gentleman from South Carolina makes?

Mr. LEVER. My request is to take this bill from the table, to disagree to all Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. These gentlemen are proposing another plan of procedure, and I ask them to make their proposition.

Mr. GARNER. Let me state my request for unanimous consent. The gentleman from South Carolina has stated he would have no objection himself to giving an opportunity for a separate vote on amendment numbered 89. Now, if that meets the approval of the House, we can very easily get at it. Then I ask unanimous consent to disagree to all Senate amendments except 89, and consider Senate amendment numbered 89 in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House at this time. I make that request.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman broaden his request so as to make it cover the proposition, so that we may vote upon this Senate amendment numbered 89, any amendment to it, any amendment to the amendment, a substitute for the amendment, and any amendment to that, so we will have a fair, square vote on the rural-credits proposition?

Mr. GARNER. That follows the unanimous consent; that covers the entire proposition. If we consider this matter in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House, it will be open for amendment, and amendments may be offered and voted on. It is at the pleasure of the House.

Mr. HENRY. Well, does the gentleman change his request to that extent?

The SPEAKER. There is not any request to start on.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I submitted a request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] included that in his request.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. FERRIS. To submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERRIS. If unanimous consent is given will the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] serve as instructions to the House conferees to bring that back as it is? What is the legal effect?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman proposes to take it up right now and dispose of it.

Mr. FERRIS. What effect does that have?

The SPEAKER. The effect it has is whatever the House does. If the House agrees to it or agrees with an amendment, that is the end of that part of it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Is it necessary that the unanimous consent request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] should be granted if the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] should be complied with?

The SPEAKER. Why, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] never made any unanimous-consent request.

Mr. HENRY. I was going to make it to supplement the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. RAGSDALE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] included the very thing the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] was talking about.

Mr. RAGSDALE. That was what I was trying to get at.

Mr. HENRY. Let me understand it. It includes——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the request. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] requests that the House disagree to all the Senate amendments except 89, and that 89 shall be taken up immediately, and that the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union dispose of it.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENRY. Suppose we agree to the gentleman's request and then we take up amendment numbered 89, and some gentleman moves to disagree, and some other gentleman moves as a preferential motion to concur, and some other gentleman moves to concur with an amendment—a gentleman who is not friendly to the proposition—and then, if he moves the previous question on it, would we be able to vote on every phase of this proposition?

The SPEAKER. The way that would stand at this time is with all three of these motions pyramided a motion to concur with an amendment would take precedence over the motion to concur, and both of them would take precedence over a motion to disagree; and if the motion to concur is voted down, it is equal to a disagreement.

Mr. HENRY. Then if some gentleman who is not friendly to some of the propositions we intend to propose here should move to concur with an amendment and then move the previous question we would have no right to vote on our propositions?

Mr. MANN. They will be far better off than when the Committee on Rules—because we can vote down the previous question and we can not vote down the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The House is under no sort of obligation to vote for the previous question. If it deliberately votes for the previous question it shuts it off.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. If the friends of the rural credits are in the majority, they can vote down the previous question and submit any proposition to this House——

The SPEAKER. Of course they can, any proposition that is within the rule.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, the friends of rural credit can enter into an agreement now that we can stand by hereafter?

The SPEAKER. I do not know about that.

Mr. HENRY. Then, Mr. Speaker, we can object?

The SPEAKER. Of course you can object.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BATHRICK. I desire at some stage of this parliamentary proceeding to make a motion to concur in Senate amendment No. 89.

The SPEAKER. We have not arrived at that stage yet, and the prospects are not very good. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, if the agreement is made, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the McCumber amendment would then be considered under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER. It would, undoubtedly.

Mr. WINGO. The Senate amendment is considered as one section, is it not?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. May I make another parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas will state it.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, in order that some gentlemen who stand around here and ask questions may understand, I would like to ask if this bill should go to the committee under the regular rules of the House and be reported back, and it was being considered in the Committee of the Whole, the same rules would apply to this section that would apply to it under this unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. GARNER. Except you can not move the previous question in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, under the request of the gentleman from Texas——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will allow the Chair to answer the parliamentary inquiry, then he will recognize him. There will be two differences. In the Committee of the Whole you have general debate, and can not move the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's request is to consider the Senate amendment in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That amendment appropriates $10,000,000. It must be considered as a single amendment. One amendment could be offered to it, and after five minutes' debate some friend of this appropriation could move the previous question; and if they had the votes, after five minutes' debate they could vote to adopt this item appropriating $10,000,000. It is a little too rapid for me, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] objects. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] asks unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MANN. It is all over.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. NORTON. Is it in order at this time to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] moves to take this bill from the Speaker's table and disagree to all the Senate mendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. There is no second about it.

Mr. FERRIS. I object, Mr. Speaker, to unanimous consent.

Mr. NORTON. I object to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HENRY. I understood the Chair to say that the gentleman moved to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. He asked unanimous consent, and there was objection made.

Mr. LEVER. I offer the following motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LEVER moves to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table H. R. 20415, an act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, disagree to all Senate amendments thereto, and ask a free conference.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. HOWARD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. Did the Chair recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] to demand a second? I was on my feet and addressed the Chair, and the gentleman from Texas simply, without being recognized by the Chair, said, "Mr. Speaker, I demand a second." The Chair, as I understand it, had not recognized the gentleman from Texas to make any motion at this time because of the fact that the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] had intervened. Now, the gentleman from Texas demands a second without any recognition from the Chair for the purpose of demanding a second, and I was on my feet for the purpose——

The SPEAKER. I know, and there were a dozen other Members on their feet.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman was too slow.

Mr. HOWARD. I was trying to proceed according to the parliamentary practices.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman had not said a word.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had not heard the gentleman.

Mr. HOWARD. I said, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas said, "Mr. Speaker, I demand a second," and I say under that procedure he can not get the attention of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas happened to be standing right in front of the Speaker, doing the same thing that the gentleman from Georgia says that he is doing. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] demands a second.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. MURRAY. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 68.

So a second was refused.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVER. I was about to inquire of the Chair, Mr. Speaker, if this bill under these circumstances went automatically to the Committee on Agriculture?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred to the Committee on Agriculture. [Applause.] For what purpose does the gentleman from North Dakota rise?

Mr. NORTON. I desire to inquire whether, after the vote was taken, or after the tellers were had on the vote to suspend the rules, it was in order then to move to suspend the rules and concur in Senate amendment 89?

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is water that has run over the mill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been referred to the committee.

Mr. NORTON. All right.

The SPEAKER. That was settled, so far as this particular juncture is concerned.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 20975, the naval appropriation bill, with the Senate amendments, disagree to all the amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 20975, the naval appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if some arrangement could be made whereby we may get a separate vote on Senate amendment numbered 71?

The SPEAKER. What is it about?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. The efficiency system of shop management.

Mr. PADGETT. I have no objection to bringing it back, sir.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. If there is some arrangement of that kind, a good many of us here would like an opportunity to vote on that proposition in case the House would concur in the Senate amendment; and if the chairman of the committee would bring that in, any objection I would have would be withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. That is also true with respect to the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. The Army bill went into conference, and they are in disagreement on that item now.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I understand. I take it that what will be agreed upon as to the one will be done with the other.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavor to make whatever action the House takes on the naval bill conform to the action it takes on the Army bill in that respect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. PADGETT, Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, Mr. ESTOPINAL, Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the general deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21546, the general deficiency bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21546, the general deficiency bill, with Mr. FERRIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21546, the general deficiency bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21546) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

For expenses of the Revenue-Cutter Service, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914, $7,398.58.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MANN. I do that for the purpose of again calling the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to the term "Revenue-Cutter Service" which is carried in this bill in several places.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The item that has been read is an ascertained deficiency for 1914.

Mr. MANN. I understand. There are, as I understand, various items in the bill, as I stated before, under the term "Revenue-Cutter Service" and under the term "Life-Saving Service." The law creating the Coast Guard Service uses this language:

And all funds and appropriations now provided by law for the Revenue-Cutter Service and all funds and appropriations now provided by law for the Life-Saving Service shall be available for like services under the Coast Guard hereby created.

Of course that language clearly does not cover items in this bill under the heads of "Life-Saving Service" and "Revenue-Cutter Service." But I think, before this bill becomes a law, there ought to be language inserted somewhere in this bill showing that these items in the bill under these titles shall be available for the Coast Guard.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My understanding of the situation is this: Certain appropriations have been made under certain titles for the current year for the Life-Saving Service and the Revenue-Cutter Service. The bill creating the Coast Guard provides for appropriations made for these two services for the next fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. It does not so provide. I have just read the language to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will read that language, I will use it to explain my position.

Mr. MANN. It says:

All funds and appropriations now provided by law for the Revenue-Cutter Service and all funds and appropriations now provided by law for the Life-Saving Service shall be available for like purposes under the Coast Guard hereby created.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Coast Guard act provided that the appropriations that had been made for this fiscal year, at the time the Coast Guard act went into effect, were available for the Coast Guard Service.

Mr. MANN. They might have been made for the last fiscal year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These accounts are opened on the books of the Treasury. When a deficiency appropriation is made for any one of them, it is added to the account opened, and is treated as if it had been made for the entire fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. It can not be without violating this provision.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The auditor's office of the Treasury Department, which controls these matters, takes this position, and if they are not embarrassed, I do not see why I should worry.

Mr. MANN. I am sure the auditor's office and the comptroller's office have not passed upon the matter, and if they have, they are perfect fools. Here is a provision to the effect that the appropriations heretofore made shall be available for a certain purpose, and the gentleman assumes that that means that the appropriations hereafter made shall be available. If this assumes that it is necessary—and I do not know whether it is or not—and something is needed under this bill, the moneys will not be available.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the Treasury Department, which has control of the Treasury, and the experts in the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants and the various auditors are supposed to submit estimates in such a form that they can use the money. I have sufficient trouble in determining how much they ought to get, and I am not concerned so much about the form of the appropriation. My troubles are incurred in trying to determine how much they should expend, if any.

Mr. MANN. I understand it probably will not be fair to ask the gentleman from New York to use any of his gray matter to explain the estimates submitted to the committee. But when I use my gray matter for that purpose, if the gentleman had good judgment, he would accept the benefit of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why should the gentleman worry about the mistakes of the Treasury Department?

Mr. MANN. I do not worry about the mistakes of the Treasury Department, but I hate to see Congress act like a pack of small children at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

War-risk insurance: To pay the United States Steel Products Co. refund of a portion of premium on account of war-risk policy No. 8, having ceased to cover on November 29, 1914, $1,435.60.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 7, after the word "eight," strike out the word "having" and insert the word "which."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is offered with a view of improving the phraseology of the bill, but it pertains to a paragraph which I desire to discuss briefly.

In August last, when the war risk insurance proposition was before the House, I called attention to the fact that many of those who advocated the legislation represented the so-called trusts and combinations of the country, and that the ordinary people of the land whose $5,000,000 was to be set up to capitalize a war risk insurance company had evidently not been consulted. I indicated then that the formation of this Government agency was fraught with danger, not only because of possible international complications, but because of the use of the people's money for a hazardous purpose. I said then what seems to be confirmed now, since at least two vessels going into the war zone have been sunk at a loss to the people of $659,000, that the War Risk Bureau would doubtless be used not only by American shippers seeking to get their materials into belligerent territory, but by exporters, speculators, and adventurers having a higher regard for the European dollar than they have for the American market or the American workingman. Of course, this suggestion was no more acceptable then to our Democratic brethern who are so fond of "the common people" than it is now.

FAVORING THE "BIG INTERESTS."

Since it is the favorite practice of the Democratic Party to denounce the Republican Party for its adherence to the protective-tariff system and to accuse it of fostering trusts and monopolies, I now recall for the benefit of our friends upon the other side that the war-risk bill came to us about the time that 62 distinguished gentlemen, thoroughly representative of "Wall Street" and the so-called "Money Trust," had called upon the President of the United States to discuss the war-risk proposition, increased railroad rates, and other matters the approval of which seemed to be at total variance with the long-standing and oft-repeated professions of Democratic orators. I will not now recall the names of these so-called "malefactors of great wealth" or of "predatory wealth" or of the "special interests" whom the President consulted in the hour of the Nation's great adversity, but shall deem it sufficient to say that the United States Steel Corporation, the Standard Oil Co., the United Fruit Co., the great New York banks, and various other "big interests" that "no honest Democrat" could formerly sleep with comfortably, were all there. They could have established a War Risk Bureau, capitalized at many times $5,000,000, without asking the people to stake their money, but the Democratic administration concluded to help out in the matter and the bill was passed. Of course the country was in great distress, due to the Democratic low-tariff legislation, but there was such a hue and cry about the inability of the cotton planter to get his product to the European mills that the welfare of the mills of the United States and the employment of our own industries were overlooked.

CRITICISM OF WAR RISK BUREAU.

Now, Mr. Chairman, although we have lost two ships, both foreign built and aged, which obtained the right to use the American flag because they had been wrecked upon the American coast, we are beginning to understand why our Democratic friends are "touchy" when we refer to their friendship for "the big interests" or to "the reckless interests" in the creation of the War Risk Bureau.

It appears from the paragraph before us that we are expected to refund, not to one of the "common people" who lost his money in the desire to sell his products to a foreign customer, but to the heretofore much-belabored United States Steel Products Co., the sum of $1,435.60, being a portion "of premium on account of war risk policy numbered 8." It seems the "big interests" were evidently obtaining the benefit of the people's money which capitalized the War Risk Bureau.

My friend JUDGE ALEXANDER, of Missouri, criticizes me in this morning's RECORD for reflecting in some of these war-risk talks upon the operations of the bureau. Well, I do criticize the bureau, not because of its personnel, but because it is a Government institution the origin and utility of which are debatable propositions. I believe the passage of the two resolutions which I have offered, one to obtain information about the sinking of the Evelyn and the other to secure an accurate list of the vessels and cargoes insured, with a statement as to ownership, destinations, etc., will reveal some facts that will be interesting to the plain people whose money has been used to enable the ships belonging principally to large corporations to carry on a business for which insurance could not be had from private companies and at rates which apparently would make it pay to have some of these old vessels sent to the bottom.

OLD HULL OVERINSURED.

The other day I called attention to the sinking of the Evelyn and the Carib, insured for $659,103 on premiums amounting to $20,995. These figures and others presented by me are confirmed by my friend from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] in the statement he puts in the RECORD this morning; but although it has been contended that the War Risk Bureau is pursuing the insurance business in the way it would be conducted by private companies, I do not believe the House or the country fully understands the kind of discretion that is exercised in fixing valuations upon which to pledge the insurance money of the people.

I have been looking up the case of the Evelyn and find that she was sold at public auction in conjunction with a sister ship, the Mae, about a year or so ago. The owners of the vessels had a hard time to get rid of them, but sold together they brought $84,500. Now, the Evelyn was built in 1883, 32 years ago, and was rebuilt after being wrecked in 1897. The Mae was built in 1899; she was therefore a younger, and doubtless a better ship. If we deal with values on the fifty-fifty plan, we would not place a higher value on the Evelyn than $42,250, or one-half the total. Now, what was the situation? Cotton was seeking ships to go into foreign ports. The marine companies were not cheerfully taking the risk, owing to war conditions. The Government War Risk Bureau was formed. Perhaps it should have been the very last agency to encourage American shippers to venture into belligerent territory. Perhaps it should have told them to keep out and attend to their own business in the United States, but that was not the purpose of the War Risk Bureau.

UNLOADED ON THE UNITED STATES.

It was intended to take the very risk that resulted in the mining of the Evelyn. The selling value of the Evelyn, as stated, was $42,250. The owners sought insurance from the War Risk Bureau and obtained a policy for $100,000. Then, the cargo of cotton was insured for $301,000, a total of $401,000. I do not know what the value of that cotton was, but, between the foreign guarantees and the American insurance, I venture the assertion that the men who sent that cotton by way of the Evelyn will not lose a dollar upon it. So far as the hull of the ship is concerned, the situation is even more interesting. Insured for $100,000 on a possible value of $42,500, it would pay the owner of any vessel to search out the floating mines and send the whole business to "Davy Jones's locker." We are told now that some of the lives on board the Evelyn were lost. Putting these facts and the whole problem of our Government's official mixing up in the war affairs of foreign nations together, it would seem as if we ought to have some further information about the operations of the War Risk Bureau.

Incidentally, and in passing, I call the attention of my Democratic friends to the rather significant fact that although the Evelyn, which was built in 1883, was insured on the hull for $100,000, the Carib, which also went to the bottom, sunk by a mine, was built in 1882, and was insured on the hull for only $22,253. Wouldn't it be worth while to have some information as to the manner in which these valuations are fixed and these estimates of insurance arranged? I am creditably informed that under normal conditions vessels of the age of the Evelyn and the Carib would not be insured by the old-line marine insurance companies, if carrying such cargoes as sugar or cotton. Therefore the worst end of the marine war-risk business seems to have been unloaded upon the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SOMEBODY BOUND TO MAKE MONEY.

Mr. MOORE. If we fix the value of this steamship Evelyn at $42,250, which is one-half of the total price for which the two ships were sold, then where does the judgment of the War Risk Bureau of the United States that gives to the owners of that vessel $100,000 insurance come in? On an old hulk like that, backed up by the people's insurance, to the extent of $100,000, somebody is bound to make money.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Is the House to understand that the insurance on the Evelyn was $100,000 and its value some time ago $42,000?

Mr. MOORE. I mean to say that the Evelyn and her sister ship, the Mac, which is a younger ship, were sold together for $84,500, which, if divided fifty-fifty, would mean that the Evelyn was worth $42,250 at best, and that the Government insured her for $100,000, and that is what the people stand to pay under the bond.

Mr. FESS. Is it the custom of insurance companies to insure property at a rate of 150 per cent of its value?

SURETY SAFEGUARDS IN OTHER BUSINESS.

Mr. MOORE. It is not the custom of insurance companies, using their own capital, to make any such valuations for insurance. They are a little more shrewd than the Government War Risk Bureau, because they have to take care of their funds, but apparently the War Risk Bureau having unlimited funds behind it, can do as it pleases for these great corporations and others. I am chiding the Democrats for this method of doing business. It is contrary to their professions and it varies from existing departmental practices. The Treasury Department has rules and regulations respecting surety companies doing business with the Government, and it is not quite so liberal with them. I think there is a rule prohibiting the acceptance of surety bonds where the risks in certain individual cases are deemed too high. My Democratic colleague [Mr. LOCKE] has introduced a bill relating to subcontractors and material men which fixes a limitation like this:

That no corporate surety company authorized to do business with the Government shall expose itself to a loss on any one risk or hazard for any one principal in excess of the amount of 10 per cent of its paid-up capital and surplus.

That is intended to protect the Government against surety companies playing favorites or overindulging the speculative habit. When the Government is in the war-risk business, however, it is different.

BIG VALUES ON OLD SHIPS.

From the testimony of our former colleague from Massachusetts, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Peters, before the Appropriations Committee, February 17 last, it would appear that the desire of the bureau is to raise the limit of risk staked on one policy.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman says that the ship was insured for $100,000. The gentleman knows that they do not pay any more than the real loss regardless of the amount of the policy.

Mr. MOORE. I know that when you give a bond you are liable to pay the bond, and the bond in this case was for $100,000. That is the value that was accepted. The Treasury Department concedes it.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is too good a business man not to know that they do not pay any more than the value of the loss.

Mr. MOORE. I know that the valuations varied from $100,000 on the Evelyn to $22,225 on the Carib, which also went down the other day. The hulls apparently were of the same value and both very old.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REIMBURSING THE UNITED STATES STEEL.

Mr. Chairman, in extension I would say that the testimony of Assistant Secretary Peters, to whom I have just referred, was in support of this item of $1,435.60 to reimburse the United States Steel Products Co. for a portion of the premium paid on insurance of the steamer Buenaventura on September 17, shortly after the passage of the war-risk law. I have every personal regard for the Assistant Secretary, as all of my colleagues have, but I respectfully submit that his statement in support of the refund to the United States Steel Products Co. supports the suggestion I have heretofore made, that resolutions should be passed giving the House complete information with respect to the business thus far done by the War Risk Bureau. It would help the people to a better understanding of the kind of business the Government is doing. Mr. Peters tells us that the Buenaventura was laden with copper, which was not contraband when the vessel started out but which was declared contraband before she reached her destination. That the desire to get the copper to Europe involved a risk apart from the risk of the money with which the people capitalized the War Risk Bureau is immediately apparent. I quote that portion of the testimony which bears upon this situation:

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, the insurance was taken out on the steamer Buenaventura on September 17 for 90 days, and the policy issued contained a clause which provided that the assured was not to load contraband; the assured loaded copper, which, at the time the policy was written and at the time the vessel sailed, was not contraband. After the vessel sailed copper was declared by Great Britain to be contraband, so that the policy did not cover it. The assured thereupon insured in private companies, and so from that time, November 29 to December 17, the policy was of no value to them. The money had already been turned into the Public Treasury, so that we could not refund it, and we are therefore asking this appropriation to pay back the amount due on the premium for the 18 days.

Mr. BARTLETT. How much was the full premium?

Mr. PETERS. $7,178, or 2 per cent of $358,900.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the refund for the 18 days amount to this sum, $1,435.60?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. How long did you insure it for?

Mr. PETERS. For 90 days.

Mr. BARTLETT. This is about one-sixth?

Mr. PETERS. About that; yes. We began business the first part of September, and this occurred at about the time we started. Since then the Division of Public Moneys has retained the premiums until we are certain that there will be no return premiums due; they are retained until that time before they are covered into the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The law requires you to cover them into the Treasury?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Have they delivered the cargo on the other side?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If the law requires you to cover them into the Treasury, how can you give them back?

Mr. PETERS. Well, the money is retained until the amount of the premium is absolutely fixed. You see, the way they do business is this: The shipowner declares that he will have a certain amount on a vessel and later finds that the freight space available cuts down his amount so that he can load but a part of that which he originally expected to load. As the banks require documents prior to the completion of the loading, very often provisional amounts are declared and later reduced, which necessitates a return of premium.

The CHAIRMAN. Those policies are taken out to be effective from the time the ship sails?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it a blanket policy?

Mr. PETERS. But in order to get their advance on the shipment the bankers require assurance that the war risk will be covered.

The CHAIRMAN. They issue binders?

Mr. PETERS. Yes. The bureau issues a letter which says that it will grant insurance on this cargo under certain conditions.

Mr. BARTLETT. And upon that the money is paid?

Mr. PETERS. Yes; and we will not do that until we get the premium on the largest amount which they are going to take.

Mr. BARTLETT. The policy does not state what particular goods are to be insured, but it insures the cargo.

Mr. PETERS. It usually specifies the goods.

Mr. BARTLETT. But it did not specify copper?

Mr. PETERS. Yes; at the time the policy was issued copper was not contraband, but after the policy had been written and after the boat sailed copper was declared to be contraband by Great Britain.

The CHAIRMAN. What happened was this: You issued a policy covering copper, but the provisions of your policy provided that you were not to cover contraband material.

Mr. PETERS. Not exactly; copper was not contraband at the time we wrote the policy or at the time the boat sailed, but after the boat sailed England declared copper to be contraband, which probably invalidated our policy. The policy covered the hull of the vessel, not the cargo; and one of its provisions was that contraband was not to be loaded.

"AMBITIOUS" INSURERS GET IN FIRST.

Mr. Chairman, this testimony pertains to but one vessel. A little further on in his statement Mr. Peters tells us (this was February 17, 1915) that 907 policies had been issued. The total amount insured was $54,604,264, says Mr. Peters, and the premiums so far paid were $1,452,706.75. It then developed that a number of the policies had expired, and for this the bureau claims credit. Mr. Peters was asked if claims had been made for losses. This was before the $659,000 had gone down in the Evelyn and the Carib. He said no, but answered as follows:

Notice has been given us that claims might be presented in the case of vessels which have been taken into port.

As to the rate of insurance, the following transpired:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you limit the amount of insurance that you issue on any boat?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. In what way?

Mr. PETERS. Originally we limited the total amount of insurance on any one boat and cargo to $300,000. That amount has been increased, however, so that now we will write as much at $1,000,000 worth of insurance on a boat and cargo. That, however, is the limit.

Mr. BARTLETT. Do you insure the boat as well as the cargo?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How is that apportioned?

Mr. PETERS. According to the demands which come on us.

The CHAIRMAN. I know; but there was some complaint that the insurance which was issued was controlled through certain channels and that the average applicant never had a chance to get any.

Mr. PETERS. We are extremely careful to guard against that, Mr. Chairman. Some difficulty arose after we had been insuring for a short time. Some very ambitious insurer would find out when a boat was going to sail. He would then come to us and tell us that he had $800,000 worth of cargo, or some other sum, and he would get the insurance on it, when, as a matter of fact, he did not have it. Then he would try to peddle that out; but as soon as we discovered that we required evidence that a man actually owned the cargo on which he wanted insurance.

RAISING THE LIMIT TO $1,000,000.

The concluding portion of Mr. Peters's testimony is so interesting that I append it herewith:

Mr. PETERS. When the war first broke out there were about 36 companies which were doing a commercial business; of those 36 companies, 16 or 17 were English companies. The English companies were, by their law, forbidden to give insurance against anything which the English Government might do.

Mr. SISSON. I do not catch that exactly.

Mr. PETERS. The English companies were forbidden to insure against any accident or against any risk arising from an act of the British Government—that is, they could not insure against capture or confiscation by England.

The CHAIRMAN. That is because the Government was insuring a part of the risk?

Mr. PETERS. Not necessarily, but because of an English law which provided against it. Then there were several German companies. The German companies were commercially unavailable on account of the closing of communication between this country and Germany, and the financial difficulties were such that their policies would not be acceptable to our banks at that time. The remaining American companies, while very strong, could do only a very small proportion of the business, and without reinsurance. They were overcautious with war risks, as they had the whole of the market. So they made rates of 8 and 10 per cent, and sometimes more, and they could only write in amounts of perhaps $150,000 on any one vessel at any one time, at any rate, amounts very much below what would be required to move an ordinary cargo. However, as soon as the war-risk insurance bureau came into the market immediately the rates were lowered.

Mr. SISSON. Did that affect the English rates?

Mr. PETERS. They are now about 2 per cent. While we do not always take the whole of the cargo, we take a sufficient proportion of it to compel all the outside insurance companies to meet our rate. After a short time people came to us and requested us to bind insurance on cargoes which they did not mean to ship. Originally we started to limit the amount of insurance to $300,000 on one cargo. Then we discovered that some people would get practically all of the insurance on a cargo and hold up the other shippers. We met that by first refusing to let any one person have all of the insurance. When complaint was made by any one that they were unable to get insurance on a cargo we would go to the person in whose name the insurance stood and ask him to prove that he had the goods to cover it, and then we raised the limit up to $1,000,000, and since then we have had no complaints.

LOSSES ENDANGER THE PROFITS.

While Mr. Peters gives us considerable information in his testimony, the main points suggested by my resolutions are not covered. The statements of the Assistant Secretary reveal the fact that in 907 instances the Government took risks on vessels going into territory where the possibility of involving us in war was very great. He indicates also that the policy of the bureau is to increase the risk on one ship and cargo to as much as $1,000,000. This is not conducting business on the 10 per cent of capital and surplus plan. The capital of the War Risk Bureau is $5,000,000; and if any one ship and cargo insured for $1,000,000 goes down, that would wipe out 20 per cent of the capitalization afforded by the people's money at "one fell swoop." So far as earnings are concerned, it has already been shown that they have been practically wiped out by the losses on the Evelyn and the Carib. If there are still outstanding 907 policies, or any large proportion thereof, on a total risk of $55,000,000, it might be that the time has come not to splurge, but to go slow. At any rate, it would not do any harm to have such information submitted to Congress as to the ownership of the vessels and the cargoes and the amounts of insurance granted, as contemplated by my resolution. There have already been a number of changes in the War Risk Bureau plans, showing that the system is not infallible.

CHANGES ALREADY MADE.

At first there was a great deal of confusion, and not a little suspicion as to the nature of the cargoes, when the Treasury Department directed that ships' manifests should not be published for 30 days after sailing. It is not improbable that the "ambitious" insurers who sought to secure large amounts of insurance and then peddle it out had in mind the thought that persons desiring to ship contraband, or munitions of war, would pay heavily for the privilege. Apparently it was not only cotton, copper, and grain that many of them wanted shipped, because recent reports indicate that the manufacturers of arms and ammunition in the United States have done a flourishing business during the last few months. The revocation of the manifest order was greatly to the relief of all shippers, notwithstanding that exports of copper and cotton have broken the records. The President's conference with Secretary McAdoo and others with the view of raising the rates of insurance and limiting the zones of travel is also significant. It is not improbable that the administration has awakened to the fact that the business we are doing is a dangerous business in more ways than one. As to these things, the information I have asked for would help to inform the people whose money and peace are at stake.

FEEDING EUROPE, NEGLECTING OURSELVES.

There is one other thought, Mr. Chairman, apart from the matter of risk in peace and money. There is no word of cheer in all this rush to get our cotton and other raw materials abroad, for the manufacturer or the workingman in the United States. It is true that we may be making certain commodities for the relief of the belligerant countries. But we are also confronted with a competition in manufactures almost as strong as it would be in normal times. The cotton which goes abroad is feeding the mills of Great Britain and Germany and is putting them in a position to compete with the American manufacturers who have no assurance of any protection under existing tariff conditions. Some gentlemen have said that the mills of these two great competitors of ours are prostrated. That statement is not founded upon actual conditions. The mills of Germany and Great Britain are almost as active as if there was no war. Textile workers in Great Britain have recently threatened to strike for higher pay. Approximately 100,000 men are now involved in a shipbuilders' strike on the Clyde. The woolen and cotton mills in the large manufacturing town in England are said to be running full tilt. The British workingmen are not worrying so much about the war as they are about getting higher pay, as appears from the following cable news, in the Washington Post:

A Central News dispatch from Clatham says that the Government dockyards laborers demand an increase of 5 shillings ($1.20) per week for each man during the period of the war on account of the increased cost of living.

The men describe the grant of an increase of 1 shilling per week as niggardly, and refuse to accept it.

A Central News dispatch from Colne, Lancashire, says the strike of the weavers in Colne Valley against the demands of their employers that the weavers work overtime to fill the heavy orders piling up because of the war will continue. Offers of the employers to pay extra for overtime work have been rejected by the strikers.

GERMAN AND FRENCH MILLS ARE BUSY.

We have the testimony of one of our own colleagues that the dyestuffs industry in Germany is not suffering for the want of employees. The New York Sun of February 24 gave us the following statement of exports from Germany:

GERMAN EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES GREAT AS EVER—$10,070,016 WORTH RECEIVED HERE IN JANUARY AGAINST $10,526,463 IN 1914.

Germany's success in maintaining her January exports to the port of New York at practically unchanged figures from those of the previous January was accomplished through the variety of products exported, in which aniline dyes figured largely, according to statistics made public at the customhouse yesterday. Total imports from Germany in January were $10,070,016, against $10,526,463.

Coal-tar colors were received at New York from Germany during the month amounting to $1,019,808, as compared with $385,207 in January of the year before, in addition to which alizarin worth $458,996 was received here, against $29,077 in January a year ago. Hops, kid gloves, and manufactures of flax were considerably increased in volume over January, 1914.

The Evening Ledger of Philadelphia gives us the following information concerning the revival of trade in France:

FRENCH TRADE MAKES BIG RECOVERY IN ALL BRANCHES—INVESTIGATIONS BY MINISTER OF LABOR SHOW FACTORIES WORK OVERTIME.

PARIS, February 26.

Investigations made by Minister of Labor Martin show that French industries and commerce have recovered to a large extent since the first month of the war. The number of employees now is only 20 per cent less than normal. Figures obtained from 31,000 establishments employing more than 1,000,000 persons show that about half of them were closed temporarily by the mobilization order and that they lost about two-thirds of their workmen at that time.

Since mobilization was completed the number of factories open has increased 43 per cent and the number of workers 83 per cent. Many establishments which were running only two or three days a week in August now are operating normally and some of them even on an overtime basis.

While all this is going on abroad with the assistance of our War Risk Bureau and by reason of the transfer of the American flag to foreign ships, it is interesting to observe that we are not doing so well upon this side of the water. Here is a report from the mill district of New England in the Boston Transcript:

[Special to the Transcript.]

MILL DIVIDENDS SHRINK—FALL RIVER COTTON CORPORATIONS' SHOWING—AVERAGE 0.503 PER CENT FOR FIRST QUARTER—TOTAL AMOUNT FOR 37 CONCERNS OF $258,775—NEXT TO LOWEST ON RECORD MADE IN 1912.

FALL RIVER, February 6.

G. M. Haffords & Co. issued to-day their report of dividends of the cotton cloth manufacturing corporations of Fall River for the first quarter of 1915. The total amount in dividends declared by the 37 corporations in the list is $258,775. This is a reduction of $24,517 from the total for the fourth quarter of 1914, and a reduction of $94,892 from the total for the first quarter of 1914. From corporations which declared dividends for the fourth quarter of 1914 passed dividends for this quarter and one corporation reduced its rate. There would have been a still larger shrinkage in total if the Richard Borden Manufacturing Co. had not added an extra dividend to its regular for the quarter. Its regular rate is 1½ per cent, and its directors have adopted the policy of adding an extra dividend to the regular for the first quarter of a new year, when its net earnings for the previous year have left a margin after providing for regular dividends and the maintaining of the surplus at a certain figure. So 3 per cent was declared for this quarter, instead of the regular 1½ per cent. For the first quarter of 1914 its rate was 4 per cent.

And another from the Baldwin Locomotive Works of Philadelphia, which has reduced its working force from 19,000 men in January, 1913, to a mere handful since the low-tariff law pointed out to us "a commercial future beyond the seas." This is from the Public Ledger:

BALDWIN PROFITS OFF 91 PER CENT IN 12 MONTHS—EARNINGS OF LOCOMOTIVE WORKS $350,229, AGAINST $4,017,800 IN 1913—I. C. C., THE TARIFF, AND WAR BLAMED.

From 1913, one of the most prosperous years in its history, the Baldwin Locomotive Works last year went through what was probably the very worst year it has ever experienced. The report for the year ended December 31, 1914, made public this morning, shows gross sales of only $13,616,163, compared with $37,630,969 in 1913, with $28,924,335 in 1912, with $29,342,585 in 1911, $29,285,883 in 1910, and an annual average of $26,285,883 for the 10-year period from 1901 to 1910.

The net profits, including income from the Standard Steel Works, a subsidiary, were $350,229, compared with $4,017,800 in 1913, with $3,698,571 in 1912, with $3,243,490 in 1911, $2,706,080 in 1910, and an annual average of $2,528,633 for the 10 years ended with 1910. The net profits last year were equal to 1.75 per cent on the $20,000,000 preferred stock, compared with the full 7 per cent on this issue and 13.69 per cent on the $20,000,000 common stock in 1913, with 11.49 per cent earned for the common stock, beyond the dividend on the preferred, in 1912 and 9.7 per cent in 1911.

Although earning but a bare fraction of the amount required for the dividend on its preferred stock, the company last year paid the full 7 per cent on this issue and also maintained the usual dividend of 2 per cent on its common stock, paying these amounts out of surplus.

Explaining the poor results for the year, President Alba B. Johnson in the report to stockholders says that during the latter part of 1913 and the first half of 1914, the "falling off in railroad revenues, due to the unfavorable attitude of the Interstate Commerce Commission, caused a general cessation of purchases of railroad equipment. This condition," he continues, "was made more acute by the reduction of railroad revenues resulting from the slowing down of business due largely to the adoption of lower tariff rates. During the last half of 1914 these unfavorable conditions were further affected by the paralysis of finances and of business which followed the breaking out of the war in Europe.

"The stress of competition forced the prices of orders secured close to the cost of production. It is obvious that under these conditions only extreme economies made it possible to carry the overhead expenses and pay interest upon bonded indebtedness."

As for the outlook in 1915, President Johnson says, "it is somewhat more favorable, but there is nothing to indicate more than moderate activity during the first half of the year."

From the Boston Journal of a few days ago we have the following:

PRESENT TARIFF CONDEMNED BY STATE SENATE—ONLY THREE DEMOCRATS VOTE TO INDORSE WILSON PROGRAM—PARTY COLLEAGUES DESERT SULLIVAN—WAR ONLY THING THAT HAS SAVED MILLS, SAYS BAZELEY.

The tariff was the subject of discussion in the Massachusetts Senate yesterday and in spite of earnest efforts on the part of Senator Sullivan, of Boston, in defense of the administration of President Wilson on that point, just one other senator, Leonard, of Boston, arose to vote with Sullivan in favor of resolutions indorsing the Wilson tariff program, while 29 voted against them.

Then the senate adopted resolutions condemning the present tariff as injurious to New England industries and Sullivan and Leonard were joined by only Senator Sheehan in opposition, while 27 were recorded in favor.

There are 7 Democratic members of the senate—enough to require the calling of the roll and the recording of each senator on any matter, but when Senator Sullivan sought to secure a roll call, he was deserted by all of his party colleagues, with the exception of the two mentioned above. During the entire discussion all of the other Democratic senators were absent from the chamber.

CHARGES ATTACK.

Senator Sullivan said the resolutions before the senate, reported by the committee on Federal relations, were nothing but an attack on the Wilson administration. The present situation, he said, could no more be controlled than a similar situation in 1910, when equal industrial depression prevailed.

If the interests which control $800,000,000 of cash would let loose that immense volume of money, he said, that would relieve the trouble that now exists as to the unemployed. He condemned the committee on ways and means of the senate for requiring that employees taken from the ranks of the unemployed upon the parks should be taken from the civil-service lists.

Senator Wells, of Haverhill, asked who drew the substitute resolves. Senator Sullivan replied that he was the author of the resolves, and that he offered them not as coming from the minority party; they were drawn by himself with the assistance of a friend, and he felt that he was within his right. "But I would ask," said Sullivan, "who drew the resolutions reported by the committee?"

Senator McLane, of Fall River, said that he, as chairman of the Federal relations committee, drew the resolutions. Senator Hobbs, of Worcester, ridiculed the Sullivan resolutions and read them through, substituting words of condemnation for the Wilson tariff program at every point where the language was eulogistic of the President.

SEES NO PROSPERITY.

Senator Wells asked where there is prosperity in Massachusetts when the State has to raise $150,000 for unemployment.

Senator Tufts, of Waltham, said that for the first time in 50 years the Waltham Watch Co. has been compelled to run on half time, and the president of the company said that it was solely due to the tariff. Senator Bazeley, of Uxbridge, said that in his district the mills had closed very soon after the tariff had gone into effect, and that it was only the European war that had saved them.

Senator Doyle said that for two years the textile mills of New Bedford have been idle because of the Democratic tariff. They deplored the tariff law that is keeping the textile workers, among the finest producers of cotton fabrics in the world, in idleness.

Senator Bean, of Cambridge, opposed the substitute resolutions.

Senator Sullivan said the deficit of $60,000,000 had been demonstrated by President Wilson to be directly due to the European war, and that if there has been industrial distress it is due to the fact that it came after practically 20 years of Republican rule.

COTTON EXPORTS UP, AMERICAN SPINDLES DOWN.

I have pointed out in a former talk that while our cotton exports increased 300,000 bales in January last over the preceding January, our active spindles in the United States fell off 500,000, but I did not then know what I have since learned from Bradstreet's report of February 26, that the business failures in the United States for the week ending on that date were 400 as against 260 during the same period of last year. Even in Canada the commercial failures were less in proportion, being 59 as against 49 a year ago.

Mr. Chairman, our Democratic friends admit that times are not good in the United States, but they lay the blame on the European war. Amongst their remedies for the financial distress which Republicans believe was brought on by low and insufficient tariffs, they have given us the War Risk Bureau, and they propose to give us the ship-purchase bill. In this they have failed to meet our common needs, as they have utterly disregarded the manufacturing industries of the country. The desideratum has been to relieve the cotton situation to get American raw cotton to the foreign mills. The speculator and the adventurer have come along with those who have earnestly and sincerely sought a market for their cotton. It has been a desperate play, involving the peaceable people of the United States in all the perils of international war. It has not reduced the cost of living to American workingmen nor has it increased their opportunities for employment. They have had less to do in all bread-winning occupations than ever before.

LEGISLATING FOR THE FOREIGNERS.

It has not encouraged new enterprises in the United States nor given assurance to any business man, except those who have undertaken to furnish war materials, that there would be a change for the better or that new undertakings may be attempted with the hope of permanency. On the contrary, while we have been legislating for our brethren across the water and have been sending them relief supplies as well as munitions of war, encouraging the "big interests" and the speculators, the nonemployment in the United States has increased and the actual and physical distress of the working people here has grown apace. I could append to this statement a series of letters showing the actual need of the people in the mill districts in my city, but I shall not do so. The facts are sad enough without embellishment. Thousands of our worthy people who had ample employment under a Republican system are now without employment and many of them are actually in need of bread. I shall content myself by inserting two letters from the morning mail. One of them has a direct relation to the operation of the tariff, war or no war, and the other bears upon the effect of too much catering to foreign trade and too little to our actual necessities at home:

PHILADELPHIA, February 27, 1915.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are sending you under separate cover a copy of the last issue of the Country Gentleman containing an article on "Canned Milk from the War Zone," which contains data of the highest interest to us as milk manufacturers and to the farming communities in which our condensaries are located in Pennsylvania and Maryland. This may not appear to so directly interest you as representative of a city, your constituents being largely consumers, but it is needless to say that the prosperity of one community is directly dependent on that of others.

The dairy industry of the United States is seriously menaced by the present prevailing conditions which would be highly intensified at the present moment but for the check to large importations due to the European war.

We commend to your earnest consideration the restoration of all or any part of the former existing tariff on dairy products. Without exact figures at hand, we believe that the restoration of part of the old duty would be sufficient to meet the needs of the dairy industry.

Yours, truly,

P. E. SHARPLESS COMPANY,
H. NUSBAUM, Treasurer.

BAKERY AND CONFECTIONERY WORKERS
INTERNATIONAL UNION OF AMERICA,
Philadelphia, February 26, 1895.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,

DEAR SIR: In behalf of Local No. 6 of Philadelphia, an organization consisting of 300 members and affiliated with the Bakery and Confectionery Workers International Union of America, we herewith respectfully request you to use your good offices in supporting our effort to have Congress to place an immediate embargo upon wheat and other important foodstuffs.

We especially ask that no more wheat, rye, and other grain be exported and furnished to the warring nations of Europe. Owing to the past increased export of these grains, the prices of wheat, flour, and bread, not to mention other necessities of life, are rapidly rising, and, especially in the baking industry, this situation has created havoc. Many smaller baking establishments have been compelled to suspend business and many bakery workers have thus been thrown out of work and have swelled the already great army of unemployed.

In the name of humanity we ask you to kindly lend us your valuable support and to exercise your influence on behalf of this movement.

Very respectfully, yours,

BAKERY WORKERS INTERNATIONAL UNION No. 6,
FRANK UNGER, President.
EMIL LUCHS, Secretary.

NEWSPAPER THOUGHT ON WAR RISK.

Mr. Chairman, one further word as to the War Risk Bureau. Some of the metropolitan journals have taken our losses on the Evelyn and the Carib as being mere incidents of the insurance business, and have treated them as a matter of course. That would apply to private marine insurance companies which had done business in the usual way under normal conditions. The United States Government is not doing that kind of business. Nor do all of the great newspapers agree on this subject. The Albany Journal, quoting the Wall Street Journal, which ought to be authority on the subject of insurance, says:

THE WAR RISK BUREAU.

Reduced from affluence to poverty at a blow by the sinking of the steamships Evelyn and Carib, the Government War Risk Bureau retires temporarily from the insurance field to revise its actuarial tables (if it has any), hinting that when it resumes its activities rates will be doubled. Profits of $752,041, which were pointed to with pride as an illustration of what the Government can do when it has a mind to, were brought down to $92,938, and the presiding genius of the Treasury, usually unabashed by the prospect of a deficit, deems it the part of prudence to suspend operations until it is seen how many more ships are going to be blown up. If, as has been stated in Congress, there is still $55,000,000 insurance outstanding, officials of the bureau may well regard their scanty surplus with apprehension.

The incident throws light on what might have happened had the ship-purchase bill, happily defunct, secured enactment. Presumably, the War Risk Bureau could not have refused to insure a fleet of Government-owned ships; and whether so insured or not, the taxpayer would have stood to lose substantial sums through the destruction of the vessels.

It is noticeable that privately controlled marine insurance concerns raised no protest against the invasion of their field by the Government bureau. The reason now seems sufficiently obvious—private marine insurance companies did not care to accept the risks taken by the bureau, which consequently took the "leavings," with alarming results.

In countries actually at war, where it is vital that ocean transportation be kept up at any cost, the entrance of the Government into the underwriting field is often a necessity. In the United States, however, it seems to have been promoted by that same itch for remedying nonexistent evils which led to the ship-purchase fiasco. The sudden crumbling of this tower of strength, this bulwark of the American shipping naturalized under the recent ship-registry act, will provoke a smile among those who still believe that private enterprise is capable of taking care of the business of the Nation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I am glad that the amendment has given my friend from Pennsylvania another opportunity to again blow off the compressed air that he has been contending with for some time.

So far as I am concerned, I happen to belong to that school that does not believe that the Government ought to engage in this sort of business. I have never thought it proper for the Government to go into the insurance business, the railroad business, or the shipping business, or any other private business. On the 4th of March I shall retire from the House and be relieved of all responsibility and burdens by my own voluntary act. While I regret that I shall be compelled to sever my associations with gentlemen whom I know so well and with whom I have served so many years, yet I shall at the same time have the conscientious conviction that during all these years I have pursued the even tenor of my way and followed my convictions on this and other subjects. If the Government is now in the war-insurance business, engaged in the insurance of ships and cargoes, it is not by my vote.

I do not think, however, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is justified in continually charging this bureau with maladministration. I do not know what the value of the old ships, as he calls them, were. I know that the War Insurance Bureau has received up to February 23, $1,475,675.62 in premiums, and that on that day there had been earned $640,848. I take it for granted, as I take it for granted under a Republican administration, that the people in charge of this bureau honestly administer it. I take it for granted that the insurance of the old ships, as they are denominated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, were insured after an investigation, and an honest investigation.

As far as this particular item is concerned, it is simply this: We insured a vessel for a certain amount on the cargo and the ship, for which we received $7,178 on a cargo worth $359,900. The policy contained a proviso that the risk was not to cover contraband goods. After the policy had issued and run for a considerable time the cargo that the ship carried was declared to be contraband, and the officers of the Government immediately canceled, or gave notice that it would cancel, the policy, and this item is to return the unearned premium. It does not seem that the Insurance Bureau of the Government is undertaking to do any more or any less than insurance companies engaged in a business of like character would do.

But the item has given the gentleman from Pennsylvania a chance again to assault and criticize the bureau. I do not know who is in charge of it, but I know it is under the direction of a former Member of this House, who occupied by reason of his high character and high ability a prominent place in this House, and who is Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Peters.

And I am sure that under the charge and control of that eminent gentleman from Massachusetts, who served so honorably in this House, there can be and is no wrong being done to the people or to the Government, even in the Insurance Bureau. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

General expenses: For all other authorized expenditures necessary in the execution of laws to regulate commerce, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915, $100,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There has been considerable talk lately about a confidential letter that the Postmaster General sent to the various postmasters throughout the country. I have a copy of that letter in my hand, and I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD, together with another letter written to the postmasters under date of February 4, 1915.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD letters to which he has referred. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say further in explanation that this is a confidential letter sent out to the various postmasters throughout the country, directing them to reduce expenses wherever it was possible. I want to read a sentence or two:

The department should be advised in all cases of allowances now in force which may be canceled in whole or in part. If, on account of the reduction of the work of your office, it is possible to maintain the service with fewer clerks or carriers, the force should be reduced until such time as their services are again required. When a regular clerk is absent without pay avoid employing a substitute if possible, or employ him for only the number of hours he is actually needed.

Then, in another place it says:

Reductions in the force of regular employees following readjustments of schedules so as to take up the unused time should be made by reducing to the substitute rolls the employees last appointed. Vacancies occurring in the clerical and, as far as practicable, in the carrier force should not be filled until the number of employees is reduced to the lowest number with which the work of the office may be maintained.

Mr. Chairman, I especially call the attention of the committee to this paragraph in the letter:

The service is confronted with a real emergency, due to the fact that expenditures are greatly in excess of the receipts. This condition, which is critical, is not due to internal causes for which the service is responsible, but to external wars, and the promptness and effectiveness with which postmasters respond to this letter, and at the same time maintain the efficiency of the service, will be accepted by the department as reflecting their administrative capacity and ability.

The other is a personal letter, under date of February 4, and is from the Assistant Postmaster General to postmasters, directing that the letter collectors' salary be reduced, and that none of them be paid more than $1,000 per annum. I just thought it was a good time to call attention to this fact. I see my friend from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is present, and he has been telling us how prosperous the times are and how things are improving and business looking up, and it seemed to me to be well to put these letters in the RECORD in order that the country might see them and see just how prosperous we are, and just how good business is, as indicated by the returns in the Post Office Department. In such good times we always reduce wages and lay off men.

The letters referred to are as follows:

CIRCULAR LETTER No. 16—REDUCING EXPENDITURES.

[Confidential.]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, January 30, 1915.

POSTMASTER: You are requested to give this letter your immediate personal attention.

The continued decrease in postal revenues, caused by unsettled business conditions created by the European war, makes it imperative that expenditures be reduced as far as possible consistent with satisfactory and adequate service. It is believed that with the hearty cooperation of all postmasters and careful and thorough supervision expenditures may be materially reduced.

No curtailment should be made which will affect the prompt movement and delivery of the mails, and an efficient service must be given.

Every feature of the Postal Service should be carefully considered, and in any case where your experience suggests the possibility of reducing its cost the plan by which such reduction may be effected and all that it involves should be clearly set forth in a communication addressed to the officer having jurisdiction over the branch of the service affected, and this bureau advised accordingly.

Until business conditions again become normal the employment of regular clerks and carriers overtime, or the employment of auxiliary clerks and carriers to assist the regular forces does not appear to be justified and should be discontinued unless absolutely necessary because of the volume and importance of the mails. The spare time of clerks assigned to any part of your office should be fully used elsewhere when needed, and the number of hours substitutes are employed under auxiliary allowances should vary with the daily volume of business, as less service is required on days when the mail is light.

The department should be advised in all cases of allowances now in force which may be canceled in whole or in part. If on account of the reduction of the work of your office, it is possible to maintain the service with fewer clerks or carriers, the force should be reduced until such time as their services are again required. When a regular clerk is absent without pay avoid employing a substitute if possible or employ him for only the number of hours he is actually needed.

No request should be made at this time for additional contract stations unless this is imperative for the proper accommodation of the patrons of your office.

The efficiency of the employees should be maintained at the highest possible standard, and this can not be done by retaining inefficient employees, so those who have had a fair trial and have demonstrated their inability to perform satisfactory service should not be retained.

Reductions in the force of regular employees following readjustments of schedules so as to take up the unused time should be made by reducing to the substitute rolls the employees last appointed. Vacancies occurring in the clerical, and as far as practicable in the carrier, force should not be filled until the number of employees is reduced to the lowest number with which the work of the office may be maintained.

In the larger cities immediate consideration should be given to concentrating the deposits of collections at centrally located stations so as to consolidate clerical forces at these centralized points, thereby reducing the cost of supervision and clerical service. In some cases it will be found practicable in this manner to discontinue small classified stations and substitute therefor, if necessary, contract stations for the sale of stamps and money orders, the registration of mail, and the deposit of parcels.

In the delivery service the following features should have special attention with a view to reducing expenditures to the minimum:

(a) The cost of equipment employed in the delivery of heavy and bulky parcels should be reduced to the lowest possible figure, all parcels not too heavy or bulky to be handled by footmen being delivered by regular carriers.

(b) Where mounted collection service is employed an effort should be made to reduce the equipment used in the delivery of heavy and bulky parcels by utilizing the collection equipment. Careful study should be made of the feasibility of consolidating these two features of the service with a view to effecting not only a temporary but permanent economy.

(c) The unused time of carriers should be taken up and utilized to the fullest extent. If in order to do this a readjustment of the routes is necessary, such action should be taken and regular carriers whose services are not needed by reason of the readjustment should be assigned to substitute or auxiliary duty if they can be profitably employed 8 hours daily within a period of 10 hours. If not, the carrier last appointed should be temporarily reduced to the substitute roll. It may be possible to take up unused time on routes on which car fare is allowed by having the carriers walk and reduce the allowance for car fare.

(d) Unimportant delivery trips or delivery trips rendered unimportant by the falling off in the volume of first-class mail should be eliminated and the time saved taken up in a readjustment of routes. The regular carriers available as the result of such readjustment should be employed or reduced as indicated above.

(e) Unimportant collection trips should be eliminated and collection routes consolidated, readjusted, and arranged so as to take up the time gained.

The service is confronted with a real emergency, due to the fact that expenditures are greatly in excess of the receipts. This condition, which is critical, is not due to internal causes, for which the service is responsible, but to external wars; and the promptness and effectiveness with which postmasters respond to this letter and at the same time maintain the efficiency of the service will be accepted by the department as reflecting their administrative capacity and ability.

On February 20, in separate letters, report to this office, Division of Salaries and Allowances, on clerk hire and stations, and to Division of City Delivery on carrier service, what reductions may be made in your regular force (forwarding recommendations on proper forms) and state what allowances can be canceled.

DANIEL C. ROPER, First Assistant.

JANUARY 30, 1915.

The suggestions in this letter are approved. I confidently believe that postmasters will make effective responses to this appeal to meet the service emergency which confronts us.

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

[Personal.]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, February 4, 1915.

POSTMASTER: The work of carriers collecting mail is less exacting and important than that performed by carriers in effecting deliveries of mail. It is therefore desired that in the future the maximum salary of letter carriers assigned to the collection of mail be fixed at $1,000 per annum. You will proceed, in accordance with this policy, to make the necessary assignments of the higher-salaried carriers to delivery work, and you will not in the future give to any letter carrier receiving a salary in excess of $1,000 an assignment as collector.

Carriers now acting as collectors and receiving salaries in excess of $1,000 per annum who are incompetent to perform delivery service should be reduced in salary. Proper notice should be given to them, in conformity with the Postal Laws and Regulations, unless, by explaining to them the manifest difference in importance and responsibility of the two assignments, they voluntarily submit written consent to salary reduction.

It is desired that you charge yourself with an immediate application to this matter and make the assignments as rapidly as possible from time to time so that by July 1, 1915, your collection and delivery service may be adjusted to the basis indicated. In applying this regulation, a carrier who is performing both collection and delivery service should be regarded as a collector or carrier in accordance with the preponderance of work done in either line.

DANIEL C. ROPER, First Assistant.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there are three more legislative days in this session of Congress. There have been four hours of general debate on this bill, and I wish to give notice now that during the consideration of the bill hereafter I shall object to the discussion of any matters which are not pertinent to the paragraph under discussion, because it is necessary to pass this bill tonight. We can not waste time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Valuation of carriers: For valuation of property of carriers, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915, $400,000.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 19, after the word "fifteen," strike out "$400,000" and insert "$200,000."

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, we have already appropriated for this department some $3,000,000, and I am very much pleased to hear that the Senate has already reduced it down to nineteen hundred thousand dollars. I can not see why they want an additional $400,000 for this department. It is entirely unnecessary, and therefore I urge a reduction by one-half.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

For five commissioners at the rate of $10,000 each per annum and secretary at the rate of $5,000 per annum from March 1 to June 30, inclusive, 1915, $18,333.37, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman wishes to discuss the paragraph I shall make the point of order.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am going to discuss the paragraph. I make the pro forma amendment for the purpose of directing attention to the fact that when the Federal Trade Commission bill was being framed, and I had the honor of being a member of the subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee that drafted the measure, there was considerable discussion as to the salaries to be paid to the members of this commission. After much deliberation we finally fixed upon a salary of $10,000, with the idea that men of large caliber could be induced to serve—men of wide business experience competent to handle the big problems with which this Trade Commission must deal. When the Trade Commission bill was reported to the House it was in charge of the chairman of the subcommittee, a former distinguished Member of this body, now a Federal judge, Mr. Covington, of Maryland. In making his opening address he said:

It is a piece of constructive legislation for the benefit of the whole country, and it was drafted by a subcommittee of Democrats and Republicans, who cooperated in the broadest spirit to produce a measure which will meet the public expectations and necessities.

I do not desire at this time to comment upon the fact that on that commission there is not a Republican, although the law provided that not more than three of the commission should be members of one party. We could perhaps overlook the fact that the leading minority party is not represented if there had been selected for this commission men of such caliber as to have met the expectations of Congress and the committee that framed the legislation. Mr. Covington also said in the speech already quoted:

The highly efficient services of men of large capacity will be required, and the salaries of the members of the commission have been placed at a figure that will enable the President to secure that sort of men.

From the best information obtainable touching the qualifications of the men selected $2,500 would have been most generous compensation. I hope I am not doing the gentlemen an injustice.

In this connection I ask to have the Clerk read an editorial recently appearing in the Washington Post.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the editorial in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Washington Post, February 24, 1915.]

PERSONNEL OF THE NEW TRADE COMMISSION.

The salary of each member of the new Federal Trade Commission is to be $10,000 a year, and the term of each, after the commission is fully established, will be seven years.

This is a longer term than is granted to any officials of the Government, with the exception of judges.

The salary is larger than that paid to Senators or Representatives or judges of the circuit and district courts. The judges who will pass upon the findings of this commission receive $3,000 each less than members of the commission.

The builder of the Panama Canal, Col. George W. Goethals, receives only $10,000 a year.

The only officers of the Government receiving larger salaries are the President, Vice President, Speaker, justices of the Supreme Court, and certain ambassadors.

Congress thus manifested its appreciation of the great importance of the Federal Trade Commission and the necessity of obtaining the services of the ablest men in the country as members of the commission.

It is no reflection upon the caliber of the men nominated as members of the new commission to remark that they are not in the same class with justices of the circuit courts of the United States or with Col. Goethals or with scores of members of the Senate and House. They have not had the training and experience of jurists or business men of large affairs. Only one of them may be included in the list of first-class business men. Two of them have been filling subordinate places in the Government service. The other two are unknown and untried, bearing good reputations and all that, but without other qualifications than are possessed by millions of average Americans.

And yet this commission so constituted is to be placed in control of American commerce! It is to wield powers greater than those conferred upon any persons in the United States, with the exception of the President and the Supreme Court.

Can it be possible that the President exhausted the list of really strong, able men in this country, and was forced to make this feeble and unsatisfactory choice?

We can not believe that an appeal was made to the patriotism of men who, by reason of their great abilities and wide experience, should have been selected. The Trade Commission, if successful, will evolve into one of the most potent agencies of the Government, and no man is so conspicuous or so able that he would not be honoring himself by sharing in the task of establishing the new tribunal. Surely the President could have found—surely he can find—the right kind of men to insure the successful operation of this commission.

The Senate should reject the nominations sent in, making it plain that such action is not in disparagement of the personal or business standing of the men who have unfortunately accepted the nomination. Since Congress set a high standard for the character and composition of the new commission, the Senate should insist that the members composing it shall be men of the first rank.

During the reading of the above,

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks to the extent of completing the article, and I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

[Mr. PADGETT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For instruction of indigent blind children of the District of Columbia, in Maryland or some other State, under a contract to be entered into by the commissioners, fiscal year 1914, $87.50.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise for information. In the discussion attendant upon the question of building a municipal hospital it was charged that the reason for the crowding in a municipal hospital in the city was due to the fact that the appropriations for the care in private hospitals were not sufficient. Here we have an item providing for a reimbursement for indigent blind children at a private institution. I wish to inquire whether when the appropriations are not adequate for the care of indigent persons in private institutions there is a deficiency appropriation carried to provide for that service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are a number of such appropriations here. The deficiency arises from this situation: An appropriation was made under the Board of Charities for the instruction of indigent blind children. There is no institution in the District where such instructions can be given, and they have made a contract with an institution in Maryland. The number of children sent to that institution for the number of days made a charge in excess of the amount that was appropriated. They accept these children with the knowledge that there is no legal obligation to pay for them, in the hope, however, and in the expectation that Congress will make the payment, and Congress already has made the payment. My judgment is there is ample room in the city hospitals of the city for the care of all persons who should be taken care of by the Government. The Board of Charities has no authority to contract with any institution in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has it been the policy of Congress to curtail the appropriations for the care of indigents in these private institutions, as was claimed on the floor of the House the other day?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; Congress appropriates the amount the Board of Charities requests for that purpose almost invariably.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the claim was made that the reason for the crowded condition in our municipal institutions was because Congress failed to appropriate adequate funds to care for them in the private hospitals under the contract system.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman from New York will allow, these blind children are not in a hospital at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand; it is outside of the question of the particular item under consideration, but I am seeking information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are some criminals sick in the Washington Asylum, and they send them there as long as there is room to be found. I do not think this institution is in the shape it should be. I think it should be put in a much better condition, and I hope it will be by Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington Market Co. rentals: For amount due the United States from the District of Columbia for collections made on account of the franchise rental of the Washington Market Co., fiscal years 1879 to 1914, inclusive, there shall be transferred from the revenues of the District of Columbia to the United States the sum of $158,437.50, such sum being in full settlement of the amount due the United States for said market rentals under the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, December 2, 1914, and to be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The two dates there are not correct. The first date should be 1880, and the last date should be 1912. I wish to say to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], that for the last two years the matter has been already adjusted, and if he brings this up to 1914 instead of 1912, he will have a clash between those two sentences.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky suggested that these dates should be changed. I took the matter up with the Auditor for the District and from his statement I believe the date should not be changed. For the years 1913 and 1914 adjustments have already been made, but these dates cover the entire period of the controversy, and there is considerable question that if we change the dates instead of helping the Federal Treasury we will lose the sums adjusted for the two years. This will be considered as the determination of Congress upon the entire matter, and the adjustment heretofore made, the voluntary adjustment, will be upset. There is no intention to undo what already has been done, and this is to cover the entire period in controversy. I think it would be a mistake to change the dates, judging from the information in my possession.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there is ground for difference of opinion as to the propriety of this item and the other item which preceded it, charging the District of Columbia for payments made on her bonds and for collections made from rentals of the market company. It is contended by some people in the District that if we are to make these charges against the District there are certain offsets that should also be made and that it is not fair to make these charges without taking those offsets into consideration.

Now, I am one of those who believe that in the main, as a general proposition, the arrangement under which the District has been operating in its relations with the Federal Government in the past has been reasonable, fair, and equitable. I am not certain that it would be entirely fair and equitable to continue it indefinitely, and I hope that before long some way will be found to finally settle, to the satisfaction of all reasonable people, the question of how much the Government ought to pay toward the support of the District.

But I feel this way in regard to these items and in regard to the matter generally. The plan under which we have been operating is believed by many to be a most liberal one. Certainly it can not be claimed by anyone that it is not at least fair to the District. Under those circumstances I believe that the people of the District should not object to paying these items, inasmuch as those who are best acquainted with the situation believe that under the plan we have been operating under they are due. I believe the people of the District will get along better with Congress if, while insisting, as they do, that the half-and-half plan is an equitable one and should be maintained, they should be at the same time willing to bear their proper burdens under that plan. While I do not claim to be as well informed as some with regard to the absolute justice of the payment by the District of these items under the plan under which we have been operating, I am persuaded by those who are well acquainted with the matters and are desirous of being fair to the District that these sums ought to be paid. In that view of the case I think they ought to be paid cheerfully by the people of the District.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say for the benefit of those who may not have gone closely into the subject, that the Comptroller of the Treasury, who took these matters under advisement, has rendered a decision and made a finding strictly in accordance with the half-and-half plan. The amount that the United States Government has advanced to the District of Columbia on account of this interest was double the amount which the Comptroller of the Treasury now finds is due the United States from the District of Columbia. There was no sort of half-and-half arrangement, as the gentleman from Wyoming well knows, until the act of July 11, 1878. However, the act of June 20, 1874, is the act under which the 3.65 bonds were issued, and that act, as it relates to the District of Columbia and the United States, so broadly contemplated the participation of the United States in their payment that the Secretary of the Treasury held the act of July 11, 1878 to be retrospective as to the bonds and the interest, but to no other items of expense of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the claims adjusted and settled under section 4 of the river and harbor appropriation act approved June 25, 1910, and certified to Congress in House Document No. 1557, at the present session, $184.15.

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 18, page 13, insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Frank Vumbaca, Portland, Me., the sum of $419, to reimburse him for damage to his house, No. 469 Washington Avenue, Portland, Me., by concussion from blasts."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman want the point of order to be reserved?

Mr. HINDS. Yes; if you please.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Chairman, I have a statement that I would like to have the Clerk read.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

This amendment ought not to be subject to a point of order. Previous to 1910 there had been much complaint of damages done by reason of river and harbor improvements, and citizens and corporations had been compelled to prosecute claim bills in the House and Senate, and such bills were oftentimes never passed, and the denial of justice as between the Government and citizens amounted to a grievance. So that Congress took the matter up and passed a general law, so that the annual appropriation bills might attend to this matter through an adjustment by the Secretary of War. In order that these small claims might be attended to promptly, the amount so authorized should not exceed $500. This law may be found in volume 36 of the Statutes at Large, page 676. Hitherto the damages have been, as would be natural in river and harbor work, such as injury to vessels, the wrecking of piers, etc. The legislators of that day undoubtedly intended to foresee all probable cases of this sort. But it so happened that last year, in the pursuance of the continuing contract that the Government is completing in Portland Harbor, at a place where the channel approaches the shore, an unusual blast was put in, and the result was that a small cement house on the shore was injured to the extent of $419. It was a very unusual accident, and the legislators who framed the law did not foresee it. Under the bare letter of the law it may be that the relief that is sought may be out of order under the rules of this House, but under the spirit of the law it is preeminently in order, and I hope that the Appropriation Committee will not invoke any technicalities in this case, because the sufferer is a worthy laborer, who has invested his little savings in this house.

He brought his case to the attention of the War Department authorities on May 25, 1914, through a friend, Mr. F. R. Redlon, of 80 Union Street, Portland, Me., who has helped him in his undeniable hardship caused by the negligence of the Government. Mr. Vumbaca himself is an Italian who has a limited acquaintance with English and the usages of this Government. The War Department investigated the circumstance, and I have a copy of the findings of the local engineer, which is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
537 Congress Street, Portland, Me., October 12, 1914.

F. R. REDLON,
80 Union Street, Portland, Me.

DEAR SIR: I am to-day recommending to the department that the sum of $419 be secured for Frank Vumbaca in payment of his claim for damages to the house at East Deering.

Very respectfully,

W. E. CRAIGHILL,
Lieutenant Colonel, Corps of Engineers.

In pursuance of the findings of the local engineer, the Board of Estimates for this year, for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, has this item of estimate:

RELIEF OF FRANK VUMBACA.

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Frank Vumbaca, Portland, Me., the sum of $419, to reimburse him for damage to his house, No. 469 Washington Avenue, Portland, Me., by concussion from blasts (submitted), $419

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] make his point of order against this amendment? Does the gentleman from Maine [Mr HINDS] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HINDS. No; I have made my statement. I think it is conclusive.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have no discretion in the matter. It is a claim. We have no jurisdiction under the rules. It is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask permission to revise and extend my remarks and to print generally?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS] asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks, and also to print. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 20427. An act to authorize the sale of certain land in Alabama to Walter Dean; and

H. R. 20977. An act to provide for the establishment of a life-saving station in the vicinity of Duxbury Reef, Cal.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 21328. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Capitol Building: For work at the Capitol and general repairs thereof, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915, $5,000.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 5, line 9, which we have passed. I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] asks unanimous consent to return to page 5, line 9, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this a committee amendment for the building at Southbridge?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GILLETT: On page 5, after line 9, insert "Public building, Southbridge, Mass., post office: For site and commencement within the present limit of cost, $18,000."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, that was estimated for and would have gone in if it had not been overlooked.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the Alaskan Daily Empire, Juneau, Alaska, for printing and binding of the house journal of the first session of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, $771.05.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE. Is the Congress expected to make appropriations regularly for printing the proceedings or the journals of the Alaskan Legislature?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was no limit of cost. There was an appropriation for printing the proceedings of the session of the legislature, and it was insufficient. The work has been done, and this amount of money is still due for the printing of the journals of the two houses.

Mr. MOORE. Will the American Congress be expected to pay for this sort of work right along, or is this exceptional?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Congress pays all the expenses up there. They have no revenues.

Mr. MOORE. It is a part of our business, then, to look after the Legislature of Alaska, and pay the expenses of its legislative sessions and the printing of its publications?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have no revenues of any kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 21 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to page 21 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FITZGERALD: Page 21, after line 17, insert: "For painting interior and woodwork of rooms and corridors of the House Office Building, $25,983."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, is it intended to repaint the walls on the fifth floor?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is intended to paint the rooms of Members.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope, so far as the room I occupy is concerned, it will not be repainted. I prefer the white on the wall of room No. 502.

Mr. MANN. The fifth floor is not covered by this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; this is to paint the rooms that have not been painted in the original building.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has any estimate been made for painting the window sills on the outside? I notice that the woodwork needs painting. Is that provided for in the regular work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That comes out of the maintenance item. This work is proposed to be done during the long recess—to paint the interior of the building. It is convenient to do it while the Members are away. I find that it did include painting the fifth floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not see any need of painting the fifth floor.

Mr. MANN. When Mr. Woods was before our commission he said that it did not include the fifth floor.

Mr. BARTLETT. The corridors.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think the corridors need it, but I do not object to that; but I do not want the walls of my room retinted, because they are in perfect order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Doubtless we can make an arrangement that no work shall be done in the gentleman's room.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, some years ago we passed a resolution looking to a change in the construction of this Hall. It has never been carried out because of the absence of time on account of extra sessions. Does the gentleman know whether anything is contemplated to be done during the months that we are to be away?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know anything more about it than does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who is a member of the commission in charge of that work.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason for my inquiry was to call attention again seriously to that situation, because now is an opportunity to carry out the expressed will of the House, and it seems to me that we ought not to overlook it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The matter has not been suggested to me since the last short session of Congress, when we discussed it just before adjournment. If anything is proposed to be done, I do not know.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is intended to be covered by this item of $29,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Originally the House Office Building walls were not painted. They were finished in plaster, and a peculiar sand was found down the Potomac River. The finish was a rough, scratch finish, but this sand gave it a peculiar tint.

Mr. GOULDEN. Then this is intended simply to paint the walls and the woodwork?

Mr. FITZGERALD. A great many of the rooms are now dirty, and it is necessary to paint them. The walls will be rubbed smooth and painted.

Mr. GOULDEN. It is simply intended to paint the walls and the woodwork, is it—all of it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the Halls and the Rotunda.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to add to the amendment the words:

To continue available during the year 1916.

Some of the work will go beyond the 30th of June.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be modified as suggested by the gentleman from New York.

There was no objection.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

1914, $250,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 11, on page 27, insert:
"1915, $400,000."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the department submitted an estimate of $400,000 as a deficiency on star routes for the fiscal year 1915. At the hearings the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General stated:

I do not think we will need that. We will wipe that out.

Mr. Wood then said he thought they might need a small amount, but did not like to ask for anything now; thought they might ask for some later.

I desire to read from a letter which I received from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General on January 15, indicating the manner in which they are attempting to wipe out, as the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General puts it, these deficiencies in star-route service. This letter from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General was in answer to a letter I had written him with regard to a route for a small community in my State. His letter was in part as follows:

Referring to your inquiry of the 12th instant as to the status of the proposed route from Jireh, Wyo., I beg to state that this case has been investigated and is held in the department awaiting a more favorable condition of the national finances.

The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General then goes on to say that it is apparently advisable to withhold for a time all applications for additional postal facilities that involve increased expenditures. He further says:

I think you will agree with me that much can be accomplished in this line by deferring the establishment of additional routes.

Then there is this further observation:

The residents of the community to be served by the route in question have a full understanding of the conditions confronting the Government, and will doubtless cooperate with the department in an effort to contribute a share toward meeting the situation now at hand.

And yet we were told by the gentleman from Missouri a day or two ago that the country was prosperous and everything was lovely. Gentlemen on the other side have assured us that, while the revenues are not as large as they might be, they were sufficient to care for the needs of the people.

But the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General takes the position that the people in the rural districts are sufficiently well acquainted with the unfortunate condition of our finances that they will be overjoyed to forego the privilege of receiving mail once a week, twice a week, three times a week, in order that by so doing they may help the administration along in these times of deficient revenue.

Mr. Chairman, it is true that the Treasury is now in a deplorable condition. It is true that all of the efforts put forth by the gentlemen on the other side to increase the revenue, including the burdening of the people with war taxes in time of peace, have failed to produce revenue sufficient to meet the current expenses of the Government. But is it a fact that we have reached a time when we can no longer furnish people in the rural districts mail facilities? Is the administration prepared to adhere to and defend that letter of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General? There are people in the State that I have the honor to represent that live 10, 20, 40 miles from the nearest post office having a regular mail supply and have no mail facilities whatever.

I do not desire to criticize the officials of the Post Office Department. I think they are doing their very best under the circumstances and conditions.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman understand that it is the function of the Government to follow men who are 30 and 40 miles away from civilization to deliver mail to them?

Mr. MONDELL. Even so, I do. That has been understood to be one of the functions of this Government from its foundation. It has always done so. Right now we are paying $10 per capita per annum to carry the mail to Americans who have had the hardihood and the courage to go into Alaska, in the frozen North. We have been carrying mail on star routes to remote settlements in the States and Territories since we became a nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss this suggestion made by my good friend from Ohio [Mr. GORDON]: Is it the duty of the Government to furnish men on the frontier mail facilities? I am amazed that any Member of the American Congress should ask a question like that. Why, we are spending the money of the Government to furnish people in cities three, four, and five deliveries a day. We are appropriating money for the purpose of putting cold storage in certain city post offices in order that the people of the city may receive country products and have them kept in good condition.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT. That does not cost the Government anything, does it, as it much more than pays the expenses?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Massachusetts, with whom I agree in most things, falls into the error that so many men have fallen into of thinking that because the revenues of the post offices in the cities exceed the expenditures and in the country the contrary is true, that therefore we are making money in the cities and spending it in the country. If it was not for the mail sent from the city to the country, if it was not for the business that the cities receive from the country, if it was not for this constant interchange of mails between the city and the country, there would be no profit in the handling of the mail.

Mr. GILLETT. Does not the gentleman think there would be much more profit if we did not send anything to Alaska or receive anything from Alaska?

Mr. MONDELL. That might be possible so far as Alaska is concerned, but that is an extreme case, and I am sure that my friend from Massachusetts would not have an American citizen who has had the courage to go to Alaska to open up that country, to search out and develop its resources, deprived of the privilege of occasionally receiving his mail. All our people are asking in most of these cases is a mail once a week or twice a week or three times a week at the most. And certainly the Government can well afford to furnish it to them, and we have furnished it, I will say, to my friend under Republican administrations always. I have never had any very serious difficulty in securing the establishment of star routes under Republican administrations, and we fairly well made the department pay. I want to say again that I am not especially blaming the gentlemen of the department. They have been considerate and attentive to the matters that I have laid before them. They have no doubt done quite as much as they believed they were justified in doing, but some one higher than these men has given them to understand evidently that it is the purpose of the Government to save money in these disastrous Democratic times by depriving the American citizens of mail facilities.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Does not the gentleman think that the citizens of Wyoming could be persuaded for a couple of years to be satisfied with a psychological distribution of mail and not an actual distribution at all?

Mr. MONDELL. That is all some of them are getting now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is to appropriate $400,000 to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for inland transportation by star routes for the current fiscal year. Such an estimate was transmitted by the Post Office Department, but when inquiry was made regarding the estimate the department informed the committee that it did not require the money; that probably some small appropriation would be needed to meet the obligations of the department, and the amount could not be determined at this time, and if any such sum is required a request will be made at a later date. For the fiscal year 1914 the appropriations for inland transportation by star routes were $7,105,000. Congress subsequently appropriated in a deficiency bill $800,000 and in the pending bill $250,000 additional, so that for the inland transportation of the mails by star-route service the total appropriations are $8,155,000. For the current fiscal year the appropriations are $8,675,000, $500,000 in excess of all of the moneys that will be required to meet the demands of the service for the fiscal year 1914, closed.

The Post Office bill as it passed the House for this service carried $9,000,000, the amount estimated by the department as required for the service for 1916. If the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming were adopted, Congress would then appropriate for this service for the current fiscal year as much as the department estimates would be required for the next fiscal year and as much as the House proposes shall be appropriated for that purpose. Congress has responded to the requests of the department with appropriations to meet the requirements of the service. It has not appropriated and it should not appropriate $400,000 to meet obligations of a service which the department says it will not require, and if it does require anything it will be a very small amount.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that the amount was estimated?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. And the department is endeavoring to avoid the deficiency by refusing the service, as indicated in this letter?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the amount was estimated, and after it was submitted what happened frequently happens. The department is able to get information that its fears as to whether a certain appropriation would be sufficient were somewhat exaggerated. Whatever sum is needed to meet the obligations of the service, when they can be ascertained, I have no doubt will be granted by Congress. It would be very unfortunate to initiate at this time, of all others, the policy of appropriating money for some particular service of the Government that those conducting the service do not believe is required for the service. My experience is that they ask not only sufficient, but more than enough, and it would be very unfortunate if this House were to adopt the habit of insisting upon the department expending in the service more than it believes is legitimately required for it. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. If the deficiency occurs in this appropriation, Congress will meet it in ample time and pay the obligations that may be incurred.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, when on yesterday the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] read a letter from Third Assistant Postmaster General Dockery in answer to some remarks made by me in general debate touching Government finances, it seemed to me a rather strange proceeding. It struck me that for an officer of the executive branch of the Government to thus engage indirectly in debate of current political issues with Members on the floor of the House was of doubtful propriety and might tend to embarrass the necessary intercourse between Members and the executive departments, restrict the freedom of debate, and be in derogation of the privileges of the House. The doctrine that the three branches of Government, the legislative, executive, and judicial, should be kept separate from one another became one of the cardinal principles of political science contemporaneously with the foundation of our Government. This theory of the separation of powers is the basis of our Constitution.

The accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judicial, in the same hands, whether of a few or many, and whether hereditary, self-appointed, or elective, may be justly pronounced the very definition of tyranny—

Says the Federalist.

Sir William Blackstone in his Commentaries on the Laws of England (1765) wrote:

In all tyrannical governments the supreme majesty or the right both of making and enforcing the laws, is vested in the same men or one and the same body of men; and when these two powers are united together there is no public liberty.

To safeguard this separation of powers, no doubt, it was provided in the Constitution that "No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he is elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States which shall have been created or the emoluments of which shall have been increased during such time," and further that "No person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office." Pursuant to the Constitution the House has made rules defining as questions of the highest privilege those relating to its dignity and the integrity of its proceedings. Heads of departments are admitted to the floor of the House, and some assistants are entitled to admission, as are ex-Members. If the practice should grow up of such officials engaging in debate indirectly by having their arguments read on the floor by Members, it seems to me it would lead us into difficulties.

You can imagine how embarrassing it would be for Members of Congress to do business with the various departments if they had indirectly conducted a hot political debate with the incumbents of those executive offices. I might go to the department to get a postal savings bank established or a rural route established or something of that kind and meet a gentleman who had, through a Member of Congress, been in a hot debate with me upon a political question, and so therefore I say it comes pretty near invading the privileges of the House. We all know that the President, in a limited sense, is vested with a part of the legislative power, for acts must have his approval unless passed by a two-thirds vote, and he has the initiative by means of messages, but this does not justify the transformation of Congress into a mere registry office of the will of the President. That this comes mighty near being the case now can be seen from the following review of this Congress from the Washington Times:

At noon Thursday the Sixty-third Congress will pass into history. At the same time will end the first half of the Wilson administration.

* * * * * * *

Overwhelmingly Democratic in the House and Democratic by a narrow margin in the Senate, with a Democratic Chief Executive, the legislation of the Congress has been dominated by the Democrats. In fact, most of it has beeen dictated by the President. To a remarkable extent the Democratic Members at both ends of the Capitol have been under the thumb of the White House.

PRESIDENT NOT HESITANT.

The President has been consulted at every turn by the Democratic leaders, and he has not hesitated to tell them what he wanted and what he did not want.

And they have acquieseed. Sometimes there have been mutterings in the corridors and cloakrooms, but only a small group have actually revolted.

The President began his administration by undertaking the innovation of going to the Capitol in person and reading his messages. He undertook another innovation by going to the Capitol, visiting the President's room, and calling Senators in for conference.

Cabinet members have gone to the Capitol freely and have worked for or against legislation. In a general way the system of legislation has been this: Bills have been shaped by the administration, have been presented in Congress by administration supporters, have been sent to the Democratic caucus, the caucus has bound Members to their support, and they have been driven through, to the unavailing protests of the minority.

Not since the palmiest days of Aldrich and Cannon have the individual Members of Congress had so little to say about important bills. The White House, plus the party caucus, has shaped legislation.

In the nature of things there can not in practice be as complete a separation of powers between the executive and legislative as between them and the judicial. Executive departments, either by direction of the President or on their own motion, communicate with either House of Congress, suggest enactments or repeals, and upon request give recommendations on specific bills aifecting matters within their jurisdiction; on the other hand, either House, or committee thereof, request information on matters within the knowledge of the different departments, and individual Members act as agents or deputies for constituents in administrative matters before them; but this does not change the general doctrine nor justify a radical departure from it. It is reported in the press that the President favors giving members of the Cabinet seats in the House of Representatives, as is done in England and other European countries, where the so-called Cabinet system is in vogue. The result, at least as far as the House of Commons is concerned, has been to transfer to it a large share of executive power. This union of executive and legislative power in the House of Commons has made it the dominant factor in the Government. But let us not suppose that the result of such action here would be the same as the adoption of the Cabinet system elsewhere. The Cabinet here is not elected but appointed, and the power of the Presidency is so great that if such a change were made the result could only be a transference of the legislative power from the men elected by the people to men who would be responsible to the appointing power alone. It would be, I fear, a substitution of autocracy for representative government. The fact that the autocrat would be elected for quadrennial periods would make no difference. Liberty would be gone and despotism substituted in its place.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent I may be permitted to continue for 10 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will have to object to that. I gave notice earlier in the day that I would object to any extraneous discussion.

Mr. STEENERSON. This is no extraneous discussion. I am discussing postal matters, the subject to which the paragraph under consideration relates.

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman have the 10 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does anybody want to reply to the gentleman? If the gentleman is going to conduct the entire debate by himself I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. When I cast my lure upon the waters of political debate I was ambitious for big game. I was hoping that I would get a rise out of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the leader on that side, because he was the one that first stated that the cause of a prospective deficit in the postal receipts was due to the falling off of the foreign mails. I pointed out that the total postage collected on foreign mail only amounted to $8,000,000 and the decrease was less than $1,000,000, so that this could not possibly account for a deficit of $14,000,000. But the challenge was taken up by my distinguished and able friend from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD], who is usually well informed on postal matters, and who is now reenforced by the Third Assistant Postmaster General. No doubt the administration has noticed that of late the spokesmen of the majority upon the floor have been conspicuously silent, and so they have come to the rescue. That is as it should be, for as the Chief Executive and his appointees are doing the work they ought also to defend it. It is especially my statement that "whenever the shadow of free trade has come upon the country under Democratic administration the postal receipts have fallen off," on which he takes issue. To refute this he publishes a statement of postal deficits and surpluses for the last 5 or 10 years.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman permit? I do not want to interrupt the gentleman at all.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will yield for a question.

Mr. LLOYD. You said five years; that there had been the surplus for five years.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will correct that. I should say two years. The answer I make to that is that a postal surplus is no indication of prosperity in the land. The prosperity that I refer to is indicated by total postal receipts, by the amount of postage stamps that the people use in the transaction of their business, not the surplus. The surplus indicates good administration, the saving of money; economy. A postal deficit indicates poor administration, or too low rates.

The gentleman submitted tables of postal deficits and surpluses for a series of years, and has a great deal to say on that subject. It seems to me that discussion is irrelevant to the precise point in dispute. However, I think the gentleman's presentation of that subject is quite misleading and requires some attention. His table shows a deficit for 1909 of $17,000,000; for 1910, $5,000,000; for 1911, a surplus of $219,000; and for 1912, a deficit of $1,785,000; and for 1913, a surplus of $4,510,000; and for 1914, a surplus of $4,376,000. Contrary to his own table, he claims that prior to 1913 the last annual surplus was in 1883. However, we are familiar with the contention made when this administration came into power, that the announced surplus of Postmaster General Hitchcock in 1911 of $219,000 was not real, because it was based upon the audited receipts and audited expenditures, and some of the expenditures were delayed in auditing until the fiscal year was passed, which it was claimed would have made a difference, so as to show a deficit of $700,000.

The presentation of this subject in the last two annual reports of the department is upon its face influenced by partisan motives and unfair to the former administration, but even conceding everything that is claimed—that is to say, that there was a deficit for the fiscal years 1910, 1911, and 1912, the fact remains that there was a surplus in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, of $4,510,659. The present administration came into power on the 4th of March, 1913, so that for eight months and three days of that fiscal year it was under a Republican administration, and this time must be credited. Not only did we inaugurate the new service of parcel post, but we accumulated two-thirds, or more than $3,000,000 of the surplus so much boasted about for the fiscal year 1913. For the last fiscal year, 1914, the surplus diminished by about $200,000, and we are now told that the prospect is for a very large deficit. It seems to me, therefore, that the record of Postmaster General Hitchcock and the Taft administration, which came into power with a deficit of more than $17,000,000, and left it with a surplus of more than $3,000,000 is entitled to a good deal of credit, and it is a record which I doubt the present incumbent will be able to equal.

According to department statistics just published, the average postage collected on parcels is 5.01 cents and the average weight per parcel is a pound and an ounce. The cost of handling and transporting can hardly be less than for second-class matter, which the department claims to be from 8 to 9 cents per pound, and which the Hughes commission found to be 6 cents per pound, without counting certain overhead charges. On the one theory there would be a loss of about 3 cents a pound and on the other a loss of 1 cent a pound, and on either theory the loss would be sufficient to account for the whole anticipated deficit. So much for postal deficits and surpluses.

And now as to postal receipts, which I said was an index to the prosperity of the country. This, however, must be understood with this limitation, that the laws in regard to postage and mailable matter must remain the same for the periods compared. The gentleman's figures show that the percentage of increase in postal receipts for the last 10 years average about 7 per cent, running as high as 10 per cent in 1910, and as low as 3 per cent in 1912, but as these receipts throw a good deal of light on the questions here in dispute, I have prepared a table where the figures are taken from page 256 of the statistical abstract for 1913, covering the period from 1879 to 1914, both inclusive, in which I have also included the percentage of increase or decrease, as the case may be, and marked the quadrennial periods to shows whether they were Republican or Democratic, and this table I will insert here:

It will be noticed that the increase for the first four years was very large, running from 18 per cent to 8 per cent, and then from 1883 to 1884 there was a decrease of 4 per cent, and from 1884 to 1885 a decrease of nearly 2 per cent, followed by an increase of 3 per cent. The first year of a decrease was under a Republican administration, and the second was in part under a Republican and in part under the first Cleveland administration, but it is well known that the first Cleveland administration did not control Congress, and that the tariff was not changed, and, therefore, we must seek for other causes, and the explanation is readily found, for on March 3, 1883, Congress reduced letter postage from 3 to 2 cents for half an ounce, and in 1885 reduced letter postage to 2 cents for 1 ounce. The first effect of this reduction of postage was a marked reduction in total receipts, but as soon as the public learned of the cheapened service they availed themselves of it to a greater extent, and as this class of mail brings in about the only profit there is in the service it greatly grew in volume and the receipts again began to increase. This continued from 1885 down to 1893, when the second Cleveland administration came into power, and the shadow of free trade in the shape of the Wilson bill was upon the country. Without any change in postage rates, of any kind, we find that the total receipts from 1893 to 1894, instead of increasing, decreased 2 per cent, and the following three years the increase was comparatively small. That administration was succeeded in 1897 by the McKinley administration, and the receipts at once increased, as the table shows, from 2 per cent to 7 per cent, and has continued to increase up to the present time, running some years as low as 3 per cent and others as high as 10 per cent, and in the fiscal year 1913 is was 8 per cent, and practically the same in 1914.

But it is now contended on the part of Gen. Dockery that an increase of 8 per cent in the postal receipts for the fiscal years 1913 and 1914 constitutes a refutation of my contention. This would, of course, be well founded if the postage rates and the class of matter admitted to the mails had remained the same. But obviously where new articles not formerly mailable are admitted to the mails it will swell the volume of mail as well as the receipts for postage. This will continue for a time, until the limit is reached in the volume of traffic that the new rate will move, when receipts will again become constant or only reflect the general business growth and prosperity. The effect of parcel-post changes, to cause an abnormal rate of increase, naturally reached a maximum about the end of the first half of 1914, and this would explain why receipts then ceased to grow or grew only in harmony with the general growth of business, or perhaps again declined. This is a more reasonable explanation of the alleged falling off in the rate of increase in receipts in recent months than the war theory. To overlook this fact and to claim that the increase in postage receipts for the last two years indicates a normal growth of postal business and, impliedly, business prosperity in the country, shows that partisanship can blind the reason and lead even a well-intentioned person to a wrong conclusion.

General parcel-post service was inaugurated on January 1, 1913, and the report for that year shows a phenomenal increase in this business of carrying packages, and a probable revenue exceeding $4,000,000, due entirely to that cause. During the fiscal year 1914 the limit of weight of parcel post was first enlarged from 11 to 20 pounds, which, of course, greatly increased the volume of mail as well as the receipts, and then the limit was raised to 50 pounds in the first and second zones, which necessarily was followed by additional business and additional receipts. The Postmaster General's report for the fiscal year 1914 says:

> There is every reason to believe that the Postal Service is now handling more than 800,000,000 parcels annually. Statistics covering the first 15 days of October, 1914, show a material increase over the number of parcels handled in April of this year, notwithstanding the depressing effect of the European war. It is believed by the original advocates of a parcel post, as well as by the department, that possibly 300,000,000 parcels would be handled during the first year. The growth of the service has exceeded all expectations and is highly gratifying.

In speaking of increased receipts, the report further says:

> A portion of the increase was due also to the normal growth of the service, though the major part no doubt is the result of increases of weight limits and reductions of rates which became effective August 15, 1913, and January 1, 1914.

It will thus be seen that the much-boasted increase in postal receipts of 8 per cent during the last two fiscal years must be accounted for by the new service, and that the alleged falling off during the current fiscal year must in chief part be ascribed to the natural effect of the Democratic administration, and the business and industrial depression resulting therefrom.

So, you see, the grandiloquent closing of the gentleman's letter which was read yesterday, that this awful catastrophe, this war, was the cause of this alleged postal deficit, will not hold good. The cause, I submit, is the general depression of business throughout the country, and even if they had no war there would be this falling off in postal receipts. It is a strange thing to me that in the same CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the number for yesterday, is a speech of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], the author of the celebrated income-tax law, and a leading Democrat, in which in the closing paragraph he points out that never in the history of the United States has there been such an opportunity for industry and enterprise as to-day. He says that the European countries are demanding war materials and manufactured goods of all kinds, and if we only bestir ourselves and respond to that demand prosperity will crown our efforts. He says:

The war not only greatly augments their opportunities, but offers to the American people engaged in every important line of finance, industry, and commerce the most unlimited possibilities offered any country in all history. Already many lines of business have commenced their onward march. The United States is the great storehouse from which both the warring and the peace countries must draw an immense portion of manufactures, foodstuffs, and raw materials. To meet these unlimited requirements will tax the ability, energy, and enterprise of the American people. I have the utmost faith that the great body of our business men will throw off any lethargy they have acquired under the reign of special privilege and do their part toward making this country the center of both the finance and the commerce of the world.

Does not that seem absurd alongside of the letter of the Third Assistant Postmaster General, which says this war has caused such an awful depression? It is getting to be quite the vogue now among Democratic orators to refer in graphic and eloquent terms to this awful calamity of war and our good fortune in escaping therefrom. This is all well and good in its proper place and for the proper purpose, but when it is employed to blind the reason in order to cover up political shortcomings or gain a partisan advantage this play upon the sacred and tender chords of human sympathy falls little short of sacrilege.

Now, that is about the kind of motive that is behind these lamentations. When the American people come to consider these things calmly, they will render a just judgment, and it will be against you and your policies. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the sisters of Sereno E. Payne, late a Representative from the State of New York, $7,500.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out that paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "That Congress disapproves and abandons the practice of granting gratuities to the families of deceased Members."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 28, by striking out lines 23 and 24 and inserting: "Congress disapproves and abandons the practice of appropriating gratuities for the families of deceased Members."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. The paragraph itself is subject to a point of order, Mr. Chairman, which I did not make.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is not a germane amendment, Mr. Chairman. To a provision of a bill purporting to appropriate money for which there is no statutory authorization a provision announcing or declaring a policy of Congress is not germane. This is not even a legislative provision. It is just a declaration of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York reserve a point of order or make one?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee state his point of order?

Mr. AUSTIN. It is that this amendment, offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], is not germane to the item under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. It seeks to substitute a general provision for a specific provision, and that is contrary to the rules.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 28, by striking out lines 23 and 24.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I did not make a point of order upon this paragraph, but I do this for the purpose of bringing the matter to the attention of the House and to state my opinions upon it.

It is, of course, extremely disagreeable to make such a motion or to try to deprive the family of any deceased Member of the appropriation that is generally made, but I think myself the practice is a vicious one and ought to be terminated, and it comes to me with peculiar force just now, because there is an appropriation in another bill, inserted in the Senate, in which we are asked to concur, to appropriate for the family of a deceased member of the Supreme Court. I have selected this case as a proper time to terminate the custom, because every Member in this House, and nobody more than myself, had the utmost respect and affectionate regard for Mr. PAYNE. If there is anyone whose memory I will be glad to honor and whose family I would be glad to contribute for, it is he, with whom I served for many years and never had a word of disagreement.

But I feel ashamed when a request comes to the House to appropriate money for the family of Mr. Justice Lurton, for example, now pending, or to appropriate for the family of a Cabinet officer, or any other deceased member of the civil service. I would feel ashamed to appropriate for ourselves, Members of the House, and then refuse to appropriate for anyone else. They all have exactly the same right and the same claim that we have. It is a pure gratuity in every case. There is no warrant of law for it at all, and I do not like to see us liberal and generous and free with the public money for ourselves and then adopt a different rule for everyone else, or to pick out favorites and grant a few and refuse the great majority, who need it quite as much.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman proposes to offer the same motion on the next paragraph?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman any objection to considering the two together?

Mr. GILLETT. If this one does not carry, I will not offer it on the next one.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the next paragraph may be read, with the right of the gentleman to move to strike out both paragraphs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That they both be considered together.

Mr. GILLETT. I am perfectly willing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the next paragraph be read, and that the two paragraphs be considered together. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the widow of Edwin A. Merritt, jr., late a Representative from the State of New York, $7,500.

Mr. GILLETT. Now I move to strike out that item, also.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 29, by striking out lines 1 and 2.

Mr. GILLETT. I see no reason why we should appropriate for the families of Members of the House which does not apply with equal force to every other public servant. I do not see why we should appropriate for ourselves and then decline to appropriate for the families of the justices of the Supreme Court. I do not see why we should appropriate for ourselves and refuse to appropriate for any $1,200 clerk, whose family needs the annual income more, probably, than the wife or family of a Member of this House, and who has exactly as much right to it under the law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman might ask unanimous consent to add to his amendment the words "Provided, That hereafter it shall be the policy of Congress not to make these appropriations to the families of deceased Members."

Mr. GILLETT. I am perfectly willing to leave these names in the bill and then declare our policy hereafter; but I made this suggestion here because nobody could attribute to me any personal or partisan motive. There was nobody for whom I felt more affection and respect than for Mr. Payne, and therefore I was glad to take the opportunity presented by this case, where nobody could suppose that any Member of the House did it from dislike or disrespect. I think we have drifted into a bad practice, which subjects us to the charge of selfishness and favoritism, and that we ought to take this opportunity to show that we will not follow the custom any longer.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] will not be agreed to. The gentleman likens this to a case of appropriating for the widow of one of the Supreme Court Justices. The case is quite different. Justices of the Supreme Court are appointed for life. They draw their pay for life. Members of Congress do not. The gentleman from Massachusetts can have no personal feeling on this subject; but, on the other hand, the gentleman from Massachusetts can have no personal appreciation of what this does, because he has no one dependent upon him.

I have served my district and the country in this House for a good many years, certainly not to my financial benefit; and during that time it has been a comfort to me to know that if I should pass away while a Member of this House, leaving no considerable competence and probably leaving any business affairs that I have not in very good shape—it has been a comfort to me to know that my widow would at least, under the practice of Congress, receive a year's salary. The gentleman from Massachusetts can not have that feeling, because he has not that relationship. I think it is fair for us to pay this insurance, and I hope that the practice will not cease. In many cases we do provide; in the Army and Navy, six months' salary for people who die in the service. The Navy and Army appropriation bills always carry items for that purpose. No one yet has moved to strike any of them out. I hope the practice will continue. I believe that it makes Members of the House better qualified to perform their legislative work while they are here, so that they will not be worrying about their widows if they die in the performance of their duty. [Applause.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of this House, and especially that of the gentleman from Massachusetts, to the case of one of my predecessors. I served as his private secretary. He was a Member of this House for 10 years. One day by mistake, in a drug store, he took a glass of poison and died the next day. He had a $20 bill in his pocket and a $2,500 mortgage on his home, and left a wife and six children.

Congress voted the widow his salary, $5,000, which enabled her to discharge the mortgage upon the home and provide for the little children. There is not a decent citizen in the Republic who will criticize any Member in this House for voting these appropriations. I would hate, Mr. Chairman, to represent a constituency that expected me to cast a vote against such a meritorious proposition as this. I venture the assertion that 99 per cent of the appropriations made in this way have gone to widows and children who were in actual need of the appropriation. A man who serves in this House, with an election every two years, and who conducts himself as he should in Washington City, and provides for his family, practically serves the Government of the United States for a living. When he closes his career here, if he has no outside business, he leaves his family practically nothing from his salary as a Member of Congress.

Last summer when my life was in the balance I had nothing except my salary, and I thought many times of what would come to my wife from my colleagues in this House if I should pass away. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I see no reason why the representatives of a Member of Congress, with or without a statute, should receive $7,500 when the Congressman dies. I know this is a most unpopular thing to say in this House. I know that in the presence of death certain sympathies are always aroused and sorrow and superstition surround it, and it is most unpopular not to be charitable toward those who are left after one of our colleagues passes away. I know the tender associations that surround the relationship of the membership of this House and the families of every one of us. But there is no more reason why a Member of Congress should convert this Government into a life insurance company for Members without a premium than there is that a man who works in the factory or on the farm should receive a pension of $7,500.

Now, it does appeal to a Member of Congress to feel that if he dies his family will receive $7,500, a very nice life insurance policy.

In the life of this Republic this practice is of recent origin. It has not been long that it has been going on, and it shows the wickedness of precedent. The first rule was that when a Member died his wife or family dependent upon him should receive the balance of his salary, providing it does not exceed the balance due for the fiscal year in which he died.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. For a question.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Is it not the policy all over the country at the present time to have employers' liability insurance which costs the employee nothing?

Mr. SISSON. That has absolutely nothing to do with this question. I decline to yield any further because I have only five minutes. I can do what I please with my own, because it is mine, and if the corporation sees fit to give it away it is all right. But every dollar in the Treasury ought to be a sacred fund. The trouble is it is not sacred; we lay violent hands on it when it comes to these matters which may benefit us. Let me say to you now that when you go before the country and say that we are willing to pay to our own Members $7,500, every man, from the rural carrier up, every man in the Government employ should receive it; and if every man receives it, why in God's name do you not pay $7,500 to the family of every man who dies?

The difference is that we are tax consumers. I know I am talking to an unsympathetic audience, and I know I am talking to men who have wives and children at home. If I were to consult my selfish interest, I might yield to the serpent and say, yes, I would take away from the people $7,500, and say I would be in favor of changing the rule, and that rule was that you would pay the man's family—and that has not always been the rule—the balance of his year's salary.

One example of where they paid a man's family $7,500 caused this evil to grow up, and that is that when a man dies, irrespective of the condition of his family, irrespective of the condition of his finances, whether he is worth millions or is a pauper, his family gets $7,500. My action may be called what you please, and they may criticize me in the press, but I would rather take my pro rata share, or twice my pro rata share, out of my own pocket and pay it to these people than to lay hands on the Treasury of the United States and pay $7,500 to the families of deceased Members. Unfortunately this is not, as many Members have said, of very ancient origin. It did not begin many years ago. There are men serving now in Congress who recollect when this precedent was first set. The exact date of it I do not know, but it is a recent thing, and Congress ought not to pay this sum.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For allowance to A. S. Kreider, contestee, for expenses incurred by him in the contested-election case, audited and recommended by the Committee on Elections No. 1, $2,000.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, insert between lines 6 and 7 the following:

"For reviser of the United States Statutes for the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, authorized by resolution of the House, agreed to July 3, 1914, from March 4, 1915, to June 30, 1916, both inclusive, at the rate of $4,000 per annum, $5,300.10."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph, or I will make it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes. Will the gentleman from Illinois be kind enough to intimate on what proposition he makes the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I am ready to make the point of order and ready to discuss it.

Mr. WATKINS. I would be very glad if the gentleman would reserve it.

Mr. MANN. I will accommodate the gentleman either way.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would much prefer that the gentleman from Illinois reserve the point of order, but I wanted to save time in the argument of it, and thought I would like to know the grounds of it. If the gentleman does not see proper, however, to give us the reasons for his point, I will state that the amendment simply provides for the salary of the reviser of the statutes, which place was created by House resolution 555 last year. The reviser is now a regular employee, an agent of the House of Representatives, under this statutory law, which was enacted by the House last year. Being an employee of the House, made such under the law, there can be no doubt at all about the propriety of this House and the propriety of the Committee on Appropriations providing an appropriation for his salary. If you look at the very next items in the bill, just below the place where this amendment is offered, seriatim, one after another, all of the same kind, all positions, there is provision for the payment of salaries. There is hardly a bill of this kind that is presented but has provision made for the payment of salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana have the resolution to which he refers?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes. I will hand it to the Chair. The first section of the resolution establishes a permanent position and the second section of the resolution provides for the payment of the amount out of the contingent fund until it is otherwise provided. We want to otherwise provide for the payment now, because the contingent fund of the House is not adequate for the purpose of carrying this amount.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman through?

Mr. WATKINS. No; I want to give some precedents here.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is arguing the point of order. Perhaps I had better make the point of order and make my argument. I make the point of order. The gentleman is correct in stating that the House, on a report from the Committee on Accounts, did pass a resolution for the employment of this person, and that that is a sufficient authority under the practice of the House for including the item in an appropriation bill. That is correct. This item might properly have been offered, and I think it was offered, on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill providing for expenses for the next fiscal year. The bill under consideration is to supply deficiencies for this fiscal year, and an item inserting an appropriation for the next fiscal year is not in order. If the gentleman's contention is correct, the whole legislative bill, carrying appropriations for the next fiscal year, could be offered as an amendment to this bill. There may be items in this bill that are subject to the same point of order, and doubtless there are, but that has nothing to do with this question. But it is not in order on a bill supplying deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years to offer an amendment for an appropriation for the next fiscal year which belongs in the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the amendment were to continue the employment up to June 30, 1915, does the gentleman think it would be in order?

Mr. MANN. I think so.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is what I told the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers an amendment to which the gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order. This being a general deficiency bill making appropriations for the current year only, an amendment seeking to appropriate for another fiscal year, to wit, a succeeding fiscal year, the Chair thinks the amendment is not in order on this bill, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire, then, to have the verbiage changed so as to have it run up to June 30, 1915. With all deference to the ruling of the Chair, there are various items in this bill, all the way through, as I understand it, which go up to the end of the next fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. To the end of this fiscal year.

The committee rose informally to receive a message from the Senate.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do it under this situation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can not do that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just decided he can not. The committee will resume its sitting.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Will the gentleman send up his modified amendment?

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, in making the suggestion that I did, I intended, with all due respect to the ruling of the Chair, to appeal from the ruling of the Chair; but after having conversed with reference to the matter, I have decided I will submit to the ruling of the Chair without any further argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7723. An act authorizing the Texarkana Board of Trade to construct a bridge across the Red River, between Fulton, Ark., and Index, Tex.; and

S. 7646. An act to authorize Parkersburg-Ohio Bridge Co., a corporation created and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Ohio River, from the city of Parkersburg, State of West Virginia, to the town of Belpre, State of Ohio.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the following title:

H. R. 17869. An act providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern district of the State of Georgia.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5295) entitled "An act to amend existing legislation providing for the acquisition of a site and the construction of a building thereon for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, customhouse, and other Government offices at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 20975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. PENROSE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

To continue the employment of nine messengers, at $100 per month each, in the post office of the House of Representatives, from April 1 to November 30, inclusive, 1915, $7,200.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask some one what these nine messengers to the House post office are to do during the summer?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Handle the mail.

Mr. MANN. What mail?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The mail of Members of Congress. They go to the city post office and get the mail, distribute it, carry it back, and mail it over again to wherever the Members are.

Mr. MANN. Do they go to the city post office and bring it over here, look at it, and then carry it back to the city post office? Is that their procedure?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are a busy lot.

Mr. MANN. Well, I take it they are pretty badly overworked to do that. I notice that all the employees are pretty badly overworked in the House. I even noticed just now, when the Speaker took the chair, one of the employees was so badly overworked he did not take the trouble to put the mace in place. It was too heavy for him to lift up after a long and arduous day. While they expect us to remain and do a hard day's work, the employees find it so tiresome that they can not even lift the mace.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman does not expect the employees to work as hard as the Members.

Mr. MANN. I want to make an observation about the House post office. The other day the Republicans had a conference in the House, and on February 18 notice was issued for that conference. Those notices were put in envelopes addressed to the Republican Members of the House and deposited down here in the branch post office about 6.20 in the evening, the House being in session for a considerable period after that. They were not delivered on the first delivery the next morning; they were not delivered on the second delivery the next morning. They were delivered in the afternoon. What kind of service is that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is about as good as you can expect even when the Republicans were in power.

Mr. MANN. Well, it was not as good as you could expect, because we always gave a much better service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. When the Republicans were in power they would not have been delivered until the next day.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is "talking through his hat." They were delivered at once. Under the old system, when the Republicans had the post office, although it is not a partisan matter, when these letters had been deposited in the post office they would have been put in the boxes at once.

What do they do now? They do not collect the mail probably until the next day, and then, instead of taking it to the House post office, take it to the city post office, and then wait for the city post office to send it back up here, or they go after it—I do not know which.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They go after it.

Mr. MANN. It is the most idiotic performance one could imagine; and that is not all. This branch post office where my mail is deposited is getting to be a positive nuisance. They do not attend to business at all. I am just going to give one illustration. These are facts. The other day a gentleman connected with this House took four letters to the branch post office down here to mail. The office was open, but nobody was there. The mail box stood outside the door in the hall. That was at 6.20 o'clock in the evening, the House being in session for some time after that. The letters were stamped; the messenger was expected to come soon. The gentleman deposited the letters on the top of the mail box, where a large number of others were deposited, including some of mine. Some time later in the evening the gentleman went there again and found his letters still remaining and he asked the policeman at the basement door when the messenger would come to collect the mail. He also asked the chief janitor if the mail would be collected that night. He was told by both that it would not be collected until the next morning, although the schedule called for two collections that night. The gentleman took his mail away and mailed it, but mine remained there until the next morning. There is no excuse for that kind of service to the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, my mail is deposited down in that box, and unless the House sits beyond the usual time I leave my office in the Committee on Appropriations, as a rule, at 19 minutes to 7 every night, and my mail is taken at that time and deposited in that box. Very frequently I have seen it taken out myself, and I have not known that there has been delay. If what the gentleman states about the inadequate service is accurate——

Mr. MANN. What I state is correct.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). It should not exist. These employees are paid to transact the business of the House. We furnish ample mail service and a sufficient number of men, and they ought to attend to their job. If they do not they ought to be dismissed and men put in their places who will attend to them.

Mr. CRAMTON and Mr. BARTLETT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman understands that the Postmaster of the House has not, as he should have, control over the men under him, as was the case in the Republican House; that the appointments in the post office under the Postmaster are not made in the manner in which they were made before, but are made in such a manner that the Postmaster, as I have said, has no authority over the appointees whatever, a policy which I think breeds bad service, if bad service has been given. Neither the Postmaster nor any other officer of this House, the Doorkeeper, the Clerk, or the Sergeant at Arms, has any control over them, but they are recommended by different Members of the House. That is the reason for it, and a change of the former system did not benefit the House, in my judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, $2,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 28, after line 21, insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of February, 1915, including the Capitol Police, the Official Reporters of the Senate and House, clerks of Members and Delegates, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, for traveling and other expenses incurred in going to and returning from their homes and for extraordinary services during the sessions of the Sixty-second and Sixty-third Congresses, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes a point of order against the amendment, and the Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding for the Civil Service Commission, $7,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Day before yesterday my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] in referring to the matter of the civil-service rules and regulations in the appointment by Executive order and the advancement of parties employed in the Government by Executive order, called attention to the number of orders passed by President Wilson by which certain parties were employed in the Department of Justice without consideration by the Civil Service Commission. He uses the language, that neither of these appointments, referring to Charles E. Stewart, of Alabama, and Mr. Satterfield, of Pennsylvania, were submitted to the commission.

I have ascertained that that is not true with reference to Mr. Satterfield's appointment. It is true with reference to Mr. Stewart's appointment. The order itself contains the statement that the commission did not agree to it.

I do not want to detain the House with reference to this matter, but I have obtained from the Civil Service Commission the number of orders and the reasons why they were passed during the administrations of President Roosevelt, President Taft, and President Wilson, and I simply desire to put these in the RECORD, in order that comparisons may be made, without calling attention particularly to them here. It will be found that President Roosevelt was much freer than anybody else in issuing Executive orders.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the statement referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Following is the statement referred to:

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all $1,283.46; together with such additional sum as may be necessary to pay interest on the respective judgments at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from the date thereof until the time this appropriation is made.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, late yesterday afternoon I asked unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing an article by Mr. Borchardt, of the District bar here, on the need of a United States Government official gazette. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] objected. I made a similar request a day or two ago, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] objected.

I just want to remind the gentleman from New York that on yesterday afternoon he made two requests for unanimous consent. One was that when the House adjourned on yesterday it should adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-day. He made another request, and no objection was made on this side of the House to either one of those requests.

I want to say further that I have been here now nearly four years, and I think I can make the statement truthfully that during at least two-thirds of that time, while this House was in session, there was no quorum present. There is no quorum here to-night. Any gentleman on this side of the House could at any moment make the point of order that there is no quorum present and have one roll call after another and thereby consume the time of this House in that process. It has not been the purpose of the Republicans to try to hamper the Democrats in their program of legislation. Of course we have voted against them and will continue to do so, but they have been entrusted with power, and the responsibility of legislation is up to them, and not to us. I believe the Democratic Party should be given a fair chance at legislation. The more laws it enacts the worse it is off. I have never made a point of order since I have been here that there is no quorum present.

I am going to make another request in a short time and ask unanimous consent to publish this article. It does not amount to a rap of my finger to me whether the gentleman from New York objects or fails to object. The publication of this matter is nothing to me. I have got no axes to grind. The gentleman who prepared it has no axes to grind. He became interested in the subject and has investigated it. He has some ideas which he thought would possibly be useful to the country. England and France and Germany and Spain and Switzerland and Canada and almost every other country publishes a government official gazette. We have none in the United States. He points out a way whereby the Government can be saved a good deal of money by the publication of such a gazette, or at least he thinks he sees a way whereby the Government can be saved a good deal of money. The Government Printing Office, as it is now run, costs this Government about $6,000,000 annually.

I will refer just briefly to some of the things that Mr. Borchardt thinks ought to go into a gazette of the character I have mentioned: The various Executive orders and proclamations of the President of the United States; the lists of nominations of the President sent to the Senate for confirmation; the treaties, conventions, and protocols——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. POWERS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have given repeated notice that I would object to outside discussions on this bill. If the gentleman asks leave to print, I shall not object.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have objected to this before.

Mr. MANN. I do hope the gentleman will not object. It is something that the Members are interested in.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will object. Every time some citizen of the United States gets an idea in his head that something would be desirable to be done by the Government and prepares a paper about it some one proposes that it should be published in the RECORD and paid for out of the congressional allotment for printing.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from New York that there has been quite a good deal of discussion on the subject in this House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; concerning something of that sort. Some of us would like to have access to that paper.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let it be printed as a document. Nobody would read it if it were printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. You can not print it as a House document through an order made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall object to it in the House.

Mr. MANN. Oh, do not be stubborn!

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. POWERS. I will withhold that just a moment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can not withhold it for a moment. He must either withdraw it or make it.

Mr. POWERS. I want to say to the gentleman from New York——

Mr. BARTLETT. Regular order!

Mr. MANN. Oh, gentlemen on that side of the House ought not to get mad.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are not mad at all.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not run over this side of the House. He might as well understand that. The demand for the regular order will not hasten anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Chair will count.

Mr. POWERS. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDGMENTS IN INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

For payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases, certified to Congress in House Document No. 1581 at its present session, $6,279; said judgments to be paid after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," shall have been ascertained and duly certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which certification shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and such deductions shall be made according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, having due regard to the educational and other necessary requirements of the tribe or tribes affected; and the amounts paid shall be reimbursed to the United States at such times and in such proportions as the Secretary of the Interior may decide to be for the interests of the Indian Service: Provided, That no one of said judgments provided in this paragraph shall be paid until the Attorney General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that there exists no grounds sufficient, in his opinion, to support a motion for a new trial or an appeal of said cause.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. As to these Indian depredation claims the gentleman will notice that the proviso is:

Provided, That no one of said judgments provided in this paragraph shall be paid until the Attorney General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that there exists no grounds sufficient, in his opinion, to support a motion for a new trial or an appeal of said cause.

The next paragraph provides that—

None of the judgments contained in this act shall be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired.

The two are in direct conflict with each other. I do not know which one the Attorney General would say should govern. The first endeavors to let a judgment be paid when the Attorney General certifies that there is no sufficient ground for appeal; but, under the next paragraph, he could not pay the judgment then unless the right of appeal had expired. Which does the gentleman want?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recall when this language was first carried in this paragraph. It was some time ago, and because of peculiar conditions we have carried it that way ever since. I am not familiar with the reasons which caused it to be put into the bill originally.

Mr. MANN. The reason was that in many cases where the United States might admit judgment, then if the Attorney General certified that there was no ground for appeal the judgment could be paid, and as it was drawing interest all the time it was desirable to pay it. But under the next paragraph it could not be paid until the right of appeal had expired, even though the Attorney General should certify that there was no ground for appeal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a peculiar provision applying to these Indian depredation claims.

Mr. MANN. But the two are in conflict.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that, but I am not advised as to the reason for the insertion of the two paragraphs in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 5, after the word "establishment," insert the words "and all branches of the public service," and in line 7 strike out the words "of the same kind" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and for the same purpose."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FERRIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21546, making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT OFFICIAL GAZETTE (H. DOC. NO. 1626).

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print as a House document an article by Marcus Borchardt on the United States Government Official Gazette.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to print as a House document an article on the United States Government Official Gazette. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. NORTON. I rise to offer a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. What is it?

Mr. NORTON. I have sent it to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. NORTON moves to suspend the rules——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not recognize the gentleman to move to suspend the rules at this late hour of the night. It is not a privileged motion.

Mr. NORTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NORTON. Is it not in order to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is if the Chair recognizes the gentleman for that purpose, but it is solely within the discretion of the Chair.

Mr. NORTON. I understand that.

RETURN OF FINES UNDER THE INCOME TAX.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, some time ago when the income tax went upon the statute books there were some fines levied and afterwards the rate of the fines was reduced. The Ways and Means Committee has reported back a resolution refunding the amount of money to those who paid the higher fine, and I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution, which will take only a minute.

Mr. MANN. When was this reported back?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Two or three days ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 398.

To refund under certain conditions, and for the year 1914, a portion of the offers in compromise for failure to make the return required under the act of October 3, 1913, said offers in compromise having been covered into the Treasury.

Whereas the income tax went into effect for the first time during the year 1913; and

Whereas, through misapprehension of law, many parties failed to make returns prior to March 1, 1914; and

Whereas in many instances an injustice is being done in that while offers in compromise for $50 in cases of corporations and $20 in cases of individuals have been made and accepted and the money paid into the Treasury of the United States, no refund could be had of any portion thereof, notwithstanding that in cases where said money had not been covered into the Treasury a refund of $40 and $15, respectively, has been made: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Treasurer of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the corporations entitled thereto the sum of $40 in each case where an offer of compromise of $50 has been made, accepted, and the money paid into the Treasury, and the sum of $15 to the parties entitled thereto in each case where an offer of compromise of $20 has been made, accepted, and the money paid into the Treasury.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Strike out the preamble, and all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury, on application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, be, and is hereby, authorized to refund, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, unto corporations all amounts paid by them into the Treasury of the United States in compromise by such corporations on account of their failure to make report under the requirements of the income-tax law for the income-tax year 1913, so paid in excess of $10; and the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized to likewise refund as to said tax year any and all amounts exacted and paid into the Treasury of the United States as penalties by corporations required by the law to make income-tax return, but which in their nature are not subject to income tax; and the Secretary is further authorized to likewise refund as to same tax year any and all amounts paid by individuals as penalties on account of their failure to make income-tax returns for said year 1913, as required by law, so paid in excess of $5."

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution to refund under certain conditions a portion of the offers in compromise for failure to make the return required under the act of October 3, 1913, said offers in compromise having been covered into the Treasury, and for other purposes."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I know nothing about the resolution except as I hear it read from the Clerk's desk. This makes provision only for the return of money which was paid during the fiscal year 1913?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. And affects no other year?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This resolution is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to accord with the text.

HOUR OF MEETING ON MONDAY NEXT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I really do not see any occasion for meeting here early on Monday. We may have to stay late on Monday night.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that I understand that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] desires to take up the conference report on the shipping bill and to pass it.

Mr. MANN. I can not see that that is any reason for coming here that early.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That will probably take an hour at least, if not more, and by that time we will probably have conference reports to consider.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that in the present situation it is not unlikely that we may be here late on Monday night. We are pretty sure to be late here on Tuesday night, if not all night, waiting on conference reports, and there is nothing in conference now that can come back early on Monday that I know of. I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. GARNER. Could we not suspend the rules and pass some bills then?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; but I do not think we ought to meet too early when we are going to stay late, unless there is an emergency. If there is an emergency, I am willing to stay for 24 hours of the day.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will suggest that there are a few uncontested bridge bills that would take half an hour on Monday.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the gentleman could not get in on them.

Mr. ADAMSON. I could if the gentleman would permit.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I also call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Agricultural appropriation bill will be reported from the committee on Monday.

Mr. MANN. But not as early as that, I hope. They have not yet been called together.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; they have been called to meet at half past 9 on Monday. I think it would be safer to meet at 11 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be safer to stay longer at night, rather than to come here early in the morning. I am going to try to get a good rest between now and Monday noon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, of course I do not want to send for a quorum at this time of the night, and I can not make the motion to adjourn until 11 o'clock without a quorum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MANN. I object.

OMNIBUS PENSION BILLS.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bills H. R. 20643, 21089, and 21218, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and the widows of such soldiers and sailors, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 2504. An act to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution";

H. R. 20814. An act to place Candler, Jenkins, and Evans Counties, Ga., in the eastern division of the southern district of Georgia, and to place Bacon and Thomas Counties, Ga., in the southwestern division of the southern district of Georgia;

H. R. 21491. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 19116. An act to grant certain lands to the city of Grand Junction, Colo., for the protection of its water supply.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 5734. An act to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, to the State of Kansas; and

S. 136. An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet Monday, March 1, 1915, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact and conclusions of law in the French spoliation claims relating to the brig Atlantic in the case of Robert Codman, administrator of the estate of Ebenezer Wheelright, deceased, et al., v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1621); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact and conclusions of law in the French spoliation claims relating to the vessel Orion in the case of William Gray, administrator, etc., of William Gray et al., v. The United States (H. 4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Secretary of the Interior of February 27, 1915, submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for printing and binding for the Interior Department for the fiscal year 1914 (H. Doc. No. 1624); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Postmaster General of the 26th instant, submitting an estimate of deficiency on account of the Postal Service for the fiscal year 1914 (H. Doc. No. 1625); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21563) granting the consent of Congress to the Keokuk & Hamilton Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at Keokuk, Iowa, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1458), which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DECKER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21121) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City," approved June 17, 1914, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1459), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LENROOT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 7515) to reserve lands to the Territory of Alaska for educational uses, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1460), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FRENCH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21450) to authorize an exchange of lands with the State of North Dakota for promotion of experiments in dry-land agriculture, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1463), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 19097) granting a further extension of time to entrymen in which to make final proof under the desert-land laws, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1464), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

SUNDAY, February 28, 1915.

(Legislative day of Friday, February 19, 1915.)

The Senate reassembled at 10 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE WILDER.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The SECRETARY read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES.

FEBRUARY 8, 1914.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM HENRY WILDER, late a Member of this House from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career the House at the conclusion of these exercises shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions (S. Res. 555), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate expresses its profound sorrow on account of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM H. WILDER, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tributes may be paid his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the death of WILLIAM H. WILDER, Representative from the third Massachusetts district, ended a career which was essentially and typically American. It is the history of a man who by his own efforts and without the aid of a classical or technical education gained for himself a prominent place in the business community of the State, and who also became active and well known in public affairs and was returned to Congress by the people of his district.

Although born in Maine, his parents moved to Massachusetts when Mr. WILDER was a boy of 11, and from that time he was forced to depend on his own exertions for support. He first found employment in farm work during the summer and in wood chopping during the winter, and it was only during the few weeks of autumn that he was able to attend the schools of the vicinity. Later he worked in the factories at Gardner, gaining that knowledge of machinery which was to be of such value to him, and taking advantage of the few opportunities for schooling which presented themselves. But these opportunities ceased altogether when he was 16, and at 17 he entered business for himself as a painter and dealer in paints. Even at this early age he showed the same qualities of determination and perseverance, the same ability to gain a full and complete knowledge of the subject which interested him, which contributed so largely to his success in later life. Leaving this business, he engaged in the manufacture of oil stoves, and in 1890, when only 35, he became treasurer of a large company with plants in various parts of the United States. This project met with disaster, and five years later he found himself compelled to start anew in business with a burden of debt of over $100,000 hanging over him. He refused to assent to insolvency proceedings and with undiminished courage started to build up again the wrecked enterprises. He was not content to be simply the manufacturer, the employer of labor, but set himself to perfect in every way the product of his factories. One improvement followed another, and when he died Mr. WILDER held more than 50 patents, the result of that intense application which was so characteristic of him.

It was his experiences in this line of work which led him to take up the study of patent law at the age of 45, and, having begun, it was but natural to a man of his character to go thoroughly into the subject of the law. He was admitted to the bar and did not rest until he had become proficient in patent, corporation, and bankruptcy law and was able to appear in court in regard to all matters in which he was interested. This in itself was an achievement for a man of his age, but during this time he was going steadily forward, building up the business in which his interest was centered, perfecting the output of his mills, and paying, with interest, every dollar of the obligations which rested upon him.

Although the cares of business and of the law absorbed much of his time his mind was not centered upon these problems to the exclusion of all else. His interest extended to national problems, especially currency and the tariff, and he studied them with the same thoroughness, the same intense application which he applied to everything which he undertook. Feeling that he could come to a better understanding of the currency problem by personal study of the systems of other countries, Mr. WILDER traveled widely abroad, meeting those who were connected with the great banking institutions, and forming his own conclusions as to the best method of meeting the pressing needs of our own financial system. He studied the tariff in the same way, minutely and thoroughly, striving to master as far as one man could this intricate and complex question.

When, therefore, the people of his district called him to represent them at Washington he came to his duties here with a mind trained to meet new problems and with a determination to devote all his energy and time to the service of his district and of his country. During his first term his health began to fail, and the disease which had fastened upon him gradually weakened his strength and made it harder and harder for him to attend to his duties, but weakness and pain could not change his character, and, until the last, he still endeavored to familiarize himself with every side of legislation which was pending before Congress and to understand and judge fairly the many matters which came before him in the course of his work as a Representative. With few advantages he had made himself prosperous and successful, with only the simplest education he had become a lawyer of standing, and the talents which he possessed he had, during his last years, turned conscientiously and fully to the service of his country. In whatever he undertook he did his best, and in his death his district and his State have lost a faithful, diligent, and hard-working public servant.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the reasons why men enter a political life vary greatly, but it is safe to say that some of those who make the most useful, and at the same time the least conspicuous, Representatives are the men who have had an active business career, have measurably succeeded in it and, having developed habits of industry and a public spirit without developing unsual powers of acquisitiveness, are led to assume office as a public duty and with a sincere desire to serve their Government which, in many cases, has been more or less intimately connected with some of the instrumentalities which they have employed in their business affairs.

Such a man was the late Representative WILLIAM HENRY WILDER, who represented for parts of two terms the third Massachusetts district in the House of Representatives. A son of Maine, with many of the strong qualities which are found in the native stock of that State and especially among those who have been associated with its seafaring life, he became a resident of Massachusetts in boyhood, received his education in the common schools, and long before reaching his majority was an employer of labor, a relation which he maintained during his active business life.

One of the governmental functions with the results of which there is almost universal satisfaction has been our patent system, enabling those of inventive genius to develop and protect their ideas so that there has been a very general incentive to produce labor-saving machinery and a very great number of articles which have added to the comfort of the human race. Mr. WILDER inherited a capacity for developing new ideas, and during a long business career was granted no less than 50 patents having to do very largely with the development of oil stoves and appurtenances connected with them. Some of his ideas in this business were revolutionary in their character, and it can almost be said with absolute correctness that he was the father of that branch of the business as conducted today, not only in the ideas governing the character of the articles used, but in developing the business as a manufacturer and distributor of his products. In this respect he differed greatly from a very large class of inventive geniuses who have little or no business capacity and as a result are unable to profit to any considerable extent through their inventions.

His career, however, as a business man was not one of uninterrupted success, and an incident connected with it shows better than could otherwise be demonstrated his high sense of personal integrity even when there were no legal claims. As I have said, he early became connected with the oil-stove industry, but for reasons over which he had no control the organization as originally formed became so involved that it was necessary to apply for a receivership. In the reorganization which took place Mr. WILDER took over a very considerable part of the business of the previous company, assuming a very large obligation in so doing, for which he was not directly or indirectly responsible, perfected the patent which controlled the product being manufactured, perfected the business organization, and, as a result, paid every dollar of the indebtedness for which he had pledged himself with 6 per cent interest, and in the following years accumulated a considerable property.

Speaking of his inventive genius, a well-known firm of patent attorneys has recently written me relating to his patents and they closed their letter with this sentence:

We say without qualification that he was one of the most brilliant inventors that we have ever known in a long practice.

Having put on a sound foundation his own personal business, Mr. WILDER directed his activities in other directions, studying law and being admitted to the bar and to practice before all the courts when he was about 50 years of age. He became largely interested in financial matters and financial legislation, making a trip to Europe for the purpose of informing himself of the methods practiced by European banks, and he later became a candidate for Congress, where he was serving acceptably to his district at the time of his death. While that service was helpful in many directions, the best results were found in the work which he did in the Committee on Patents. It is not possible for the public to understand the benefits which are derived from personal experience in considering such intricate matters as our patent laws involve, and in this respect alone the service which Mr. WILDER performed in this one committee would have been sufficient to make his term in Congress distinctive.

Soon after entering Congress he was attacked by a malady which he knew quite well must be fatal in its results. However, he did not cease his activities but continued his work until the very end. I think his great regret in giving up work was that he had not had more time to give to the Government the efficient and faithful service which a man of his years and experience might have looked forward to with certainty. Massachusetts has not been lacking in citizens of the kind represented by Mr. WILDER, and he stands high among those who have added materially to the State's industrial development and who have set a high example of personal integrity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the senior Senator from Massachusetts.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE GOODWIN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES.
FEBRUARY 21, 1915.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended in order that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. FORREST GOODWIN, late a Member of this House from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the widow of the deceased.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine submits resolutions which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY read the resolutions (S. Res. 556) as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate expresses its profound sorrow on account of the death of the Hon. FORREST GOODWIN, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tributes may be paid his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the death of Representative FORREST GOODWIN brought to a most untimely end a life which promised much in useful service to the Nation and his State. After a strenuous campaign he had been elected to the Sixty-third Congress and began his service when that Congress was called in extraordinary session by President Wilson. He had reached his honorable position by his own efforts and his natural talents. He had struggled hard for success at the bar and in the political arena and had won it, and with it the confidence and esteem of the citizens of his State, of all political parties. After a service of a few short weeks in his high office, his name was stricken from the rolls of the living, and he passed on into the realms of darkness. We have met to pay our tribute to him as a man, and in doing so we forget all political rivalries and think only of the man.

I knew FORREST GOODWIN well. When I came to the bar and began practice in Waterville, Me., he was a student in the junior year at Colby College. He was a famous baseball player—the pitcher on his college team—and an excellent student. He had fought his way to success in his college, upon the ball field, and in the classroom. He was popular with the faculty, the student body, and the townspeople. He was in every inch of him a fighter in whatever he undertook, but always in fair, open contest.

After his graduation from college in 1887 he began the study of law and upon his admission to the bar began practice in his native town of Skowhegan, the shire town of the county of Somerset. His rise was rapid, and in a few years he became one of the leaders at the bar of his county. As I was engaged in practice in Waterville, only 20 miles from his town, I met him often in legal contests and had full opportunity to judge his abilities and his worth as a man. There is no calling in life where the chaff is more cleanly winnowed from the wheat and none in which associates more justly pronounce judgment upon each other with impartial justice. My knowledge of him came more from my association with him as a lawyer than in the field of politics. He was a good lawyer. His mind was logical, alert, and clear. He knew his cases and gave them exhaustive study. When he entered the courtroom he was prepared. He was a tireless worker and left nothing undone that was necessary to his case.

He was adroit and most persuasive in his appeals to a jury. In the first years of his practice he was a plaintiff's attorney in many personal injury suits, but he was so successful that he was retained later as a defendant's attorney and defended the Maine Central Railroad Co. in many suits of this kind. His success at the bar was merited. It did not come to him by any combination of fortuitous circumstances, but he won it by hard work and by his ability. He was devoted to the interests of his clients and they trusted him implicitly.

The people of his native town were proud of him. They had noted his rise from the humble walks of life to a high position in his profession through his splendid intellect, aided by his indomitable will. It was not strange that when he offered himself for their suffrage that he received their support. He was elected by them to the lower house of the Maine Legislature and by the people of his county to the higher house, where his abilities were recognized, and he was elected president of that body in 1905. I served in the lower house of the legislature of that year and know the high regard in which he was held by the members of both houses. He acquitted himself in a manner to largely increase his popularity.

He was a fine presiding officer, impartial and fair in his rulings, with a wide knowledge of parliamentary law, gained through his service as a clerk to Speaker Reed. He was not again a candidate for any office until he was nominated for Congress in a popular primary. He was a strong and forcible speaker, and in the campaign that followed his nomination he presented the political issues to the voters in every part of his district, and his election was in a large measure due to the earnestness and clearness with which he did this.

In all the relations of citizen, husband, neighbor, and friend, he displayed the highest type of true manhood. His personal charm and buoyant spirits made him a most pleasant companion, and I shall always remember with great pleasure the many occasions when I enjoyed them. I am glad to bring this simple tribute to his memory.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, no State in the Union can point with greater satisfaction to her list of Representatives in the two Houses of Congress than the State of Maine. On that list are found the names of Hamlin, Fessenden, Morrill, Blaine, Hale, Frye, Reed, Dingley, Boutelle, Milliken, and others. All these men were essentialy self-made, and early in life formed habits of energy, assimilation of knowledge, and the use of experience that had their culmination in remarkable successes at the National Capital.

The traditions of these great men were strongly exemplified in FORREST GOODWIN. His success was the direct result of unfaltering determination, ceaseless energy, and undaunted courage. As has been told, he was born in Skowhegan, Me., June 14, 1862. His early education was in the graded schools and the high school of his native town, which left him with an overwhelming desire to attain the benefits of a college training. His father, however, was so situated that he could not give his son the needed assistance, and the young man immediately sought means to accomplish the desired end unaided. It is said that he borrowed a small amount from a neighbor, bought out the ice business of a local dealer, and by working day and night throughout the summer accumulated something over $1,000, which enabled him to enter Colby Academy, now Colby College. He was quickly recognized as a leader in everything pertaining to the college life. He graduated from college fourth in his class and was elected class orator and editor of the college magazine. After achieving this result he rapidly rose to great prominence in athletics, in which field he became quite famous, and especially as a baseball pitcher, as has just been suggested by the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. In that capacity he traveled over Maine and Massachusetts during one season. At the close of the season Mr. GOODWIN entered a law firm in Skowhegan to study law; and in 1889 he was admitted to the bar, and shortly afterwards his townspeople elected him to the State legislature. Upon the adjournment of the legislature he entered the Boston University Law School and again showed his qualities of concentration and capacity for work by completing the three years' course in one year, a remarkable achievement.

From 1889 to 1891 Mr. GOODWIN served as parliamentary clerk at the Speaker's table in the House of Representatives at Washington. Hon. ASHER HINDS had formed his acquaintance while at Colby College, realized his great ability, and recommended him to Speaker Reed as his assistant. At the close of the Fifty-first Congress he returned to his home and was appointed by President Harrison postmaster of Skowhegan, which position he filled for four years. Following this service he engaged in the active practice of law, and his aggressiveness and natural oratorical abilities soon placed him in the front rank of members of the Maine bar. His success as an advocate was so marked that his business rapidly grew, and he was looked upon as a fit successor in due time to the great men who had preceded him from his State in the national councils.

In 1903 Mr. GOODWIN was elected to the Maine State Senate. He was reelected in 1905, and was made president of that body. In 1912 he entered the race for Congress, as a Republican, against the then Democratic Representative, Hon. Samuel J. Gould, also a resident of Skowhegan. Notwithstanding Mr. Gould's popularity, Mr. GOODWIN won the fight handsomely. After serving less than two months in the National House of Representatives, he was called home by the disease which on May 28, 1913, terminated in his death. A congressional committee, of which I was a member, accompanied the remains of Mr. GOODWIN to his pleasant home, where he was laid away amid a sorrowing throng of neighbors and a host of friends, who gathered from far and near, the bar being represented by many of its leading members from various parts of the State. Mr. GOODWIN had highly honored his State, and the people of Maine, irrespective of sect or party, respected and honored him.

Mr. GOODWIN died at the zenith of his intellectual powers, and in his death not only his native State but the Nation at large sustained a great loss. Those of us in public life who knew him miss his geniality and kindness of manner, and the people of Maine will long remember him with affectionate and tender memories. In the great struggle of life, Mr. GOODWIN played well his part, overcoming great obstacles and achieving great results. His life was an illustration of what the poor boy may accomplish under our institutions, and may well serve as an inspiration and guide to the youth of the Nation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, it was not my privilege to enjoy the acquaintance of the late Representative GOODWIN, but through the courtesy of the senior Senator from Maine, I was named by our Presiding Officer as one of the Senators to attend the funeral at his home in Skowhegan.

I shall never forget the simple and beautiful service which I witnessed there. I went a stranger but returned with the feeling that, after all, I had known him. It was my first visit to the State which he had served so faithfully in the National House of Representatives; and yet for many years that State and its people have seemed near to me, because my wife comes from a family which for generations has lived there in one of the counties near by that in which Mr. GOODWIN lived. Long ago, from association with her kinsfolk, I became familiar with those sturdy qualities which are characteristic of the people of that State. Upon this sad journey I observed with much interest the farms and woodlands, the green hills, the beautiful rivers, the evidences, abounding everywhere of that industry, prudence, and fine character which distinguished the best types of native American citizenship found in New England. The beautiful village on the banks of the river; the modest, comfortable home in which this kind husband and father sheltered his household—so representative of that simple, pure, domestic life from which have come all the great figures of American history; the neighbors and friends who honored and trusted the deceased in life, and now came to look upon his face for the last time; the bereaved family; the sweetness and consolation which the beautiful and appropriate service left to soften and assuage their sorrow—all these I shall not forget.

I shall always remember that scene; the wife and children, the kind and character-stamped faces of the men of New England who silently filed by and gazed upon the face of their dead friend. They were the class of men whose strength of character and regard for truth and law and order inspire our confidence in the perpetuity of this great democracy.

Notwithstanding the attacks which are frequently made upon Congress, it is the most representative of all the departments of our Government. It exhibits in the greatest degree those shades and types of human nature which produce a fascinating mixture of both strength and weakness.

In a great democracy like ours men seek a public and political career because they have an aptitude for it or because they prize the distinction and love the publicity it brings to them.

We have no aristocracy which gives to the country a class specially trained for the public service. The term of an elective office as a rule is short. The average service of a Congressman does not exceed three terms. In the Senate men frequently serve for long periods of 12, 18, 24, and sometimes 30 years. Death, change in party administration, factional disputes, and conflicting ambitions all play their part in effecting changes and terminating service. This is more apt to be the case in the newer communities of the West than in the East or South, but it is more or less true in all sections of the country. The State of Maine has been a most notable exception and as a rule has retained its public men in long terms of service.

Not long ago I heard a Senator telling how proud he was when he taught a district school for $40 a month before he read law. Another in turn told how he taught a country district school for a term of five months for $150 without drawing one cent of pay until the end of the service, postponing the settlement of his board and washing bills until the day of final payment came, and how on Saturdays he did extra work to get his spending money, and how he read law at night. These fairly represent the early struggle of most Congressmen. Some managed to get through college; others graduated from a high school or academy; others from a country district school, supplemented by a course in a law school; others "picked up" their education, after the manner of Abraham Lincoln, and read law in the office of some country lawyer. All came from sturdy stock and from homes of respectability in which worldly resources may have been limited, but where surroundings were good and wholesome. All made their way from the ranks and learned life's best lessons in the school of hard knocks. Generally they have known something of poverty and what it means to practice self-denial. The struggles of life appeal to such men. As a rule, they are serious minded, studious, and industrious. As a rule, they are men of integrity. It is a rare thing to find one among them who is corrupt or dishonest. I assert that they are representative men, fit to serve in a representative government; that they are patriotic and intensely American. If they are sometimes too narrow and provincial and sometimes influenced by prejudice, it may be said that they are never more so than the constituencies they represent.

They come to Washington with the impressions formed at home in the environment in which they have lived and enter upon their duties like newly matriculated students in a great university. The larger field of service into which they enter, observation, alertness, contact with men of larger experience, and a quickness of perception which they possess as a rule soon broaden the view and widen the mental horizon. They grow rapidly under the spur of ambition to make a good record and secure the approval of their associates and of the people at home. They throw themselves into their new work with energy and enthusiasm. Each must win upon merit. Here as elsewhere the only royal road to success is found by the use of brains and the application of tireless industry. Those who have an aptitude for legislative work soon make their place, and it is remarkable how quickly they become thoroughgoing and useful Members. One may show talent for details and figures and become an expert in committee on matters relating to the tariff, or finance, or appropriations. Another may develop constructive ability of a high order and come forward with proposals for new legislation of the most useful kind. Another will develop in forensic power and become strong in debate; another a merciless critic, whose eye detects the weak points, the jokers, and the selfish schemes concealed in the plausible wording of a bill and by his unsparing attacks compel a necessary change by amendment or cause the defeat of the measure. Another will become a great parliamentarian. One will become a good all-round legislator, useful in every field; another may become eminent for discussion and study of complicated legal difficulties and of questions of constitutional and international law, which are always arising to vex the legislative mind. All constitute an efficient representative body of men who serve their country faithfully and well.

Our departed friend was a worthy Member of this great legislative branch of our Government, and in his life, his character, and his faithful service acquitted himself with credit and vindicated the trust and confidence of those who sent him here to represent them. It is the regret of all that his career came to an end so soon, because he was yet a young man; but his family and friends and the State and country can rejoice in the record of faithful service and devotion he exemplified so well while he was permitted to live and perform his part in life's work.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. President, I can conceive of no more appropriate introduction to my remarks than these opening sentences from the memorial address of the late leader of the Maine bar, the Hon. Orville Dewey Baker, of my home city, delivered in 1907 before our State supreme court, upon the death of Chief Justice Wiswell:

> At times we are strikingly reminded that close beside the borders of life, set with all its blooms, flows the river of death, into whose forbidding waters no man may step and then return, and no man who has once entered may send answer back from the further shore. When it comes to one who is frail with sickness or weary with the hardships of life, the fingers of death are soft and even welcome. But when it overtakes, as it did here, the strong man in harness, it must give us pause in order that we may cast a glance at the life, at the character, at the career of him who has left us.

It is but a glance, indeed, that we can cast at this time at the life and character of the Hon. FORREST GOODWIN—a strong man whom death overtook in the harness. I apprehend that others will place upon the record here the appropriate biographical details of Mr. GOODWIN's life. My glance shall be at that intangible, indefinable, and, in the case of FORREST GOODWIN, lovable, thing that men term personality.

While a mere youth in school and college, Mr. GOODWIN displayed striking qualities of leadership. Let us dwell on these qualities for a moment, for if you will but analyze the character of any leader of men you will solve the secret of his leadership.

FORREST GOODWIN was endowed with a splendid intellect, of the keenly alert and analytical type. But that alone would never have made him a leader of men. He had physical vigor and manly courage, a sanguine temperament and sunny disposition, a splendidly modulated and musical voice, and a natural gift of oratory. In addition, he possessed a keen sense of humor. While this perhaps is not an essential of leadership, it has been strikingly characteristic of many leaders. In a large sense, it is that quality which prevents a man from taking himself and his responsibilities too seriously; which clarifies his mental vision and perspective, and gives him a sane and wholesome view of men and of ideas in all their relations.

Yet all these things are common to many men who may be delightful companions, but in no sense leaders. In the case of Mr. GOODWIN all these splendid and agreeable qualities were supplemented by the more essential and fundamental qualities of leadership—ambition, and a genuine sympathetic interest in his fellow men. Without the former a man will not and without the latter he can not attain and retain leadership of his fellows.

In his younger days Mr. GOODWIN was a splendid athlete. He was captain and pitcher on his college ball team and played professionally for a short time after his graduation. He played the game of life later on very much as he had played the game of ball, with brilliancy, coolness, nerve, resourcefulness, but always with perfect fairness to his opponents.

In his professional and public life Mr. GOODWIN quickly made a name for himself. He was one of the finest jury lawyers Maine ever produced and was at the very zenith of his powers when he was taken away. His political honors were many, and he filled each and every one of them with distinguished ability.

But it takes more than mere fame, position, or distinguished intellectual attainments to give a man a permanent grip on the feelings and affections of his constituency. For these things Mr. GOODWIN will always be honored, even "in his own country." But it was the big heart, the human sympathy, the genuine interest in the lives and fortunes of his friends that took the "Mr." out of his name in the State of Maine and replaced it with "Forrest"—and that is one of the acid tests of real popularity.

To those unacquainted with Mr. GOODWIN my words may mean but little. But to those of us who knew and loved this brilliant lawyer, citizen, orator and statesman, this affectionate husband and brother, this loyal, courageous, and courage-inspiring friend, these few words may be the index to a priceless volume of tender and imperishable memories.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the senior Senator from Maine.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. President, I submit the following resolution and ask for its adoption.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of Mr. WILDER and Mr. GOODWIN the Senate do now take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The Senate thereupon, at 11 o'clock and 25 minutes a. m., took a recess until to-morrow, Monday, March 1, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 1, 1915.

(Legislative day of Friday, February 19, 1915.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution and to have it referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection if it does not lead to debate.

Mr. JONES. It is simply the introduction of a joint resolution.

[The joint resolution appears under the heading "Bills and joint resolution introduced."]

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented the credentials of E. D. SMITH, chosen by the electors of the State of South Carolina a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1915, which were read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. PAGE presented the credentials of WILLIAM P. DILLINGHAM, chosen by the electors of the State of Vermont a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1915, which were read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

ELLEN B. MONAHAN.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, an adverse report was made by the Committee on Claims upon the bill (S. 489) for the relief of Ellen B. Monahan. It was made under a misapprehension of the facts. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed may be reconsidered, and that it be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When was the bill indefinitely postponed?

Mr. WORKS. I do not remember the exact date, Mr. President? If objection is made, I understand, it can not be done under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The vote whereby the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Goff	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Gronna	Overman	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Hitchcock	Owen	Smith, Mich.
Burleigh	James	Page	Smith, S. C.
Burton	Johnson	Penrose	Smoot
Catron	Jones	Perkins	Sterling
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Pittman	Stone
Chilton	Kern	Poindexter	Sutherland
Clapp	Lane	Ransdell	Swanson
Clark, Wyo.	Lea, Tenn.	Reed	Thomas
Culberson	Lodge	Robinson	Tillman
Cummins	McCumber	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Weeks
Fall	Myers	Sheppard	White
Fletcher	Nelson	Sherman	Works

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] on account of illness. He is paired. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

While I am on my feet I wish also to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence, on account of sickness, of my colleague [Mr. THORNTON]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was requested to state that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] are engaged in business of the Senate upon an important committee matter and can not be present this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

JULIA H. PLATT.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the unfinished business, the Indian appropriation bill, be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is before the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask the Senator from Arizona to yield to me to present some reports from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. I will yield, with the understanding that they will lead to no discussion. If so, I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If they do, I will let them go to the calendar.

Mr. PENROSE. I reserve the right to object until we can see what the reports will be.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

In behalf of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 553, I am directed to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to state that I am not going to object to these resolutions and other matters that perhaps may be offered this morning, but I give notice now that I shall object to any further consideration of bills brought into the Senate until some time is fixed for taking up the calendar and considering bills to which there is no objection.

If we allow bills to be presented here and passed by unanimous consent, the bills which are upon the calendar will not be considered. There should be a time fixed, and at an early date, when bills on the calendar to which there is no objection may be considered under Rule VIII. It seems to me that the only way to secure consideration for them is to object to the consideration of bills that are being presented from committees now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that I have two other Senate resolutions. I do not think they are contested. They are unanimous reports. One involves hearings before the Judiciary Committee as to a bridge and the other provides for the codification of laws during the vacation.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object, as I said, to the resolutions reported now, but I give notice that hereafter I shall object to bills until we take up the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolutions which I have reported.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider Senate resolution 553, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Julia H. Platt, widow of Benjamin S. Platt, late enroling clerk in the office of the Secretary of the United States Senate, a sum equal to one year's salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The amendment of the committee was, in line 5, before the word "salary," to strike out "one year's" and insert "six months'."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

THE JUDICIAL CODE.

Mr. SHAFROTH. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 552, submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] on the 19th instant, I report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. PENROSE. Let it be read first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to appoint a subcommittee thereof to consider, in the interval between the Sixty-third Congress and the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, or during a session or recess of the Sixty-fourth Congress, the proposed codification, revision, and amendment of the laws relating to the judiciary contemplated in the bill (H. R. 15578) passed by the House of Representatives in the last preceding session, and that such subcommittee be authorized to employ and compensate such persons as may be found necessary to assist in any work arising in connection with such consideration, the expenses thereby incurred to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the subcommittee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado a question. I desire to inquire whether the Committee on the Judiciary has been giving consideration to this work?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I will state in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Arkansas that a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary has been considering this measure during the present session, but has not had time to conclude the hearings and the consideration of the bill. It is of such length and of such importance that, in the opinion of the committee, it was deemed necessary to do the work in vacation.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee whether consideration was given to the question as to whether this work had better be done by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws or by a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. CULBERSON. There is no committee in existence for the general revision of the laws.

Mr. ROBINSON. But there is a resolution pending providing for the creation of such a committee. I will make no objection, Mr. President, to the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment of the committee was, to add at the end of the resolution the following: "and not to exceed in the total $500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHAFROTH. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report the resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. PENROSE. Let it be read first.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 554, submitted by Mr. REED on the 27th ultimo, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or a subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the interval between the Sixty-third Congress and the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, or during a session or recess of the Sixty-fourth Congress, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ a stenographer at a cost of not to exceed $1 per printed page to report such hearings as may be had, in connection with the subject matter of S. J. Res. 111, Sixty-third Congress, now pending before a subcommittee of said committee, and to have such hearings printed for the use of the committee; that the expenses of such hearings be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the said committee and such subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions of the Senate and may conduct said hearings and investigations in the city of Washington or elsewhere, as it may deem proper.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not want to object to the consideration of bills and resolutions, but I think when unanimous consent is asked a brief statement is at least due to the Senate as to the character of the bill or resolution. This authorizes an investigation under a Senate resolution. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado what that resolution provides?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is intended to inquire as to a certain bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. A statement like that is entirely satisfactory, but simply to recite a resolution by number gives no information to the Senate. I do not think Senators can be criticized for objecting or, at least, asking for some explanation when unanimous consent is requested.

Mr. REED. Did I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania wanted a further explanation?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not need any further explanation.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 1 to the said bill, and agrees to the same with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 21546. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 398. Joint resolution to refund under certain conditions a portion of the offers in compromise for failure to make the return required under the act of October 3, 1913, said offers in compromise having been covered into the Treasury, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. R. 21546. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915, and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

H. J. Res. 398. Joint resolution to refund under certain conditions a portion of the offers in compromise for failure to make the return required under the act of October 3, 1913, said offers in compromise having been covered into the Treasury, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

HOURS OF LABOR.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent to present a report from the Committee on Interstate Commerce and to ask for its present consideration. I will state that it is House bill 17893, to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907, which was brought up heretofore, and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] indicated a purpose to object. Since that time, however, he has informed me that if the bill were amended so as to make the minimum penalty $50 instead $100 he would make no objection. If unanimous consent is given to the consideration of the bill, I will ask that it be amended so as to make the penalty $50.

Mr. PENROSE. This is a bill that my colleague [Mr. OLIVER] objected to the other day. If the Senator assures me that all objections of my colleague are removed, I shall not object to the consideration of the measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the request for the present.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. FLETCHER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the unfinished business be now taken up.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has suggested that we ought to take up the calendar, and I am quite in agreement with that suggestion. I was going to ask if we could get unanimous consent to devote the time between 5 and 6 o'clock this afternoon to the consideration of the calendar and to reports of committees—one hour—laying aside the business that might be then pending.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Florida that one hour would not be sufficient for that purpose.

Mr. ASHURST. I want to object to any further proceedings on this matter. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have the floor, I believe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is always in order to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will ask one hour for the purpose I have indicated. Of course if we can get another hour a little later on, that will be all right; but for the present I think we ought to agree to consider the calendar between 5 and 6 o'clock. If then we shall have not finished the consideration of the calendar, we can get it up again a little later on.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I should like very much to have unanimous consent to begin the consideration of the calendar at 6 o'clock to-night, to run until not later than 9 o'clock. By that time I think every bill to which there is no objection can be considered. The Senator from Florida knows that there are many bills on the calendar that have been objected to over and over again, and will be objected to when the calendar is again taken up. If we have three hours for the consideration of the calendar, we can take up all and get through with them, I have no doubt. Perhaps it will take a little less time.

Mr. FLETCHER. If we finish the calendar before 9 o'clock——

Mr. SMOOT. Then we can go on with the regular business.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then say "not beyond 9 o'clock."

Mr. SMOOT. "Not beyond 9 o'clock."

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that would be advisable.

Mr. STONE. I desire in this connection to state that there should be an executive session some time to-day, not a long one, but perhaps one of 15 minutes, and I should like to have a proposition for that considered at the same time that we are making the other unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the consideration of the calendar be preceded by an executive session.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; let it be preceded by an executive session.

Mr. STONE. That is satisfactory to me, if it is satisfactory to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator from Arizona object to that?

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. ASHURST. I object. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to ask the Senator from Arizona if he would not be willing to lay aside the pending business, whatever it may be, at, say, a quarter to 6 o'clock, to permit us to have an executive session, and then the consideration of the calendar, to extend not later than 9 o'clock, after which to resume the consideration of whatever business there may be.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection to laying aside the present unfinished business at 8 o'clock to-night in order to have an executive session, and then to take up the calendar.

Mr. PENROSE. That is all right.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it is impossible on this side of the Chamber to hear what is going on. I should like to know what is the request.

Mr. FLETCHER. That from 8 o'clock until 11 o'clock——

Mr. PENROSE. Until we adjourn.

Mr. FLETCHER. At 8 o'clock——

Mr. OVERMAN. That we shall consider unobjected cases on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request for unanimous consent is that at not later than the hour of 8 o'clock to-night the Senate go into executive session; that after the executive session the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar——

Mr. PENROSE. To consider unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To consider unobjected bills on the calendar, and that at their conclusion a recess or adjournment shall be taken.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not agree to that.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not agree to that. We might want to continue in session later.

Mr. PENROSE. There might be other bills which we might desire to consider.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the consideration of the calendar extend not later than 11 o'clock. I might then want to move to take up the river and harbor bill; perhaps we can consider that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not stated the request for the unanimous-consent agreement correctly. It is that not later than 8 o'clock an executive session shall be had, after which the calendar shall be taken up for the consideration of unobjected bills under Rule VIII, and to continue not longer than 11 o'clock to-night in the consideration thereof.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection to that, if the understanding be thoroughly arrived at that we shall not thereby displace the unfinished business.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is right.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is understood—whatever the unfinished business may be. I hope, however, that the Senator from Arizona will have the Indian bill through before that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

97, 98, 100, 102, 106, 107, 108, 109, 115, 116, 123, 124, 126, 127, and 128, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$47,576"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and on page 17 of the bill, line 7, strike out the words "force and," and in line 8 strike out the words "fire department," and in line 7, after the word "police," insert the following: "crossing police, park police, and fire department"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For constructing market buildings on the site of the present municipal fish wharf and market, including refrigerating and cold-storage plant, which shall be equipped for the accommodation of such retail business as may obtain at that point and shall serve as the wholesale receiving and distributing point for marine and other products to be retailed elsewhere in the District, within a limit of cost of $185,000 which is hereby fixed, $125,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$110,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$28,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$29,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$118,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$160,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert the following: "$5,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 125: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"ANACOSTIA RIVER FLATS.

"For continuing the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats from the Anacostia Bridge northeast to the District line, to be expended for the purposes and under the conditions specified in the item for this improvement contained in the 'District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915,' $100,000, and authority is hereby granted to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, to enter into a contract or contracts for and on account of said work in an amount not exceeding $100,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendment of the Senate numbered 1.

JOHN WALTER SMITH,
J. H. GALLINGER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT N. PAGE,
T. U. SISSON,
C. R. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the conference report be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, just a moment. I understand that this is the report of the conferees on the District of Columbia appropriation bill?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. One part of the report.

Mr. JAMES. It provides for the creation of a commission to investigate the half-and-half plan?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. In the first place, there was a conference report in which there were three matters in disagreement. Prior to this conference report we agreed upon two of them. The other amendment in disagreement went back to the House, and they agreed to the Senate amendments with an amendment, which they have sent back, and in which I propose to move that the Senate concur.

Mr. JAMES. The House, as I understand, has already agreed to the conference report——

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. They have.

Mr. JAMES. Including the provision creating a commission for the purpose of investigating the half-and-half plan and reporting to Congress?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. They have.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to Senate amendment numbered 1.

The amendment was concurred in.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20159) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask that the reading of the bill be resumed on page 20, line 22, beginning at which point a number of amendments were passed over until to-day at the request of several Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will state the amendment beginning on page 20, line 22, which was passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, after line 21, the committee proposed to insert:

For enlarging the irrigation system, for the irrigation of Indian lands, for protective works to prevent damage to irrigable lands by floods, and for development of domestic water supply on the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona, in accordance with the plans and specifications submitted by the Chief Engineer in the Indian Service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the total cost of this project shall not exceed $150,000: Provided further, That the cost of the said project shall be reimbursed to the United States in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask that the letter which I send to the desk from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in justification of that item be read at the desk by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I should like to ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment. I do not think there is any necessity for reading that long letter. It gives no information in the world.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it go into the RECORD, then, without reading.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the letter read.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It will save considerable time to have it printed without reading.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the letter read.

Mr. LODGE. Let the letter be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection to the reading of the letter. The question is, Shall the letter be read? [Putting the question.] The "ayes" have it; and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the letter, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 16, 1915.

MY DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: Referring to the item of of $20,000 in the estimates for the Indian appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1916, for beginning construction of the works to protect the irrigable allotments of the Papago Indians from damage by floods and to irrigate the same, I have the honor to advise you that this is a most meritorious project, and one that may be considered in a manner urgent.

The work comes under two heads—protection of the irrigable lands from damage by floods and irrigation system for the irrigation of the land.

For a great many years the Indians farmed an extensive area on the Papago Reservation, which lies south of Tucson; and doubtless they would still be irrigating except for the great difficulty of maintaining the headings of their ditches in the barrancas, which are liable to destructive erosion by the action of flood water.

In the report of the engineers of the Indian Service (S. Doc. No. 973, 62d Cong.) the urgent necessity of protecting these lands from further encroachment of the barrancas was fully discussed. To leave these lands unprotected for a few years longer will doubtless result in such a condition that the Indians will be damaged both in the loss of their lands and the absence of facilities for using water for irrigation upon those allotments not destroyed by floods.

The question of a water supply is discussed in detail in the report mentioned, and there is no doubt of the existence of a supply which may be developed for use on the lands of this reservation without infringing in any degree upon the supply requisite for the city of Tucson. While accurate information is not available as to the acreage formerly cultivated by these Indians, it is believed that they cultivated an area considerably in excess of that contemplated by the project for which the appropriation was requested. Therefore the water which will probably be required for the project under discussion will not exceed the amount which might be decred to those Indians upon an adjudication, if due consideration were given their activity in the former use of water for irrigation. It is therefore recommended that the item receive favorable consideration by Congress.

Very truly, yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, since we have been enlightened by that letter, I should like to repeat what I have said several times on the floor of the Senate—that the actual purpose finally of the department seems to me to be to take from the city of Tucson a great amount of its water supply. During a hundred and fifty years of the occupancy of this land by the Indians the Government never undertook its development; but in the meantime private enterprise has spent a million dollars or more in cutting a great trench across the valley of the Santa Cruz River and has developed water that will irrigate probaly ten or fifteen thousand acres of land. That project is now in successful operation. This trench is made several miles below the northern lines of the Indian reservation. The purpose at the bottom of this amendment is to tap the same underflow a few miles above and take away the water not only from the city but from the uses of which I have already spoken and now in successful operation.

Time and again the assertion has been made, as it is made in the letter which has just been read, without rhyme or reason, that it will not affect the flow of the water 6 miles below and in the same channel. The statement proves its own senselessness. If you tap the underflow above the trench to which I have referred, it is bound to affect the flow of water.

This water is found in a great sandy stretch lying deep in the impervious rocks. The ages have brought a slow flow of water through this sand. By cutting down through the sand to bedrock and establishing pumping plants at enormous expenditure they have developed a flow from which they are irrigating lands, and the same water supplies Tucson, a town of some 20,000 inhabitants.

I will not object to this amendment if the committee will agree that the proviso shall be struck out commencing on line 3, page 21. The $20,000 for this next year may probably be of some service to the Indians in preventing the flood waters from washing away the lands in their reservation or making different channels through it. As to that, I am perfectly willing, as everybody in that district is willing, for the Indians to have all the water they can get without absolutely taking away the water rights that have been developed by others, and which the Government, as I say—at least since 1863—has sat still and let go as it is going now. Then, when this development comes, they will say, "Well, we will go down lower, tap this water, take it away from the city, if need be, to irrigate these lands"; and at the same time they are inducing these very same Indians to leave that reservation to go down to establish two others in southern Arizona. It is the town I live in. I have been over the reservation a thousand times in 35 years, and I have seen no material change in it.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to have the Senator explain to us what is the right and wrong of this final proviso, which says that the cost of the project shall be reimbursed to the United States in accordance with certain rules and regulations, and so forth?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I want to strike that out, for the simple reason that they have not now, and never had since the world started, a cent with which to reimburse anybody. It is a ridiculous fraud to put in there a proviso that it shall be reimbursed by Indians who have not a dollar with which to reimburse anybody.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of this matter last Saturday, as the chairman of the committee will remember, because I had been assured that this proviso in regard to reimbursement was, as the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] has said, a dead fraud. It amounts to nothing, and ought not to be in this appropriation.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield to me, I have not the slightest objection, so far as I am concerned, to the proviso going out—not the slightest objection.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then let us take a vote on it.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, just a moment. I should like to say that I do not think the proviso is subject to the characterization which it has received. The theory of this amendment is that in the beginning it is a gratuity; it is an advance to these Indians. If the project works out as it is hoped it will work out, and the lands are irrigated, it will then be proposed, very properly, that these Indians shall be assisted with seed, with teams, and with the facilities for working their little irrigated allotments. There are those who believe that one of the lessons which the Indian must learn is the value of the dollar, to be learned by returning that dollar, without oppression upon him, when the time comes that he can return it. If, with this irrigation and the subsequent assistance to the individual, the time should come when, under a system by which the cost of the irrigation might be distributed over a long term of years, the Indian might eventually, without any injustice to him, and in learning the lessons which the white man has had to learn, gradually reimburse to the Government the cost of this irrigation, the word "reimbursable" is put in here in order that at that time he may not be able to claim that he never anticipated this request being made, and that it is an afterthought.

Personally I have no objection to its going out, for I have no more concern with this than any other Senator, but I think it is a mistake to take it out. I think it should stand there, in order that the Indian, as he grows in the thought of business, of developing himself, of earning something, may recognize that there is a moral obligation, when the time comes that he can do it, to return to the people of the United States the money which was advanced to make him, possibly, a self-supporting man.

I believe in the wisdom of putting the word there. At the same time, as I say, personally I have no more concern in the matter than anyone else.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Let us have a vote on this matter and strike out the proviso.

Mr. PAGE. I want to say just one word in answer to the Senator from Minnesota.

This is a proposal to appropriate $150,000 where the House has made no appropriation. I am not insisting that that is not right, but I do insist that we ought not to hold out to the Congress of the United States the idea that we are making an appropriation out of the Indian fund when to all intents and purposes it is a gratuity appropriation. When this matter came up in committee I did not know as much about it as I think I do now. I have made some inquiry and investigation since, and what I have learned has fully corroborated every word said by the junior Senator from Arizona.

I do not want anything to go through here under a fraudulent representation, and it is almost fraudulent to talk about reimbursing from these Papago Indians, as nearly as I can get information from outside. While I agree with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] that we perhaps ought to keep our hands upon the Indian as far as we can, that is not the point I am arguing. I want to have no misrepresentation that is going to change the vote of a single Senator here. If we want to give the Papago Tribe of Indians $150,000, let us do it, and do it as a gratuity appropriation; and if we do not want to do it, let us vote against it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, the $20,000 is all they need for this year, and I should like the proviso stricken out, for fear that it may start a thing that I want to look into and have the department look into.

I move to strike out both provisos.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the two provisos on page 21, reading as follows:

Provided, That the total cost of this project shall not exceed $150,000: Provided further, That the cost of the said project shall be reimbursed to the United States in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 8, to insert:

For the examination and final location surveys of a dam site on the Colorado River, and the investigation and survey of an irrigation system to supply the land of the Colorado River Reservation from said dam, and for the design, preparation of maps, plans, and detailed specifications for said works, and estimate of cost thereof, for the utilization of the reserved rights to water from the Colorado River in the State of Arizona for the irrigation of approximately 150,000 acres of land on said reservation, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to remain available until completion of said work and to be reimbursed to the United States as Congress may hereafter require.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. So far as I can read this proviso, it does not appear that it is for the benefit of the Indians. It says:

For the examination and final location surveys of a dam site on the Colorado River and the investigation and survey of an irrigation system to supply the land of the Colorado River Reservation from said dam—

And so forth. I will ask the Senator from Arizona if he would not be willing to put in, on line 17, after the word "land," the words "for Indian allotments"?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this item was first estimated for by the Secretary of the Interior at $50,000. The Secretary, who is a large-minded man, was convinced that $50,000 was necessary, but finally, in order to be as economical as possible, he reduced the item to $10,000. The justification offered by the Interior Department in support of this item is contained in a statement which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. The matter referred to is found in the hearings at page 124, at the bottom of the page:

The water-rights investigation for which the above funds are requested is necessary for the protection of those Indians having rights on the Colorado River Indian Reservation. These consist not only of the 500 or more Indians now residing at that point, but also 600 or 700 Mojaves at Fort Mojave and other Indians living along the Colorado River.

All these Indians can be provided with exceptionally good agricultural land on the Colorado River Reservation if water were available. A dam above the reservation will not only divert water to the Indian lands but also to a large body of land across the river, a total of approximately 150,000 acres.

Several bills have been introduced in Congress for the development of an irrigation system to irrigate approximately 150,000 acres of land on the Colorado River Reservation, but the question has been raised of the sufficiency of water rights for such a large area. The proposed work contemplates such an examination of the flow of the river and the conflicting claims to water rights as may be necessary to determine this question, and such examinations, surveys, plans, and estimates as may be necessary to determine the financial fesibility of the project. This amount is considered the least with which the work could be begun in order to secure satisfactory progress in the investigations necessary.

Mr. PAGE. May I ask the Senator, because he is acquainted with this location, if this project is chiefly for the benefit of the Indians, or is there a large quantity of land owned by white settlers that will be chiefly benefited by the appropriation?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there are at present no private rights whatever that have ever been initiated on this reservation. The town site of Parker, comprising a little less than 1,000 acres, is the only privately-owned land within this reservation. The Government has even gone so far as to attempt to exclude the locators of mining claims that were made many, many years ago; so there are no private lands at all within this reservation except the town site of Parker, which embraces about 900 or 1,000 acres.

Mr. PAGE. I accept the statement of the Senator and withdraw any objection I may have had.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, if this is for the benefit of the Indians, and there are no private rights involved, why not say so in the item by striking out, on lines 16 and 17, the words "approximately 150,000 acres of land" and leaving it to read:

For the irrigation of lands allotted to Indians only.

That will save a world of trouble for Congress and in the future for the Indians. These projects when they are started are always in the interest of the Indian, but sooner or later he has to pay for them, and the white man gets the lands principally or the better part of them.

If this is for the Indians, let us make it read that way. I offer that as an amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, before the Senator offers that amendment will he listen to the voice of reason and consanguinity for just about a minute?

Mr. LANE. "Consanguinity"?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; the Senator and I as white men now talking on this question.

Mr. LANE. All right.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In the name of conscience, how much would it cost the Government, how much would it cost each Indian allottee, to dam the Colorado River, which runs more water than the Ohio, and bring onto that reservation water to allot only to these small Indian lands? By this great enterprise there is a reimbursable amount of water taken out and paid for by other lands developed under the enterprise, thus giving the Indians a chance, for unless you should do that the Indians would not get a drop of water.

As to limiting it in the way proposed, the Senator's experience in the West will certainly show him that you can not throw a dam across the Colorado River and take out water for five or six or seven or eight hundred Indians and distribute it on that land for less than $1,500 or $2,000 or even $3,000 an acre, and that would be a gratuity from the Treasury. Under this ultimate program we are not only to develop and give to these Indians the water necessary for their full allotment, but the Government is to be paid back for the whole enterprise by the development of other outside lands under the same project.

So the Indian's only chance to get that water is through the damming of the Colorado River; and this matter of $10,000, as the Senator will see, is to make investigations, including the utilization of the reserved rights. There is no appropriation here for anything except an investigation. That is all there is in that item.

I trust the Senator will not offer any amendment to it, for it only harasses a queston that I have been working at for 10 years, trying to do something for the Indian reservation at Parker and something for the white men to whom the Government has sold the Parker town sites and has never delivered a drop of water under the contract it made with them.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I think that fully verifies the statement I made. It is not for the Indian. There are a few Indians there who will be benefited; but note further in the item that the Indian's land is held to reimburse the expenditure. All the chance is taken by the Indian in a proposition wherein the white man is to receive the greater portion of the benefits.

It is not playing the game fairly. It is not giving the Indian a show for his expenditure. If it were made reimbursable out of the United States Treasury, and came in here as an item for the white man from which incidentally the Indian might profit, it would be different; but it comes in here, as do many other items in this bill, under colors by which they can not be recognized—I will not say false colors—but there is not the requisite information before Congress as to what it is doing in making these appropriations. This appropriation is being made to investigate the feasibility of diverting the water from a stream over thousands and thousands of acres of land, most of which, I presume, now is upon an Indian reserve, for which every acre of the Indian lands will be tied and held responsible. In the ultimate windup it will turn out as it does in most other instances that the Indians will be up on a sagebrush hillside, and the good irrigable lands, the valuable lands, will be in the hands of his white neighbors, and then gentlemen will rise here and wonder why the Indian does not prosper.

I am going to object to that item; and if it is subject to a point of order as legislation, which I think it is, I shall make it. These things have got to stop sooner or later, and we had just as well try it here.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Of course, the Senator can injure the Indian; the Indian can not help himself. Does the Senator object to striking out the words "to remain available until the completion of said work and to be reimbursed to the United States as Congress may hereafter require"? If you would strike out that last clause, it would cover the Senator's objection and accomplish the Senator's purpose.

Mr. LANE. It is not for the Indian; it is for the white man.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I emphatically deny that statement.

Mr. LANE. I do not believe it is for the Indian.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is all right.

Mr. LANE. If the Senator thinks it is, I do not think so.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Do you know the Parker Reservation?

Mr. LANE. No.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Do you know the conditions there?

Mr. LANE. No.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Do you know the places where they are irrigating lands?

Mr. LANE. I know the conditions have been serious. I know about these reimbursable funds. If they are treated better in Arizona than elsewhere, Arizona deserves a great deal of credit, and I am willing to give it. I have had handed to me a statement which says that this provides for a submerged dam and that it would form part of a system to be leased——

Mr. ASHURST. I did not understand the Senator. Will he name the party who handed the Senator that paper?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is not the item we are talking about. This is the appropriation of $10,000.

Mr. LANE. That is on page 22. I had the wrong page. In regard to this item, on page 21, it provides for the investigation of the Colorado River Reservation. It contains no provision for the allotment of the Indian land, and that is a just and valid reason to object to it. I think at this time they are not allotted. His allotment should be cared for. Now, if we can do that in any way——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is already cared for in the general law. There is nothing in this in the world except $10,000 to investigate that by the Interior Department. Where does the Senator get his information?

Mr. LANE. Just now I do not want to go over that.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know the reservation well and know the condition of those Indians well.

Mr. LANE. But you know the Indians are not allotted.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know they have been making allotments to the Indians, and now they are bringing them up from the southern part of the country and from the north to make new allotments on that same reservation. They are going to get them where they can ultimately make a living, and this $10,000 is appropriated to aid in that.

Mr. LANE. A short time ago I visited a reservation where about a million dollars of a reimbursable fund had been expended upon a reclamation project. There were not 10 Indians deriving a quarter of a cent benefit from it. The great part of the Indians, the larger number, I think, had already selected allotments on the hillsides, for the reason that they were not familiar with the conditions which would come after the irrigation, nor did they have one 10-cent piece with which to go upon allotted lands under the reclamation scheme. If they had taken allotments to raise crops on them—they had no money to buy a plow with—and they would have starved to death, and they will starve to death if they go there. I say I am a bit suspicious of these projects where the Indian's rights are tied up in that way.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator will notice by the way this reimbursement provides it shall be in such order as Congress shall hereafter direct. It is not the ordinary provision for reimbursement out of funds, but Congress shall fix the cost where it properly belongs. I suppose if an Indian allotment is not benefited by it the Indian will not be charged for it. The Indian can not be any worse off. It is simply such a requirement as Congress may hereafter make.

Mr. LANE. He can be left worse off than he is now, roaming over the desert and eating lizards and prairie dogs, as he has to do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator is putting it on the moral ground, I do not care to interfere with his argument.

Mr. LANE. He will be at the mercy of Congress; and when the other bill comes here Congress will have just as little knowledge as it has in regard to this one. You need not worry about what will happen to the Indian when he comes to select those lands. He will get the worst of it. He is not a good trader, to begin with.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I can not let the statement of the Senator pass without recording my notion that the Indian does not always get the worst of it by the acts of Congress. I think Congress diligently, honestly, and earnestly tries to protect all the Indians. I do not know about this particular project, of course, but I am taking the assurance of Senators who live there and know about it; but I say Congress tries to act intelligently and honestly for the benefit of the Indians. I know of nothing that will benefit the Indian more, if we want to stop him from roaming around the country, than to put him on a farm and give him the necessary irrigation facilities to raise something to eat.

Mr. LANE. But the Senator must understand Congress is not, and never has presented to it, full information in regard to these items, nor do Members of the Senate have time to read them, although there are reports, I guess, that would fill this room which have been written on the subject; you would die of old age before you could read them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. How are we to get any information in regard to this particular matter unless we have some way of gaining it? This provides for an experimental fund of $10,000 to see how we could benefit the Indian in this particular process.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is absolutely all there is in it.

Mr. LANE. I will say for the information of the Senator that you will get the information by observing what has been done in the past through grants of right of authority given by Congress. You will find that under these reclamation projects, as a rule, the Indian has not benefited. They have not been his projects; they are never for him, except incidentally, as it may happen by chance; and but rarely does he derive any benefit, for the reason that if you give him an allotment of 100 acres, or any number you wish, the Government in the past has furnished him not even a plow, or a harrow, or a house, or a team, or anything by which he could use the allotment. Under the State laws, and also under some laws which have been passed by Congress, he forfeits his right to his land if he does not make use of it in a certain time. It is always an entering wedge to starve the Indian, and that is the reason why I object to it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, the Senator by that statement goes back on our whole system of the allotment of land individually to Indians.

Mr. LANE. No; I beg pardon.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If we allot lands to Indians, we certainly ought to make the allotments worth something.

Mr. LANE. If you allot lands to the Indian, you should give him a fair opportunity to make use of the land. You are undertaking to individualize the Indian. The Indian is a communist. They hold their property in common. It is really with many members of their tribe a part of their religion not to part with land to individuals. They think the curse of God rests on the head of a man who divides and parcels out the earth, the mother of mankind. They think it is sacrilegious to do so. You are trying to do it. Our attempt to individualize the Indian, with the traditions and the religion which they have held thousands of years, for aught we know, and to separate the Indian into entities does not succeed so far as we have done so. We give him no means to make use of his land. The results show for themselves. We have spent a million dollars for reclamation schemes and he does not get one cent of profit out of it; and some Indians are going hungry and, in some instances, naked when it is 40 degrees below zero. I want to stop that if I can, and the only way I know to stop it is to block it, and not go further until we know more about this matter.

Those are facts I stated of record with regard to the conditions which exist in some places. The Indians of Arizona and New Mexico live in an arid region and should have a general right to water; yet the only Indians in the United States to-day who have the smallest percentage of trachoma and tuberculosis and the most prosperous are the Navajo Indians, who are out from under the hands of the Government, off in the desert range in the mountains of Arizona and New Mexico with their herds and flocks of sheep. The water holes are 20 miles apart. If the Senator will devise means by which that condition can be improved I will allow it to stand; otherwise I am trying to put in a point of order, if it is in my power to do it. I raise that point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not know what the Senator can do, but this $10,000 is for the benefit of the Indians, and that is all there is in it. If you know any better way and prefer to make a point of order, very well.

Mr. LANE. Strike out from line 18 on that page.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That will take out the words:

To remain available until completion of said work and to be reimbursed to the United States as Congress may hereafter require.

I do not want to have it stricken out to line 18.

Mr. LANE. On the assurance of the Senator, I will accept that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Commence at the word "to," in line 18, and strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clause proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To remain available until completion of said work and to be reimbursed to the United States as Congress may hereafter require.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 22, beginning in line 10.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire what has become of the amendment beginning in line 1.

Mr. ASHURST. That was agreed to on Saturday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was agreed to on Saturday.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I submit a motion to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. That amendment is designed to enable the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the desirability and feasibility of purchasing certain railroad grants in the Navajo Reservation. I suppose those lands belong to the Atchison & Santa Fe Railroad Co. If I am incorrect the Senator in charge of the bill will correct me.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator has the slightest objection to the amendment, I will agree to let it go out.

Mr. THOMAS. I have some fundamental objections to it.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PAGE. I asked that the second and third paragraphs on page 22 be passed over until to-day. I had some matters in connection therewith that I wished to investigate. I have no objection to the adoption of those two amendments.

Mr. LANE. I will raise a point of order on that item, the first one beginning on page 22, line 10 to line 20. That is the submerged dam site to which I called attention a while ago. It is new legislation and general legislation.

Mr. ASHURST. Did I understand the Senator from Oregon to make a point of order on the item beginning in line 10 and going to line 20, on page 22?

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I will state that is estimated for and it appears in the bill in the exact language of the estimate. It was copied from the Book of Estimates. Therefore it is not subject to a point of order. I send to the desk the estimate that it may be read. It will be observed it is the exact language of the estimate and not subject to a point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. A further point against the point of order is that this particular tribe of Indians is directly under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, and it is a part of the general business of caring for these Indians. The estimates having been made for their care and for their protection, I think relieves it from the point of order.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I do not know positively whether it is subject to a point of order or not. It was not in the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. ASHURST. The point of order is not debatable.

Mr. LANE. Others have been debating it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is debatable.

Mr. LANE. Now, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. LANE. The point of order is that it is general legislation, and it is matter which has not been considered in the first estimates which were submitted to the House, where the bill originated, and I understand they rejected it.

Mr. ASHURST. The House committee approved it and it went out in the House on a point of order.

Mr. LANE. Then, if it went out in the House on a point of order, I should like to have it go out in the Senate on another one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair fails to see how it is general legislation.

Mr. LANE. It is the beginning of an entirely new project. It is the beginning of an enormous expenditure, for no benefit, as near as I can ascertain, to the Indian. The principal benefit is to the whites.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has nothing to do with the question as to whether it is a benefit.

Mr. LANE. The Chair then holds that it is not subject to a point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think it is general legislation at all.

Mr. LANE. Then if it is not general—and I think, perhaps, the Chair is right about that——

Mr. ASHURST. I know the Chair is right about it. I do not guess about it. The Senator guesses on everything regarding this bill.

Mr. LANE. It is awfully good to have somebody who is perfectly well assured of their position and have great confidence in their judgment. I am not quarreling with the Senator about that. I am not familiar with the rules of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. LANE. I feel quite sure that the decision was a proper one. I am not criticizing it or finding fault with it.

This item, I am informed, provides for the building of a submerged dam, which would be a part of the system to be leased to a private corporation. The objection is made by the friends of the Indians that they have not been consulted about the expenditure; that they have not held a council upon it; and, as a matter of fact, that they object to it. They object to being tied to an expenditure of $160,000, made reimbursable out of the sale of their property for the benefit of white people, not for the benefit of the Indians; that is, it benefits the Indians in a small way incidentally, if perchance he is able to take advantage of the situation when the time comes for him to benefit by it, but ordinarily they are not able to do it and will not be able to do it. If it could be used for his benefit to a full degree or in a proportionate share, I should not object to it, but I do not think that that can be done. I am going to ask for a vote on this amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield there?

Mr. LANE. I will.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to get more in detail the objection the Senator has to this particular amendment. There is not anything on the fact of the amendment that really shows what it is proposed to do—what is claimed for it?

Mr. LANE. In favor of it?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. LANE. I do not know. I know what is claimed against it.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to hear that.

Mr. LANE. The Indians have not been consulted; they have not agreed to it. It is a mortgaging of their lands for the expenditure of funds through people who are not their agents in any way.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Indians have not got a dollar. Whoever gives that information does not know what he is talking about. I grant the Senator has it, but whoever is telling him that stuff absolutely knows nothing about it or else is misrepresenting it.

Mr. LANE. They may be.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There is no doubt of the advisability of that, so far as the Indians are concerned.

Mr. LANE. Have the Indians consented to it?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Indians need not consent. They are there needing the water. I do not need the consent of anyone else to put water on my land.

Mr. LANE. He usually goes and asks you, if you are a white man.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The water does not cost the Indians a nickel. It is proposed to construct a dam across the Gila River to carry it to them. That is all there is in the provision.

Mr. LANE. One hundred and eighty thousand acres, at least, it is said, will be irrigated and will come under this project——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. We hope so, eventually.

Mr. LANE. The principal part of which does not belong to the Indians. The Indians have not been consulted. Their highland, their dry land, their hill land, and their lowland will be tied up until the money is paid.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How does the Senator know that? The Indian has his title and you can not invade it.

Mr. LANE. The land has not been allotted yet, has it?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It matters not whether the land has been allotted or not, if you are helping him.

Mr. LANE. Until the land is allotted he has no title?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator is a very good friend of mine, and he knows my personal feelings toward him; but I am surprised at the source of his information. I know something about these matters. I know that this Gila project is essential to the ultimate development of the land there. When you dam the Gila River and conserve all its waters it is important that that water shall not be wasted, but that the Indian shall be given his full and first claim. Every dollar of the appropriation will be taken out of the sale of lieu lands not belonging to the Indians. The men who take it will pay the Government for the enterprise. That is the only way you can possibly give water to the Indians in the desert countries. The Senator's fear that somebody is trying to take something away from the Indian, when Congress is now reaching its hand into the Treasury deeper, perhaps, than ever before to try to help him, is not well founded; but we have on the floor of this Chamber the greatest friends of the Indian, men of high standing, who, without proper information of the surroundings of the Indians, apparently would curtail the great interest that the Government shows, and would certainly minimize the result which the Government wishes to accomplish.

Mr. LANE. But here we are, as always, putting a mortgage upon the Indian's land without his having a word to say about it, and making it reimbursable. If this is a plan for irrigating lands in that country—and it is for the white people there—why is it in an Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The white people and the Indians all get the use of it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LANE. I do.

Mr. FALL. I merely wish to make one suggestion in a word upon this item to the Senator from Oregon, which is that this is not one of the usual reimbursable items. There is no mortgage to be fixed upon any of this land at the present time whatsoever. This is an appropriation made out of the Treasury of the United States for this purpose, and any portion of it which hereafter may be made reimbursable will be so made by the direct action of Congress in the future, and not now. I repeat, none of this is made reimbursable at the present time, but when the total amount estimated for it, $60,000, may be expended then I presume that so much of it as the Secretary of the Interior thinks should be paid by the Indians will be estimated for by him to the committee of Congress, and then he will ask Congress for legislation to make this particular amount reimbursable.

The Senator from Oregon will notice that this is not worded as are the usual reimbursable items. The provision on page 21, beginning in line 19, reads "and to be reimbursed to the United States as Congress may hereafter require."

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. FALL. It is not creating any mortgage or any incumbrance at the present time, but simply leaves it to Congress hereafter, upon the completion of the project, to say how any portion of it shall be reimbursed.

Mr. LANE. Yes, Mr. President; it allows Congress to later provide the method by which it shall be reimbursable.

Mr. FALL. Congress can do that in any event. The Senator knows that if we pass an act to-day making it reimbursable, the next Congress can repeal the act.

Mr. LANE. Now, Mr. President, the provision states that this sum of $50,000 is to remain available until expended, and to be reimbursable as Congress may hereafter provide, out of the lands of the Indians upon which it is expended.

Mr. CLAPP. Why not?

Mr. LANE. That is, the lands which are covered, for which the Indians have to pay their share of the reimbursement. Is not that right?

Mr. CLAPP. This creates no lien upon any lands at all. It is a declaration now, before a dollar of this money can be taken from the proceeds of the Indian lands, or even the cost of the allotment made to the Indians themselves, and it is going to require additional affirmative legislation on the part of Congress. The word "reimbursable" is put into these items so that hereafter, when projects are ready to open and the time comes when the details are to be worked out, it can not be claimed that we made a gratuity and then have afterwards changed our minds and proposed to have the land pay the cost of reclamation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LANE. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. With the permission of the Senator from Oregon, I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] if he can state whether any of these reimbursable appropriations have ever been actually followed by reimbursement? Is it not a fiction, as a matter of fact?

Mr. CLAPP. No; it is not a fiction. Time and again, and especially in this revolving fund that we have provided, the money has been paid back. In some instances where loans have been advanced for supplying machinery and horses almost every dollar has been returned the first year.

Now, as to these irrigation projects, we have not yet reached the point where the details have come in; and I want to call the attention of the Senate to it, and especially the attention of the Senator from Oregon to it. We have reached the point in some cases, notably as to three large projects in Montana, where they are ready to open up the projects. So, following the general terms of the bills of years past, using the word "reimbursable," we are now seeking to carry out those provisions in this bill giving the Department of the Interior authority to make the allotments to the Indians who are entitled to their share of the irrigable lands, then selling to others the surplus irrigable lands, and authorizing the terms of the contract by which to work out the details as to how these sums shall be reimbursable. No lien is created upon these lands by this amendment. It will require positive affirmative action by Congress hereafter before any liens can be placed upon them.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I do not so understand it, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota. The water will cover the Indian's land.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly; the water will cover it.

Mr. LANE. The principal part of the lands which will be covered by this irrigation scheme are the Indian lands, are they not?

Mr. CLAPP. In some cases all of the land is Indian land.

Mr. LANE. But how is it in this particular case?

Mr. CLAPP. As to this one, I can not say; but I presume not; and in the item that was striken out a moment ago it was not; but not a dollar of this money can be charged to any Indian fund or to any Indian property until Congress subsequently enacts legislation. As I have said before, the word "reimbursable" is inserted in these items so that when the time does come, when the projects have advanced to the point of allotment, it can not be claimed by anybody that they had a right to think they were getting this aid without ever having to repay it. That is the object of inserting the word "reimbursable."

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, until Congress, acting through the Indian Bureau or some other department of the Government, goes out upon the source of the water supply and accurately measures the water and assigns it definitely to the Indians, making them responsible for the cost of putting it upon the land, it will always turn out, as it has in many instances in the past, in my opinion, in the loss of the Indian's land to him. The better land, the most valuable land, will go into the hands of the white man. I did not want to see another of these schemes started until something definite was fixed in the Indian's behalf.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Can the Senator name one specific instance where the Indians did not get the best land on any one of these reservations?

Mr. LANE. In the Senator's part of the country?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In any part of the country.

Mr. LANE. Oh, yes; there are many such instances.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it is very easy to say that, but that is a reflection upon the Department of the Interior. When it gets time to open these irrigation projects and to make allotments, I believe the Department of the Interior, acting through the Indian Office, proposes to always give the Indians the first selection. Of course it is hard sometimes to get the Indian to take his selection. The process of changing the Indian from a tepee Indian, clothed in blankets, to a man who is operating a piece of land is a difficult one. Every step of the legislation has to be along untried paths, and there has been much of failure, much of mistake in it; and when these projects are ready to be opened it is true that it is difficult sometimes to get the Indian to go on his particular piece of land.

The suggestion has been made here that the land is of no value to the Indian because he has not any means with which to improve it. In this bill and in previous bills we have appropriated large sums of money for the very purpose of allowing the Indian Office to help them along with seed, with teams, and with machinery, and to place them upon a plane of equality, so far as the necessary capital is concerned, with the white man who goes upon an irrigated tract of land. The plan has sometimes met with failure, of course, but I believe that the Indian Office has tried its utmost in good faith to give the Indians the first opportunity to take these irrigable lands.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, that is necessarily so. The Indians must have the first opportunity.

Mr. CLAPP. They must have; they have the first rights there.

Mr. FALL. There is no authority, no power, in the Secretary of the Interior or in anyone else to dispose of the surplus lands until after allotment to the Indians.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course not.

Mr. FALL. They have the first choice invariably.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes. But even aside from the matter of sentiment in the department itself, its standing before the public is involved in the exercise of good faith with these people, and, while it has made mistakes, while there have been failures, I believe that in the main the department has tried to do the best it possibly could. It has come to Congress and asked money, and we have given it money that it might help the Indians, supply them with seed, with machinery, and with horses, in order that the Indians might cultivate the smaller irrigated tracts.

The trouble is, as the Senator from Arizona pointed out a while ago, that if you limit the cost of an irrigation project to the small amount of land which the Indians in a particular tribe would be entitled to as their allotment of irrigated land, instead of spreading it over the larger tracts, you will impose a cost upon those Indians for that irrigation beyond all proportion to the value of the land itself; and, consequently, it is provided in connection with these projects that they shall include the larger areas, which may be the more economically irrigated and after the Indian has taken his allotment then the surplus land shall be sold to the white settlers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon allow me to ask a question?

Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Indian appropriation bill has always been a puzzle to me. I think it carries more of what ought to be considered general legislation than any other appropriation bill, but usually the items are ruled in order. I want to ask the Senator from Minnesota, who is very familiar with matters affecting the Indians, whether this project, which will furnish the Indians with more or less water to irrigate their lands, will also supply water to white people who will not be required to reimburse the Government, as they are required to reimburse the Government under irrigation projects constructed under the general irrigation law?

Mr. CLAPP. They will be required to reimburse the Government unless the Interior Department in a most flagrant manner violates the law. The purpose of the law is—and in the administration of the law that purpose is sought to be effectuated—to give the water first to the Indian when his allotments have been made. Then the unallotted surplus irrigated land is sold to the white settlers, and in this very bill, where we are now working out the details of that reimbursable feature, we give the white man infinitely less time in which to pay for the improvements and the cost of irrigating the land which he acquires than we do to the Indian who takes his share of the irrigated land.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the very point. When this land is sold to the white man he then comes under the provisions of the irrigation statutes, which require the money to be paid back at some time.

Mr. LANE. Twenty years is usually allowed him, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. It probably will be a hundred years, but we will call it 20.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think so, Mr. President.

Now, a word in regard to legislation being on this bill. In the first place, an appropriation for the irrigation of a portion of an Indian reservation, it seems to me, would naturally be on an Indian appropriation bill. The proposed cost is found in the estimates furnished by the Department of the Interior through the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The appropriation being in the Indian appropriation bill, it seems to me it is no violation of the spirit of the rules regulating appropriation bills that the legislation, when the proposition reaches the point where the details of reimbursability are to be worked out, providing such details should be found in the bill in which the project originated, thus carrying out the terms of existing law. The term used in the existing law is simply that the appropriation shall be "reimbursable." Then when it comes to working out the details I am rather inclined to think it should be done on the same bill in which the appropriation for the project originated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I am not raising any issue as to that, but I wanted to be assured that when the water is furnished to the white settler later on he will come under the terms of the irrigation act, which requires reimbursement.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to say, Mr. President, with the consent of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], who has the floor, that as to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who has made the interruption, when I came to the Senate in 1901 the Indian appropriation bill simply bristled with private claims, and it was largely through the assistance of the Senator from New Hampshire that that element in that bill has been eliminated. Although coming from a State where there are no Indians, I want to pay this tribute to the Senator from New Hampshire, that there was no time when I was in charge of the Indian Committee that I could not go to him and, upon satisfying him of the merit of Indian legislation, secure his hearty cooperation.

Mr. LANE. Now, Mr. President, I wish to say, in answer to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], that only within the last two years has the Government appropriated, so far as I know, anything as a special fund to furnish the Indians with seed, plows, and harrows. That system was inaugurated on the last bill or the one of the year before.

Mr. CLAPP. It began in a small way some years ago. I think the first appropriation was in 1910 or 1911, and it was made in behalf of the Cheyenne Tribe. It worked so admirably that Congress has enlarged it. I went to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] in regard to that project and laid it before him, and he heartily cooperated along that line. I feel that this feeble tribute is due to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, it is only within the last few years, then, that the scheme was started. Within the last two years small sums, $100,000 or $200,000, have been appropriated for that purpose, to be used as a revolving fund, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; but it reaches nowhere. There are 300,000 Indians in the United States. I do not know how many are entitled to the use of it; I do not know anyone who does know; but, at any rate, it does help some, though it is totally inadequate. So these Indians, if the land were under water to-morrow, would be unable to farm one acre of it unless they were provided with means to buy a house, a barn, such stock as they needed, all the agricultural implements required, and unless they had enough food on hand to carry them over until their crops were gathered. That is what would happen to any person going upon the land.

But there is another point to which I wish to call attention, and it is an important one, and yet one that is usually overlooked. It is this: The Indian is allowed the first opportunity to take his allotment; but as a rule the Indian lives near the mountains, if he can do so, where the timber is, where the game goes; and that land as a rule is not irrigable. It is too rough country; it is at too great an elevation to derive benefit from these reclamation projects. So the Indian, going along as he always did and liking the country in which he has always lived, selects an allotment out near the head of the stream and not down upon the plain, for the reason that there is nothing but sagebrush and perhaps sand, or whatever the growth of the country is. It must be so, or else it would not need water. He can not and does not look into the future and see the day when he has a farm built up there and alfalfa growing upon the land, for he knows that under his present condition, without a dollar on hand and with no means of support, it is absolutely impossible for him to go there; but he can eke out a miserable existence, or live, at least, in the country over which he is then wandering back and forth. So, in a great many instances, it has been found that the Indian selects land which never can be irrigated; and if the Indian is let alone, he pretty nearly always will do that. Under the same circumstances he would be a foolish person if he did not; and a white man would do the same thing. So they do not secure their fair share of allotments under the ditches, nor are they able to utilize them after they do. There are reclamation schemes finished which have cost nearly a million dollars, which have been completed for two years, and yet the Indians have not been able to go on them at all.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. LANE. Yes; I yield the floor.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to say this, in answer to the Senator's point: Of course we began with a small amount in this so-called revolving fund. We have enlarged that amount just about as fast as it seemed possible that Congress would stand for it. We had to proceed with some degree of care, because there would be a limit to what Congress would permit us to use, and the Senate has been generous and gracious in assisting in this matter of advancing funds for individual Indians. I think the time is going to come when we will have to go a step farther and authorize the Secretary of the Interior, where Indians will not take their irrigated allotments, to put alfalfa and grass on those allotments, so as to hold them for the Indians, so as to protect the water rights.

I want to say to the Senate that the day is coming when all the water in the country that can be irrigated is going to be appropriated and beyond the power of recall. Then, if that water has been appropriated and the rights of the Indians to the first claim to the water shall have been frittered away, there will be a grievous responsibility resting somewhere. It is to avoid that responsibility, it is to save those water rights to these Indians, that we are advancing faster than we otherwise would with these irrigation projects.

It is very easy to criticize. It is very easy to find fault. I believe that the Indian Department, considering the experimental condition and character of all this work, has done remarkably well, but we are confronted now with a situation where the Indians will lose forever the water in those districts unless appropriations are made and the waters secured for them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the very next section in the bill, to which probably there will be as much objection raised as to this, has that very design, because that water will be appropriated if some effort is not made to get it for the Indians now; and the second clause, that comes right after that, follows the very reasoning of the Senator's argument, which strikes me as absolutely essential to the protection of the Indian in the future.

Mr. CLAPP. It seems to me there can be no answer to this. We may be experimenting to some extent as to the possible reimbursement of some of these funds, although I believe every irrigation project will work out its own salvation; but some day some one will have to take the responsibility for the loss of the water rights of these Indians, who primarily had the first right to this water, or Congress will have to take some chances as to reimbursable funds in the appropriation and securing of these water rights. I prefer, as standing midway between the Indian and the white man, to take some chances as to whether the funds shall be reimbursed, in order that there may come no time when I can be charged with a part of the responsibility for having allowed this water for irrigation to pass forever beyond the control of the Indian, who has the primary right to it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I am so thoroughly in accord with the Senator upon this proposition that I, for one, will unhesitatingly vote to assist in the development of these Indian projects, whether there is ever one dollar reimbursed to the Government of the United States or not. Where they have property, and we are improving it, and through that property the expenditure can be reimbursed, it is undoubtedly just that the Indians should pay their part of the expenditure in those cases; but in view of the treatment which we have accorded the Indians I want to say unhesitatingly that out of the Treasury of the United States I am willing to vote an additional burden upon the taxpayers of this country to do justice to these Indians.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, that is my attitude. I realize that Congress to-day stands facing great problems, some of them world-wide in their importance; but I believe we can take a little time here to take steps to secure to these people what some day will be the only feature of value to the land in those arid and semiarid districts. Therefore I, for one, propose to do my share of taking the responsibility for securing these appropriations of money and these appropriations of water.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me we ought to have some more information than we have in regard to this item. Admitting all that the Senator from Minnesota has said, we have not yet been told definitely just what is proposed to be done in the case of this particular item.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I thought——

Mr. ASHURST. I think I can give the Senator the information in three minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator a question or two, and if he will answer the questions, that will give the information. Is it understood that when this water is appropriated for irrigation the benefits of it will be partially for the white man?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir. Now, just a moment. No; I am incorrect about that. It is for the exclusive use of the Indians on the Gila Reservation. There are no white owners of land on that reservation. I read from the Senate hearings, at page 279, from the testimony of the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Meritt:

> Senator ROBINSON. Are you satisfied it is a good project?
> Mr. MERITT. It is very important, Senator, and it will increase the irrigable area of that reservation materially.
> Senator ROBINSON. It is reimbursable?
> Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.
> The CHAIRMAN. As Congress may hereafter provide.

So the honorable Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs makes the direct statement that it is for the exclusive use of the Indians on the Gila Reservation. There are no white owners of land on that reservation.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator whether there are any Indian allotments, either? Will not the surplus lands be sold and is not that what the proposition is for?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the country is waiting for the man who can read the future. Being unable to read the future, I can not answer that question.

Mr. NORRIS. Then does the Senator say it is for the exclusive use of the Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, the Senator did not say so. I did not say so.

Mr. NORRIS. That is one of the things I think the Senator ought to know.

Mr. ASHURST. There are many things the Senator ought to know. I think it is obvious that there are too many he does not know. This is in the category of things he does not know, because he is unable to determine the future. But if the Senator will bear with me——

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator must misunderstand my question. What I want to know is whether this water is to be used in irrigating land owned by white men as well as land owned by Indians.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if the chairman of the committee will allow me——

Mr. ASHURST. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. There are no white men on this reservation. This is for the exclusive use of the Indians. There are no white men living on the particular area to be irrigated by this project.

Mr. NORRIS. Will not this happen when these lands are allotted and this reservation is opened up that there will be certain surplus lands that will be disposed of in some way, and white men as well as Indians may be able to get some of the lands?

Mr. GRONNA. If there are lands beyond the amount required for allotment to the Indians, of course the surplus lands will be sold to white settlers; but on this particular project, according to the statement made in the hearings, there are only Indians. In the next paragraph of the bill the Senator will find an item under which both whites and Indians will be benefited; but there is a provision in that paragraph which takes care of the Indians. It provides that a contract shall be made with the whites before any of the money is used in the construction of the dam and in the diversion of the water.

While I am on my feet, I wish to call attention to the fact that not only is this recommended by the Indian Bureau but it is strongly recommended by the Board of Engineers of the United States Army. A full report will be found in paragraph 217 of the report made by the Secretary of War. I do not think we should oppose this legislation. It is for the benefit of the Indians, and so far as this particular item is concerned, it is entirely for the benefit of the Indians, and not for the white settlers, because the only white men who are now on that reservation are a few licensed traders; but no white men own land on that particular reservation, according to the statement made by the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand the Senator from North Dakota, he does not agree with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. There is so much confusion that I am unable to hear what is being said on that side of the Chamber.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senate is not in order. We are utterly unable to hear, on this side of the Chamber anything that is going on.

Mr. ASHURST. It is not the Senators who are making the confusion; it is those entitled to the floor who are not Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained, and would have been at almost any time during the last two days.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me make a brief statement, and then the Senator will get the idea in my mind. I have listened to the debate on this paragraph. I do not want the Senator to get the idea that I am opposing it.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, not at all.

Mr. NORRIS. I want information in regard to it.

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that it is due to the Senate that we should have some information that I have not yet heard.

We have a provision here that this fund shall be reimbursable as Congress may hereafter determine. Now, if this is going to irrigate Indian lands only, and there is not any opportunity for white men to come in and get the land, I am not so much concerned about the provision in regard to reimbursing the fund. I would not object to using some of the money to improve the Indian land; but if this land later on, when the allotment time comes, may be assigned or sold, and white men may get in and get the benefit of it, then it seems to me we ought to guard now and have no doubt about whether or not these men are going in there and getting lands for nothing that the Government, at the expense of the Treasury, has put water on and irrigated or prepared for irrigation.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will pardon me, does he think that possible?

Mr. NORRIS. I am trying to find out. The Senator just laughs. He has been doing that with other items. He asks a question, and then he laughs about it.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator permit me to answer his question?

Mr. NORRIS. I am trying to get an answer to it. The Senator said first that the white man would get some of the land. The Senator from North Dakota says he will not.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will yield to me for just a moment, I do not wish to be misunderstood. I said in this particular project——

Mr. NORRIS. That is all I am talking about.

Mr. GRONNA. In this particular project it is contemplated to irrigate Indian lands only, and there are no white people living on that particular land. Only Indians are occupying those lands. That was my statement.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, this land is not allotted now.

Mr. GRONNA. No; it is not allotted.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose eventually it will be allotted. Will there be more land then than will go in allotments to the Indians? Will there not be a portion of it settled up, as there usually is in the opening up of Indian reservations, by white men?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. There are approximately 3,000 Indians on this land, who own it, and I think there are about 50,000 acres to be irrigated. I am not so sure about that. The chairman will explain that more fully; but I do not want my statement misconstrued. I said that on this particular project it was contemplated to irrigate Indian lands only. In the paragraph following the project is for both white and Indian lands.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; I understand that; but I am not asking any questions about the next paragraph now. I am confining my questions entirely to this one. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." We will get to the next one after a while.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. Possibly, by discussion at least, we may have some light upon this subject. At the present time this particular project is entirely for the benefit of the Indians. There are no white men or others than Indians at present that will derive any benefit from it. If the Senator from Nebraska will notice the appropriation made, the appropriation now provided is $50,000. Under the report of the Army Engineers it is estimated that the ultimate cost of this entire project will be not over $160,000. The appropriation at present asked and granted by this committee amendment is $50,000. That is for the benefit of the Indians. It will undoubtedly be true, I presume, that after the allotment to all the Indians in severalty of such lands as they can take care of, the surplus lands may be disposed of for the benefit of the Indians, reimbursing, possibly, the cost of the entire project, even if it amounts to the estimate of $160,000; but that can not be done without affirmative action. The Secretary of the Interior can not invite settlers to come within the confines of an Indian reserve and take up unallotted lands.

That must be done by some affirmative action. What authority now would any white man have for going at this time upon an Indian reservation and making a settlement? He would be ejected by the Indian police. That is not allowed at all. The Indians' reserved, unallotted land can only be thrown open by an act of Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand.

Mr. FALL. Of course, I knew the Senator understood that. This has never been done. No such act of Congress has ever been passed with reference to lands wholly within an Indian reserve. It remains with us as to whether we will approve any scheme which the Secretary of the Interior will inaugurate for the disposal of the lands.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. None of these lands would be disposed of, of course, without an act of Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we all understand that. There is no dispute about it. I want to say the information as I gather it now, putting together what the Senator said, is that at the present time there is not any opportunity for a white man to get any of this land. I never had any doubt about that. I knew it would take an act of Congress to open it. But later on there may be an act of Congress. It may be found that there will be an excess of land when it comes to allotting it to the Indians, and the law that makes provision for it will provide some method by which the white man will go in and get some of this land eventually. The question will arise at that time with the white man who would go in and get this land. At the expense of the Treasury of the United States we put it under irrigation. Will they say, when we come to that legislation, you ought not to charge anything; because we are not going to charge the Indian land with the expense of putting it under irrigation, we ought not to be any better to the Indian than to the white man, and therefore there is attempt at least, or an excuse, in the legislation for a foundation to give to people land that had been irrigated at the expense of the Government, because they will say, "Here, this provides that it should be reimbursable, as Congress may hereafter provide."

I take it from the discussion here that when the land is irrigated Congress may say we will not require the Indian to pay for the expense of putting the land under irrigation, and I might be in favor of that. I want to be as liberal as I can with the Indians on this land, but if a part of the land taken by the Indians is taken by the white man, later on when we pass the act that opens up this reserve, then the argument would be made that we should treat them both alike, which, of course, would be contrary to the policy we have always pursued in requiring in the Reclamation Service. Whenever we have reclaimed any desert land we have always required the man who got the land to pay the expense.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. I want to finish what I have to say. It is said by the Senator from North Dakota and referred to in the paragraph itself that this construction shall be begun in accordance with the report of the Board of Engineers as found in House Document No. 791, where it is claimed that a full explanation is made. I have that document in my hand, and I want to read paragraph 217 and see how much information that is.

217. The board recommends—

(a) That the San Carlos irrigation project, as described in this report, be adopted and carried out by the United States, provided it shall appear, either as the result of an adjudication or of competent legal opinion, as Congress may elect, that the legally available water supply is sufficiently close to that assumed in this report to make the cost of the project not more than $75 per acre.

Has any of that been done? Has there been any such legal opinion as Congress determined? Have we had an adjudication as outlined here or are we going ahead without what this particular document asks us to do to make it available?

Reading further, now, from paragraph 217:

(b) That suit for an adjudication of water rights along the Gila River be immediately brought in the United States district court (the United States being a party to the suit) and that every other step be taken which will hasten an early adjudication.

Has that been done? Has the suit been brought? I have heard nothing about it. Has it been adjudicated as recommended in paragraph 217, which seems to be the foundation of this item? I have not heard anything about it. Ought we not to be enlightened on it? I take it, as we have heard nothing of the kind, that nothing of that kind has been done.

Reading further from paragraph 217:

(c) That such executive and legal steps be taken as may be necessary to prevent the vesting of any water rights in addition to those, if any, now existing.

Has that been done? Has anybody claimed there have been any steps of that kind taken?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is what this act would do if you let us pass it.

Mr. NORRIS. There is not anything in this paragraph that would do it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me read further from paragraph 217:

(d) That in case the project is not undertaken until after an adjudication, a diversion dam on the reservation (par. 171) be constructed to improve irrigation conditions on the Pima Reservation.

I have read the entire paragraph 217, which seems to be the foundation for this Senate committee amendment. I am not saying that it is wrong; it may be all right, but it seems to me that it ought to be in one respect at least more definite. We ought to have a little more information. How much land is going to be irrigated? I believe the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] asked a very pertinent question when he asked, Have the Indians been consulted? He claimed they had not been consulted. I suppose they have tribal relations there. It seems to me they ought to be consulted about this matter.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They have no such thing.

Mr. NORRIS. They must have something. If they have not any Indians there this is all bosh anyway; it is not necessary to follow what this was in letters or anything of that kind, but at least I think we ought to determine here definitely whether we are going to have this reimbursed or not. I do not know that I am opposed to it. If we knew something about the ultimate cost of it we would be able to say whether it was a practicable proposition or not. From all I have heard it may be entirely impracticable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 20, to insert:

For beginning the construction of a dam and necessary controlling works for diverting water from the Gila River at a site above Florence, Ariz., for the irrigation of Indian land and allotments on the Gila River Indian Reservation and private lands in Pinal County, Ariz., as estimated by the Board of Engineer Officers of the United States Army in paragraph 138 of its report to the Secretary of War, of February 14, 1914 (House Doc. No. 791), $75,000, to remain available until expended, reimbursable as Congress may hereafter provide, the total cost not to exceed $175,000: Provided, That before beginning construction the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe such rules and regulations and take such other action as in his opinion may be proper and necessary for the purpose of securing for the Indians of the Gila River Reservation the benefits from such work to which they are legally and equitably entitled, and to enable the United States to control the diversion and distribution of water by said works and canals receiving water diverted thereby; and he may require of the owners of other lands to be benefited thereby agreements for the payment of the charges which he is hereby authorized to fix for diversion of water by said dam.

Mr. LANE. I raise a point of order that that amendment does not properly belong here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That it is general legislation?

Mr. LANE. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the letter of the Interior Department urging this amendment be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 28, 1915.

MY DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: I have received your communication of January 19, 1915, requesting report upon a proposed amendment to the Indian bill making an appropriation of $75,000 for beginning the construction of a dam and necessary controlling works for diverting water from the Gila River at a site above Florence, Ariz., for the irrigation of Indian land and allotments on the Gila River Indian Reservation and private lands in Pinal County, as estimated by the Board of Engineer Officers of the United States Army in its report to the Secretary of War, page 46, paragraphs 136–138, House Document 791, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

This report describes the situation with regard to the diversion dam which it will be necessary to construct in order to utilize the waters of the Gila River when the San Carlos Dam is built. However, the usefulness of this diversion dam does not depend entirely upon the construction of the San Carlos Reservoir, because for many years past considerable areas of land have been irrigated by diversion through various headings of the flood flow of the Gila River above Florence. To irrigate the lands of the Pima Indian Reservation upon the south side of the Gila River at the upper or eastern end of the reservation will require the construction of such dam in order to conserve the flow of the river to as great an extent as possible.

The proposed site, about 12 miles above Florence, is at the mouth of a series of canyons through which the river flows uninterruptedly from San Carlos, but from this point on the river course is through a broad, flat valley, with an immense river bed consisting of broad deep deposits of silt and gravel. When the flow of the river is low, and when, of course, water is most valuable, the stream disappears entirely, soon after emerging from the mountains above Florence.

Aside from the use which the Indian reservation may eventually make of this diversion dam, practically all of the landowners off the reservations who have been irrigating in this vicinity may receive their supply of flood water from this point of diversion.

The Gila River has just experienced one of the most disastrous floods in its history, and all the headings of the various canals above Florence have been washed away, and the earth covering through which these canals ran has been entirely removed, so that these channels can not be again constructed. The superintendent of the reservation reports also that at least one canal heading for the Indian reservation, on the south side of the river, is washed out, and the large canal known as the Little Gila has been very badly damaged. The land which this canal supplies with water could be reached from channels heading at the diversion dam which it is proposed to build, and when so supplied would be past all danger of future damage or destruction.

The white owners who have suffered by the recent floods might possibly secure means of constructing a dam at the point mentioned, thus insuring to themselves immunity from a recurring flood, but it might be necessary for the Government to oppose such a step in order to protect the water right now claimed for the Indians.

While there is no doubt but that, as a matter of law, the Pima Indians have a prior right to the waters of the Gila River as against all other appropriators on that stream, yet they have not been receiving a sufficient quantity of water to irrigate their lands for lack of the physical means of obtaining the same. The construction of a diversion dam at this point will give the Indians an advantage of location that they have not heretofore enjoyed, because the Government of the United States will thus actually control the only feasible point where the waters of the Gila may be diverted. The Indians are entitled to control this strategic position in order to adequately preserve and perpetuate the Government's claim to water in their behalf, and for this reason alone, whether the San Carlos Reservoir is ever constructed or not, this appropriation is amply justified.

The cost of the diversion dam itself is estimated by the Board of Army Engineers as $150,000, and an additional item of $25,000 should be included in order to make the necessary excavation through the rock heading, so that connection may be made with the present canal systems of the Florence district. The site of the proposed diversion is an ideal one compared with others along the Gila River, as on both sides of the river are massive outcroppings of rock. The river bed is comparatively narrow and confined between hills to this one channel, and a railroad upon which to bring in supplies and material parallels the river at this point, so that the cost would be the minimum for such work. The railroad track is high enough above the river so that no interference with its operation will result even after the dam is built. The dam will not be high enough for storage purposes, but simply a low weir a few feet above the normal surface of the river, so that water may be properly diverted into the canal and that all of the flow at the low stages, when the water is most valuable and which occur for long periods, may be available.

It is recommended that the proposed amendment receive favorable consideration by Congress.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Hon. H. F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Chair sustains the point of order—and I am not complaining of that—I want to say the only right in the world which will ever secure to the Indians the water rights suggested by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] is dependent on this very section of the bill. It was the only thing that would save the Indian the water.

It was because between this proposed dam and this diversion dam there are vested rights to water. People have been using it for the last 35 years. This is to carry the water from above through these same canals to the lower diversion dam and to give the surplus caught by the upper dam to the Indians below. Now, are the great friends of the Indian acting with peculiar wisdom and foresight, as the Senator has painted the picture in Montana, making a point of order against this bill? That is the only object of it. The only purpose is to do something for the Indians. I do not know from what source this misinformation has come. Certainly it has come from no white man or no sensible Indian living in the State of Arizona. Certainly it has come from no one in the Interior Department; certainly from no sensible person engaged in the Indian Department.

I only rise now to make this protest here, so that the people in Arizona may know who are trying to help these Indians, and that, in spite of all reason and common sense, some gentlemen rise knowing more about it than we who are interested in it and make points of order on things necessary to the very bread and butter of these Indians. If the Senator had known what he was talking about, he would not have done it. He has gotten his information from a source absolutely unreliable. I asked for information from whence it came, and I have not gotten it. The Senator is mistaken. I only regret not what the Senator did, but I am regretting the poison that somebody by misinformation has placed in the Senator's mind, for he is killing the very people's interest that he intends with all his good heart to protect. He makes a point of order that cuts off the Indian from any possible use of the water of the Gila River, and while the point of order is in operation, for two more years, the very water we are trying to save by appropriation will be taken by private enterprise and the Indian will not get enough to fill this inkwell. That is the condition which will exist along the Gila River by the point of order the Senator makes. I wish he would withdraw it.

Mr. LANE. The Senator appeals to me so politely and in such an amiable and kindly manner it is all I can do to resist granting his request. His remarks, I guess, are all right, parliamentarily speaking; but now I will just say for his information and for the information of the other Members of the Senate present, that these reclamation schemes where the rights of whites and Indians are involved have not been managed to the benefit and interest of the Indian. I have seen some of them; I know about them personally, and I am not misinformed in a general way. In a general way these conditions ought to be put a stop to until a different system is adopted, and I am going to try to stop it as far as I can.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I understand this paragraph has been ruled out on a point of order, but I want to say, in addition to what has been said by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], that exactly the difficulty which has resulted in litigation and which must result prejudicial to the interests of the Indians is intended to be covered by the Department of the Interior by this legislation in the appropriation bill. As has been said, Mr. President, the right of the Indians, if they have any, to open this reservation is going to be absolutely lost. The country is settling up around the Indian reserve. The available water for irrigation purposes in the southwestern part of the country is worth its weight in gold. It is running away to-day, and every drop of it which goes without being utilized for agricultural purposes is so much lost, and forever lost, to the human race. The people who are going in there from California and from the eastern portion of the United States and settling up the great southwestern country, and particularly around the Indian reservations in Arizona and New Mexico, are acquiring under the laws of the State water for irrigation purposes which once granted to them will not be taken back by the United States intervening through its courts or otherwise. Any attempt to deprive those settlers of the rights which they are now acquiring to the water would be resisted and successfully.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Under the statutes of the different States, when we take out water before the Government takes it out for the Indians, neither the Federal nor State Government takes it away from the man who gets it.

Mr. FALL. There is not any such right in any tribunal, unless the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in an unbroken line of very many years are to be entirely overturned by some new decision to the contrary. There are several very disastrous consequences, Mr. President. The settlers around these Indian reservations operate under the law by the actual use of the water, the beneficial use, which of course is the measure of the title. The settlers operating their titles have been brought into the United States courts thereunder to have them adjudicated. When the Congress of the United States undertakes to enact legislation hereafter it may undertake to follow some of the decisions which have been rendered with reference to the rights of the Indians to that water upon an Indian reservation; and if they do not very carefully distinguish, as some of the officials of the Interior Department have not distinguished, between treaty rights with the Indians and other rights as to the preservation of the water right, litigation will ensue to determine not only the right of the individual citizen claiming the water but of the entire community generally.

Now, in justice to the Indians, the Indian lovers here—those who talk so much about protecting the Indian and wanting to do justice to him—had better commence to follow the advice of the Interior Department or the Indian will have nothing upon which he can subsist in the great reservations of the Southwest except the bare ground itself. They will never make the Indian a self-supporting agriculturist unless they commence now. In a few years there will not be a drop of water that flows through those Indian reserves which will not be appropriated away forever.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] just made an observation which I hope every Senator will remember. The Senator said that unless we pay attention to the recommendations of the Interior Department in the matter of securing Indian rights we will some day regret it. The Senator spoke well; he spoke truthfully. I regret to see Senators, who, I believe, are honestly trying to cope with the Indian problem and are trying to do the best they can for the Indians, sit here oppressed with misinformation and make point of order after point of order. With good motives in their hearts they think they are trying to secure water rights for the Indians; but the day will come when they will suffer remorse that they permitted their misinformation and ignorance on this question to prevent us legislating properly for the Indian. The committee is trying to conserve the Indians' rights.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have stood before the Indian Committee and before Congress for some time past insisting that the rights of citizens of the United States should be protected when they have sought to be encroached upon by any official of the Government under claim of service to the Indians. I am standing here to-day, as I have stood here before and as I shall continue to stand, to urge that the rights of the Indian shall be protected and that justice shall be done him. We have allotted him land upon the reservation. In our southwestern country there is no man teaching the Indian, except in a desultory way through stock raising, how to make a living upon the reserve except by the Department of Agriculture. Agriculture can only be developed in our part of the country through the use of water for irrigation. On the great number of Indian reserves in New Mexico and Arizona the annual rainfall is less than 8 inches. It is impossible by dry-farming methods or otherwise to raise anything whatsoever upon which the Indian can subsist. They have been herded upon those reservations, heretofore supported by beef and rotten flour furnished by contractors under contract with the United States Government. Congress and the Interior Department are endeavoring to make the Indian self-supporting, and the Interior Department has outlined a general program of irrigation on this very reservation.

As I have said, the water rights are being acquired by appropriation. Under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, following the old civil law in our western country, where agriculture is pursued by irrigation, the Indian or American or Chinaman, the prior appropriator of water from a running stream for beneficial purposes, whoever he may be, becomes absolutely the owner of the right to the use of that water, and no power under heaven can deprive him of that right so long as he continues to use it for beneficial purposes. He becomes the absolute proprietor in every sense of the word, subject simply to abandonment in the event he does abandon it, or not continuing to use it for such beneficial agricultural purposes. This law of prior appropriation applies particularly against the purchaser, against the white man. The law of abandonment applies as well against the Indian as against the white man. You are now asked to enable these Indians to protect themselves against the gradual acquisition of water rights by the settlers who are going in around those reserves. You are asked to adopt some comprehensive legislation, and I do not know how else you would get it except in the appropriation bill itself. This appropriation is asked for that particular purpose. Now, you will not grant it; you rule it out on a point of order, and the Indian loses his water rights, and then you will come in here asking the Congress of the United States to appropriate great sums, which it should appropriate, to reimburse the Indian in some way for the loss of his water rights, which you by your vote, following the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior, could have prevented.

This provision is reimbursable out of the Indian fund. The water right is so valuable they now ask $175,000 for development, and when they come in and ask you to reimburse them you must do it by taking care of the poor, poverty-stricken wretch. I tell you he has no funds with which to support himself; he has no property out there by which he can ever reimburse it. If you now follow the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior, you make his property valuable, and it will pay back every cent, and the United States Government loses nothing.

What is here suggested is a shortsighted, foolhardy policy. I think a Senator who claims to have any human sympathy in his heart in his desire to do what is right should certainly consider a long time before making a point of order on this matter.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21328) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. HAY, Mr. DENT, and Mr. KAHN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21328) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. DU PONT conferees on the part of the Senate.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21328) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 15, and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 18, and 20, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$3,000: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Lieut. Col. J. M. Carson, jr., Deputy Quartermaster General United States Army (now colonel, Quartermaster Corps), the sum of $1,975 disallowed on vouchers 7A and 8A of his money accounts for the month of May, 1909, and now standing against him on the books of the Treasury"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For repairs of the docks and wharves at West Point, N. Y., including all necessary labor and material therefor, $8,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
HENRY A. DU PONT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES HAY,
S. HUBERT DENT, Jr.,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this transition scene was so sudden that I am at a loss to comprehend exactly what is happening. I have no disposition to delay the consideration of the conference report, but I will ask the Senator to give a brief explanation of just what has happened to this bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say, Mr. President, that practically nothing has happened to it except to reduce some of the amounts which the Senate committee put in, and which items were passed by the Senate. We have reduced the items about one-third. The Senate committee and the Senate itself increased the original House bill by about $80,000, and the conference committee reduced it to about $45,000 or $50,000. That is practically what the amendments amount to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the Senator having charge of the Indian appropriation bill has consented to yield to me to present a report of the committee of conference on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21318) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 23, 24, 26, 27, 33, 36, 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 45, 46, 47, 53, 54, 56, 57, 58, 61, 62, 64, 69, 70, 71, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, and 79.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 25, 29, 31, 35, 38, 44, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 59, 60, 67, 73, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, and 85, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Transpose the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment to page 11 of the bill, after line 7; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Connecting parkway between Rock Creek and Potomac Parks: To enable the commission created by section 22 of the public-buildings act approved March 4, 1913, to survey the exact boundaries of the lands now desired to be embraced in a connecting parkway between Potomac Park and Zoological Park and to submit a map showing in detail such survey and indicating the changes proposed thereby as compared with the map now on file in the office of the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia dated May 17, 1911, $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the number inserted by said amendment insert the following: "eighty-two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,483,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,698,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$631,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$825,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$13,530,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$25,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$65,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. J. FITZGERALD,
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
F. H. GILLETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It seems to me we ought to have other Members of the Senate here. I know nothing about the report myself. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Hardwick	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.
Bryan	Hitchcock	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Burleigh	James	Nelson	Sterling
Camden	Jones	Norris	Stone
Catron	Kenyon	Page	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kern	Penrose	Swanson
Chilton	La Follette	Perkins	Thomas
Clapp	Lane	Poindexter	Thompson
Clark, Wyo.	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth	Tillman
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Townsend
Fall	Lippitt	Shields	Walsh
Fletcher	Lodge	Simmons	Warren
Gallinger	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Gore	McLean	Smith, Ga.	White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have been told that a conference report on the sundry civil bill has been presented to the Senate and read.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It has.

Mr. LODGE. I did not hear it, and so I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia about one Senate item in which I feel a great deal of interest. I wish to ascertain what has been done with it. I refer to the amendment relating to the extension of the parkway connecting the Potomac River Park with the Rock Creek Park. What has been done with that amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the amendment put on the bill by the Senate in reference to that matter was not agreed to, but a modified provision was made, which, I think, will answer the purpose. It simply authorizes the Park Commission—which has been heretofore organized, composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of Agriculture—to have a survey made, showing exactly the changes that are desired, and an appropriation of $5,000 is provided to defray the expenses of such survey.

Mr. LODGE. Is that in the report?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to look at it.

[A copy of the conference report was handed to Mr. LODGE and examined by him.]

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It will lead to a little delay, but it will enable Congress to act with knowledge of the changes which are desired.

Mr. LODGE. I do not wish to see anything done that will put a stop to that work, which, I think, is almost more important to the city of Washington than anything else that has been proposed

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I regret that the conferees on the part of the House were not willing to trust the park commissioners and the Commission of Fine Arts—I was willing to trust them—to fix the limits of the proposed parkway. They said they would prefer to see the lines before they became final. The amendment is No. 22.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senate committee amendment was an excellent one.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I regret the disagreement exceedingly. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that the adoption of the Senate amendment would have facilitated the matter. It threw around it every safeguard that, in my judgment, reason and prudence required, but the House conferees desired to see exactly what changes in the map were desired. The amendment agreed on provides that those changes shall be reported.

Mr. LODGE. In the opinion of the Senator from Virginia, this will not interfere with the intention of the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It will not interfere with it, but will facilitate the final work. It is merely a matter of temporary delay.

Mr. LODGE. It will not stop the work?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Not at all.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has received a telegram from the president of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition extending an invitation to the Congress of the United States to visit that exposition. The telegram will be printed in the RECORD.

The telegram is as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., February 26, 1915.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

The Panama-Pacific International Exposition, authorized by the Congress of the United States as the official celebration by our Government of the opening of the Panama Canal, begs to extend to Congress a most cordial invitation to visit the exposition at an early date. We would feel honored in showing to Congress how the exposition has carried out the trust given to it by our Government. If it is not possible for the entire Congress to visit the exposition, I beg to express the sincere hope that a committee from Congress will make an official visit on behalf of Congress. I assure you of a most hearty welcome.

CHARLES C. MOORE,
President Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS (S. DOC. 959).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a letter from the Attorney General, submitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation claims amounting to $8,361, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

LIST OF JUDGMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 958).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims amounting to $39,816.96, which have been presented to the department and require an appropriation for their payment, which, with accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

LIST OF CLAIMS (S. DOC. NO. 960).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, schedules of claims amounting to $199,027.83 allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

THE SMELTING INDUSTRIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, acknowledging the receipt of the resolution of the Senate of February 19 requesting the Attorney General to report to the Senate his findings and conclusions in the investigation conducted by the Department of Justice in the matter of illegal combinations in restraint of trade in the smelting industries and expressing his regret at being compelled to reply that it would be incompatible with the public interests for him to comply with the request, which was ordered to lie on the table.

DISTRICT JUVENILE COURT LAWS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, transmitting a supplement to his annual report to Congress for the fiscal year 1914 embodying the first report of the committee appointed to study the need for legislation affecting children in the District of Columbia, including drafts of the new juvenile court laws, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

TIME STUDY AND STOP-WATCH SYSTEM.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the secretary of the Associated Employers of Missouri, inclosing a copy of a resolution adopted by that association remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed amendment to the Army appropriation bill prohibiting the use in Government establishments of time study and premium-payment features of scientific management, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS (S. DOC. NO. 961).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of George M. Leahy, receiver of the New Orleans Mechanics' Society of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana v. United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the annexed findings by the court relating to the following causes:

The brig Atlantic, Jonathan Dalton, master (H. Doc. No. 1621); and

The vessel Orion, William P. White, master (H. Doc. No. 1622).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21037) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution relating to the prevention of floods in the Mississippi River Valley.

Whereas the frequent floods of the Mississippi River, caused by waters from 31 States, embracing more than 41 per cent of the total area of the United States, result in great loss of human lives in portions of the States of Illinois, Tennessee, Kentucky, Mississippi, Missouri, Arkansas, and Louisiana, and large money losses, not only in such afflicted territory, but in other portions of the Nation; and

Whereas it has been declared by every member of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army who has dealt with such floods, by the Mississippi River Commission, and by other commissions appointed by Congress that such floods can be prevented at a reasonable cost; and

Whereas the work of such flood prevention has been going on for many years in the least economical way and over two-thirds of its cost has been borne by the damaged sections, who can no longer cope with this gigantic problem without effective aid from the National Government; and

Whereas all political parties have declared in their campaign platforms that flood control of the Mississippi River is a national duty: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate of the State of Minnesota (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to fulfill this national duty at its next session and to enact such legislation as shall provide a separate and comprehensive plan for the prevention of such floods without delay. Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the Senate of the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Engrossed senate concurrent resolution No. 15.

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States.

Adopted, January 19, 1915.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a petition of sundry employees of the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed amendment to the Army appropriation bill prohibiting the use in Government establishments of time study and premium payment features of scientific management, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Xenia, Cincinnati, and Kalida, in the State of Ohio; of Topeka and Spearville, in the State of Kansas; of Baxter, Rochester, Curwensville, New Castle, New Galilee, North Braddock, Wilmerding, Dubois, Pittsburgh, Mercer, Bellevue, Erie, Connelsville, Parnassus, McKees Rocks, California, Greenfield, Cochranton, Butler, Uniontown, Charleroi, West Middlesex, Greenville, Scottdale, Volant, Mars, Duquesne, Houston, Hickory, Hooker, Swissvale, Sharpsburg, Mahaffey, Darlington, Pitcairn, and Lafton in the State of Pennsylvania; of Wessington Springs and Vermillion, in the State of South Dakota; of Chicago, Ill.; of Stockton, Cal.; and of Parkersburg, W. Va., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 2.

(By Senator Boner.)

To his Excellency Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, the honorable Secretary of War, and the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Washington:

We, your memorialist, the Senate of the State of Washington and the House of Representatives, representing the people of the State of Washington in the fourteenth legislature of said State, in regular session assembled, most respectfully represent, petition, and pray as follows: That—

Whereas the States of Washington and Oregon have many wealthy seacoast cities, towns, railroad and steamship terminals on the Pacific coast, wholly dependent upon the national seacoast fortifications for protection from invasion from the high seas; and

Whereas by the fifth biennial report of the State board of tax commissioners of the State of Washington it appears that the assessed valuation of all the taxable property in the State of Washington, assessed at 50 per cent of its appraised value, is in the sum of $1,025,460,942; that by the second biennial report of the tax commissioners of the State of Oregon the assessed valuation of all the taxable property in the State of Oregon is approximately as great as that of the State of Washington; and

Whereas there are three transcontinental railway systems operating trains in and out of Grays Harbor; that a very large passenger and freight traffic is handled by said systems daily to and from Grays Harbor to the North, South, and East; and

Whereas a substantial system of public roads for automobile and other travel has been constructed by Chehalis County, within its borders; that substantial automobile roads have been constructed from the beaches on both the north and south sides of Grays Harbor connecting with the State highway running east to Puget Sound and the Columbia River; and

Whereas the fortifications on Puget Sound and the Columbia River are so remote from any possible base that an invading enemy could select for its operations that they are wholly inadequate to protect the lives and property of the people of the States of Washington and Oregon from invasion from the Pacific Ocean through Grays and Willapa Harbors; and

Whereas the great strategic importance and possibilities of Grays and Willapa Harbors as a base for military operations in the Northwest are open, obvious, and apparent to the most casual observers; and

Whereas the strategic importance and possibilities of Grays and Willapa Harbors as a base of military operations in the Northwest and in southwestern Washington and northwestern Oregon have been recognized by such eminent authorities as Gens. Marion P. Maus and Homer Lea, of the United States Army; and

Whereas 58 per cent of the entire population of the State of Oregon and 61 per cent of the entire population of the State of Washington and seven-tenths of the wealth of both States is within six hours of the principal strategic sphere of the Northwest; that the strategic center midway between the centers of population in the States of Washington and Oregon commands all lines of railways that traverse said States north and south; that Grays and Willapa Harbors are but two hours to the west, the fortifications on the Columbia River are seven and one-half hours to the south, and the fortifications on Puget Sound are five and one-half hours to the north of said strategic sphere; and

Whereas Grays and Willapa Harbors are wholly without fortifications or military defenses of any kind, character, or description whatever; that said harbors are open to invasion in case of a foreign war; and

Whereas the whole of the States of Washington and Oregon are open and accessible to invasion from the Pacific Ocean through Grays and Willapa Harbors; that the fortification of said harbors is necessary to protect the lives and property of the people of said States in case of a hostile invasion from the Pacific Ocean; and

Whereas, experience and recent observation has demonstrated that a coast, city, town, harbor, or roadstead can not be safely defended from invasion from the high seas by naval squadrons or fleets; and

Whereas it appears by a letter from Acting Secretary of War Robert Shaw Oliver to Senator W. L. JONES, bearing date of December 2, 1912, that Gen. Marion P. Maus, as commanding general of the department of the Columbia, recommended the fortification of said harbors in his report to the War Department subsequent to the Army maneuvers during the summer of 1912 in Chehalis Valley and on Grays Harbor; that said maneuvers demonstrated the necessity for the fortifications of the said harbors; and

Whereas it appears that petitions for the fortification of Grays and Willapa Harbors were filed with Senator W. L. JONES during the Sixty-second Congress of the United States, which said petitions signed by taxpayers of the States of Washington and Oregon, that the petitioners thereof represented $332,898,097 of taxable property as assessed by the taxing officers of the several counties of said States and equalized by the State board of tax commissioners of both States; that said petitions were duly certified by the legally constituted taxing officers of said States, and that as so certified said petitions showed the amount of taxable property represented by each of said petitioners thereon and as set opposite the name of each of said petitioners; and

Whereas the assets represented by the following petitioners were not included in the above amount so certified as aforesaid: Ladd & Tilton Bank, Portland, Oreg.; First National Bank, Portland, Oreg.; National Bank of Commerce, Tacoma, Wash.; Fidelity Trust Co., Tacoma, Wash.; Pacific National Bank, Tacoma, Wash.; Dexter Horton National Bank, Seattle, Wash.; National Bank of Commerce, Seattle, Wash.; Seattle National Bank, Seattle, Wash.; Scandinavian-American Bank, Seattle, Wash.; Coffman, Dobson & Co., bankers, Chehalis, Wash.; Chehalis National Bank, Chehalis, Wash.; Security State Bank, Chehalis, Wash.; that many wholesale merchants and manufacturing corporations in the Northwest signed said petitions whose assets could not be shown by certificates of the taxing officers of said States; and

Whereas the following commercial bodies of the Northwest have, by resolutions duly and regularly adopted, found that the fortification of said harbors was a public necessity for the adequate protection of the lives and property of the people of said States, to wit, Portland Chamber of Commerce, Portland, Oreg.; New Seattle Chamber of Commerce, Seattle, Wash.; Aberdeen Chamber of Commerce, Aberdeen, Wash.; Montesano Chamber of Commerce, Montesano, Wash.; Spokane Chamber of Commerce, Spokane, Wash.; Olympia Chamber of Commerce, Olympia, Wash.; Centralia Chamber of Commerce, Centralia, Wash.; and the Hoquiam Commercial Club, of Hoquiam, Wash.

Therefore, for good cause shown, we, your memorialists, the Senate of the State of Washington, the House concurring, representing the people of the State of Washington in the fourteenth Legislature of the State of Washington, in regular session assembled, most earnestly petition the President of the United States of America, the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, the Secretary of War, and the Senators and Representatives from the State of Washington, to make suitable provision for adequate fortifications to protect the entrances of said harbors against any invasion from the Pacific Ocean that may be attempted in time of hostilities by any foreign power.

Mr. ROOT presented petitions of sundry citizens of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JONES presented petitions of sundry local unions of the American Federation of Labor of Bellingham, Everett, Seattle, Spokane, and Tacoma, all in the State of Washington, praying for the enactment of legislation to promote the welfare of American seamen, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of labor organizations of Everett, Malden, Olympia, Seattle, South Cle Elum, Bellingham, Bremerton, and Tacoma, all in the State of Washington, remonstrating against any change in the present locomotive-boiler-inspection law, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Everett, Wash., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Batesville, Ark., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of seven locks and dams on the upper White River in that State, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURLEIGH presented memorials of sundry citizens of Rockland, Me., remonstrating against the abolishment of the office of shipping commissioner at that port, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PERKINS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Mothers' Club of the Hillside School, of Berkeley, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the Fremont County Pomona and Milford Granges, Patrons of Husbandry, of Fremont County, Wyo., praying for the establishment of a system of rural credits, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. NORRIS presented petitions of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Eustis, and of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Mascot, in the State of Nebraska, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented petitions of Schiller Lodge, No. 92, I. O. O. F., of Middletown; of Club Vorwarts, of Middletown; of Hermann Lodge, No. 13, O. D. H. S., of Middletown, of members of Eintracht Lodge, No. 1, O. D. H. S., of New Britain; of K. u. K. Oesterreich-Ung. Militaer Verein, of New Britain; of members of the German School Society, of New Britain; of Deutscher Radfahrer Club Eichenbaub, of New Britain; of Deutscher Krieger Verein, of New Britain; of Deutsch-Ungarischer Militaer Verein, of New Britain; of members of Gerstacoker Lodge, No. 96, I. O. O. F., of New Britain; of Schwaben Verein, of New Britain; of Kranken Unterst Verein St. Stephanus, of New Britain; of Unstrian Singing Society, of New Britain; of Court Beethover, No. 119, F. of A., of New Britain; of the congregation of St. Thomas German Lutheran Church, of New Britain; of Vater Jahn Lodge, No. 301, D. O. H., of New Britain; of Leimsieder Club, of New Britain; of Admiral Schley Lodge, No. 32, O. D. H. S., of New Britain; of Eintracht Rebekah Lodge, No. 19, I. O. O. F., of Meriden; of Anna Ottenderfer Lodge, No. 64, D. O. H., of Meriden; of Augusta Lodge, No. 2, O. D. H. S., of Meriden; of Harmonia Lodge, O. D. H. S., of Meriden; of German-American Alliance of Torrington; of Torrington Lodge, 462, D. O. H., of Torrington; of Beethover Lodge, No. 22, O. D. H. S., of Torrington; of the congregation of the Evangelical Lutheran St. Paul's Church, of Torrington; of Germania Singing Society, of Torrington; of members of the Ansonia Maennerchor, of Ansonia; of Turn Verein of Derby; and of sundry citizens of Norwich, Hartford, New Britain, Meriden, New Haven, Kensington, Tracy, Plantsville, Torrington, Shelton, Derby, Wallingford, and Ansonia, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Civic League of Stamford, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of the Manufacturers' Association of Bridgeport, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Morris Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of East Haven, Conn., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12292) to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1050) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15869) to provide for the establishment and maintenance of mining experiment and mine safety stations for making investigations and disseminating information among employees in mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1052) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18086) to amend section 71 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 4, 1911, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1051) thereon.

MENTAL HYGIENE AND RURAL SANITATION.

Mr. RANSDELL. From the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 16637) to provide divisions of mental hygiene and rural sanitation in the United States Public Health Service, and I submit a report (No. 1049) thereon.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if any meeting of the committee has been held to consider that bill?

Mr. RANSDELL. I endeavored to get a meeting of the committee, but failed. A majority of a quorum of the committee, however, has authorized me to report the bill.

Mr. WORKS. I asked the question because I have some objection to a part of the bill, and I do not want it to be pushed. I had no knowledge of the fact that any action had been taken on the bill by the committee.

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir; I was authorized by a majority of the committee to make the report. I make the report, anyhow. I was going to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WORKS. I should object to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The bill will go to the calendar.

ELLEN WILSON MEMORIAL HOMES.

Mr. JAMES. For the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] I report back favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia Senate bill 7743, to incorporate the Ellen Wilson Memorial Homes. It proposes to acquire, hold, improve, rent, mortgage, sell, and convey real estate within the District of Columbia for building, in memory of the late Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, one or more blocks of sanitary houses for the working classes, and renting the same at a rental sufficiently low to cause the abandonment of dilapidated and insanitary houses, as an object lesson in the housing of the working classes under good conditions and at reasonable rates.

These homes are to be erected in memory of the late Mrs. Woodrow Wilson for her charitable and good work in behalf of the poor of the District of Columbia. It was the last toil of her beautiful life, and I sincerely trust that there will be no objection to the present consideration and passage of the bill. It is a most worthy and charitable measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PENROSE. Let the bill be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That George Foster Peabody, Hugh C. Wallace, Arthur Jeffrey Parsons, Walter S. Ufford, Archibald Hopkins, Julia C. Lathrop, Grace V. Bicknell, and Charlotte Everett Hopkins, their associates and successors, be, and they are hereby, created a body corporate and politic in the District of Columbia, by the name, title, and style of the Ellen Wilson Memorial Homes, and by that name shall have perpetual succession, and it shall be lawful for the said corporation to have a common seal, sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, and have and exercise all the rights, privileges, and immunities for the purposes of the corporation hereby created, which purposes are declared to be to acquire, hold, improve, rent, mortgage, sell, and convey real estate within the District of Columbia for building, in memory of the late Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, one or more blocks of sanitary houses for the working classes, and renting the same at a rental sufficiently low to cause the abandonment of dilapidated and insanitary houses, as an object lesson in the housing of the working classes under good conditions and at reasonable rates: Provided, That the value of any and all property so acquired shall not exceed the sum of $500,000: Provided further, That no land shall be acquired or house built thereon except of the character hereinbefore described.

SEC. 2. That the capital stock of said corporation shall be $25,000, divided into 250 shares of the par value of $100 each, and when said amount shall have been subscribed the said corporation shall be fully authorized and empowered to commence business: Provided, That said capital stock may be increased by the sale of additional stock from time to time, but the total issue thereof shall not exceed the sum of $500,000: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for the officers or directors of said corporation to declare any greater dividend to the stockholders than 5 per cent per annum upon the capital stock outstanding at the time of such dividend.

SEC. 3. That the affairs of the corporation shall be managed by a board of directors consisting of 15 persons, who shall for the first year be elected by the incorporators, hereinbefore named, and thereafter said board shall be elected annually in such manner as may be provided by the by-laws of the corporation, and such board of directors shall have power to ordain, establish, and put into execution such rules, regulations, ordinances, and by-laws as they may deem essential for the good government of the corporation, not contrary to the laws and the Constitution of the United States or of this act, and generally to do and perform all acts, matters, and things which a corporation may or can lawfully do.

SEC. 4. That Congress reserves the right to repeal, alter, or amend this act.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADVERTISEMENTS BY PATENT ATTORNEYS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. By direction of the chairman of the Committee on Patents, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 7427) prohibiting the use of the name of any Member of either House of Congress or of any officer of the Government by any person, firm, or corporation practicing before the Patent Office in advertising his business, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation practicing before the Patent Office to use the name of any Member of either House of Congress or of any officer of the Government in advertising the said business.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect three months after its date.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I wish to request that a letter from the Secretary of the Interior relative to the bill just passed be printed as a part of the report thereon from the committee, and that it also be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1915.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR JAMES: Senate bill No. 7427, introduced on January 26, 1915, and making it unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation practicing before the Patent Office to use the name of any Member of Congress or other officer of the Government in advertising the said business, was drafted in this office.

It is the opinion of the office, after years of experience, that the use of the names of Members of Congress and other officers of the Government by attorneys practicing before it is injurious to the public service and the cause of much dissatisfaction.

Whether considered as a class or individually, the advertising attorneys do not merit the special prominence and advantage which these letters of recommendation give them.

Moreover, we find evidence indicating that the indorsements by Members of Congress and officers of the Government impress people, particularly those who are inexperienced in the patent business and likely to be attracted by advertisements, with the belief that the attorneys so recommended can have the assistance and influence of the public officers in prosecuting the cases to satisfactory issue. It is not intended to suggest that the attorneys cultivate this impression, but merely that it arises spontaneously in the minds of the readers of the advertisements.

Respectfully,

THOMAS EWING, Commissioner.

Approved.

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

DANIEL B. LUTEN.

Mr. JAMES. I submit a resolution with a favorable report from the Committee on Patents, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 513, submitted by Mr. BRISTOW on January 8, 1915, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents, or a subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to inquire, investigate, ascertain, and report as to the issuing of patents to Daniel B. Luten from 1900 to the present time, and particularly to inquire, investigate, ascertain, and report as to the fraudulently obtaining of the patents and the illegality of their issuance.

Resolved further, That said committee or a subcommittee thereof is hereby empowered to summon witnesses, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to take and secure whatever testimony and evidence may be required to ascertain and report upon the matters aforesaid; and said committee or a subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized for the purposes aforesaid to sit wherever necessary and act as well when Congress is not in session as when in session.

Resolved further, That the said committee is hereby directed to report the result of its said investigation and inquiry to the Senate at as early a date as is practicable; and the expenses incurred by such investigation and inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire whether the resolution has been to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. JAMES. It has not been referred to that committee. I ask that the reported resolution be received and that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will have to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It provides for the payment of money.

Mr. JAMES. It does; and I ask that it take that course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. SHAFROTH subsequently said: From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably with an amendment Senate resolution 513, to investigate the issuing of patents to Daniel B. Luten from 1900 to the present time, submitted by Mr. BRISTOW on January 8, 1915, and I ask for its present consideration.

The amendment of the committee was, on page 1, line 10, after the word "and," where it occurs the second time, to insert "employ a stenographer at not to exceed $1 a printed page."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 7745) granting an increase of pension to Julia Jackson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 7746) granting an increase of pension to Terrence Dobson (with accompanying paper); to the committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 243) to extend the time for the construction of a dam across the Pend O'Reille River, Wash., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

FRANK VUMBACA.

Mr. BURLEIGH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $419 for the relief of Frank Vumbaca, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 21546), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20643) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21089) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 3, under the head of "California," on page 23, line 21, after the word "employees," to strike out "$42,000" and insert "$47,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Indians in California, including pay of employees, $47,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 21, to insert:

For the purchase of lands for the homeless Indians in California, including improvements thereon, for the use and occupancy of said Indians, $30,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, said funds to be expended under such regulations and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill whether any estimate was made for that appropriation? It seems to me that the Government of the United States owns land enough to take care of its homeless Indians without buying lands held in private control.

Mr. ASHURST. An estimate in the sum of $10,000 was made by the Interior Department. I hope that the distinguished Senator from Colorado, whom I honor so much for his desire to economize, will direct his attention to some other item rather than to this one. This is a most necessary item for the homeless Indians in California, who have in the evolution of time been deprived of their lands. It will require $30,000 to secure lands for them. Many men of humanitarian impulses—clergymen and publicists—came from California and appeared before the committee; indeed, I think the entire California delegation appeared before the committee also in this behalf. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not make a point of order as to the extra $20,000 herein provided.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to ask a further question of the Senator from Arizona. I think it is a very pertinent question which the Senator from Colorado asked—why not settle these Indians on land already belonging to the public domain or to Indian tribes? The fact is, as disclosed here in this and in one or two other cases, where Indians are already located, they can not readily be taken from that location. Many of them for a great many years have occupied these lands or other lands close to where it is proposed to purchase their homes. They claim title to them by right of possession to a large extent; they are there; and they can not well be placed elsewhere. Many times they do not belong to tribes, and they have no tribal rights in the reservation which otherwise they would share. Therefore the committee thought that this was the best and most humanitarian way of treating these Indians, and the sum of $30,000 seemed to be a sufficient amount to meet the necessities of the case.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the committee is actuated by the very best of motives in inserting this amendment in the bill; and from what has been said I shall not make the point of order against it, but it is amazing to me that, after the expenditure of millions of dollars in behalf of the Indians of the West, we are confronted by the fact that in the State of California, which has been a beneficiary of these expenditures very largely, there are now a lot of homeless Indians out there for whom the Government must provide homes, and that they can only be provided by purchasing land held in private hands. I do not know of a more eloquent commentary upon the unsuccess—I will not use a more harsh term—the lack of success that seems to have attended the administration of our Indian affairs.

I have no doubt that this action will be used, Mr. President, for the purpose of securing moneys to buy land for the homeless Indians in the other States throughout the Union. I have been tempted to make the point of order once or twice, but have refrained from doing so because of my respect for the committee and because I know the difficulties of the task that has confronted them; but, Mr. President, this bill, relatively speaking, carries an enormous appropriation. It exceeds the appropriations of the other House by over three and a half million dollars; it exceeds the estimates by over one and a half million dollars.

This is no time to indulge in unnecessary appropriations, in view of our falling revenues and of the certainty of a coming deficiency. There are a great many very desirable things that ought to be done for the Indians that are not exigent, and, as a consequence, I think this is a good time to postpone the making of so many different appropriations, in view of the drain that is necessarily going to be imposed upon the Treasury. If this were a measure supported solely upon this side of the Chamber, I should be tempted to oppose every appropriation not estimated for and against which a point of order could be made.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee in relation to this item, as to how many of these homeless Indians there are, and how long they have been homeless?

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to the question of the Senator, if my memory serves me accurately, I will say there are, I believe, so far as may be now ascertained, about a thousand of these homeless Indians in the State of California, although the authorities do not agree as to the number. One of the gentlemen who came before our committee said that he thought there were 2,000, another fixed the number at 1,200; but I believe about 1,000 or 1,200 would be the number.

Mr. KENYON. And is it proposed——

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will permit me, there are about 4,500 Indians who are yet unprovided for on reservation lands or by allotments on the public domain in any other manner.

Mr. KENYON. What is it proposed to do—to buy a little tract of land for each Indian, or to group them together in some way?

Mr. ASHURST. That would depend somewhat on the tribe, I think. In some instances land would be purchased, and they would hold the land jointly or in common; but where they have progressed to some degree of civilization they might have small allotments made to them if the land were cultivable or irrigable, but where the land was not rich enough for agricultural purposes, I presume it would be used for grazing purposes, and held in common by the Indians.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in that connection I wish to say that I notice in the Indian appropriation bill of last year that $10,000 was appropriated for the same purpose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But it was never expended.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the chairman of the committee how that $10,000 was expended?

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask if the appropriation is for the same Indians, and are they still homeless, notwithstanding that appropriation?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. The provision in the Indian appropriation bill of last year reads as follows:

> For the purchase of lands for the homeless Indians in California, including improvements thereon, for the use and occupancy of said Indians, $10,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, said funds to be expended under such regulations and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

I would like to know from the chairman of the committee for what purpose that $10,000 was spent?

Mr. ASHURST. I will try to answer that question. On page 521 of the hearings the question was discussed. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] asked this question:

> Senator TOWNSEND. We appropriated $10,000 last year?
> Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.
> Senator TOWNSEND. What did you do with that?

Mr. Meritt, who is the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, replied:

> That is being expended for lands for the homeless Indians of California.
> Senator TOWNSEND. Has it not been expended as yet?
> Mr. MERITT. The Indian appropriation bill did not become effective until the 1st of August, but we have a special agent going over the matter, and we shall expend that money before the close of the fiscal year.

Then the assistant commissioner says, as I have already intimated, that—

> There will then remain probably 1,500 Indians in California without land.
> Senator GRONNA. I find a justification for that on page 143 of the House hearings. It states that you have "expended approximately $145,000 in purchasing 6,793.51 acres of land."

Then Judge RAKER, of the House, interposed:

> Mr. RAKER. That is, from the beginning up to date?
> Senator PAGE. How much are you compelled to pay per acre for those lands?
> Mr. MERITT. We will have to pay more for lands in California in the future than we have in the past. The lands are going up all the time. We will have to pay between $30 and $40 an acre in order to get suitable lands for the Indians.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this only demonstrates to me the unwisdom of appropriating money and providing that it shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

Mr. ASHURST. There is no objection to striking out that language.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, an appropriation should never carry those words, in my judgment.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator move to strike out those words?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I think they ought to be stricken out of this amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. There is no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I move to strike out the words "and to remain available until expended."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona if I understood him correctly as saying that the sum of about $140,000 has heretofore been expended in California for this purpose?

Mr. ASHURST. The extract from the hearings from which I read indicated that from the beginning of the statehood of California down to this time $145,000 have been expended for this purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. For securing lands for homeless Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. I will read again from the hearings:

> Senator GRONNA. I find a justification for that on page 143 of the House hearings. It states—

That is the justification—that you have expended approximately $145,000 in purchasing 6,793.51 acres of land.

Mr. RAKER. That is, from the beginning up to date.

Mr. THOMAS. So it would seem that from the beginning up to date—and that expression is somewhat indefinite—the Government has expended nearly $150,000 in the purchase of lands for homeless Indians; and the Indians are still homeless, or at least a great many of them are, my recollection of the number being 1,500. Now, if it be true that the Government is committed to the policy in California of taking care of and providing lands for every Indian who is homeless, I am not surprised if the Indian who has a home to-day becomes homeless to-morrow, because he gets a fresh appropriation for more lands. There are a good many good white people in California, I imagine, who are homeless. There are some in my State, unfortunately, though very few; and I am not disposed, Mr. President, after this year, if I am here, to allow an appropriation of this kind to go unquestioned without some more information than has been given in this case.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in reply briefly to the Senator I will state that with this money lands have been provided for Indians numbering 19,000 in the State of California, located within 55 of the 60 counties of that State, and of this number approximately 15,000 are located in northern California.

Mr. THOMAS. And all those Indians, I presume, originally had their allotments?

Mr. ASHURST. No.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, what does the Senator understand by the term "homeless Indians"?

Mr. ASHURST. If I comprehend the English language, "homeless" means without a home.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I think there is no difference between the Senator's understanding of that word and my own, but it follows that wherever the Government finds an Indian without a home we must buy more land for him to give him a home; and then if he loses that the next year we will give him another one.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is entitled, however, to a better answer than the one I gave him.

Mr. THOMAS. I think not. I think the Senator gave a very good answer.

Mr. ASHURST. The term in this instance means that certain Indians in California have not had a reservation assigned to them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I was hoping that the Senator from Arizona would elaborate a little more the point as whether these Indians have any tribal relations. To what tribes do they belong, and do the tribes to which they belong have reservations elsewhere—I am asking for information—or are they merely individual Indians who do not belong to any tribe?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the status of some of the Indians in California is, I may say, sui generis. Under the Spanish system, California once being a Province of Mexico and formerly a Province of Spain, some of the Indians apparently did not have the tribal relations that we find existing among other Indians.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if I may answer the Senator from Wyoming further——

Mr. THOMAS. I will be glad to yield the floor with the reflection that I am very much afraid that as long as there is any money in the Treasury to be appropriated, there are going to be a lot of homeless Indians in California.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the only thing I wish to say in justification of the action of the committee—or at least of one member of the committee—is this: It was represented to us, and I think truthfully so, that there are many so-called homeless Indians in California, and this condition is not entirely confined, if I may dissent from the chairman of the committee, to California; but there are tribes or bands of Indians—hardly tribes, but bands of Indians—scattered over several of the States, quite as much entitled to the protection of this Government as are the Indians who have tribal relations and who have received large amounts of land in the form of reservations.

The department has pursued the policy for some years of trying to care for these dependent, homeless Indians. What I mean by a "homeless Indian" and what I understand the department means by a "homeless Indian" is an Indian who has no allotment, who has no tribal relations, who has no funds upon which he can draw for his support. He is absolutely destitute and dependent upon the Government itself.

California and one or two other States have these Indians within their borders, and the Government has undertaken to allot them tracts of land upon which they can make homes. This item is for the California Indians. My understanding is—I may be mistaken about that, but certainly I should have gone further into it if I had not understood it so, and I think I am correct—that when the Indian has been once granted a home, when this Government has purchased a home for the Indian, that forecloses his right to appeal to the Government for any further beneficence on the part of the Government. So that this plan is being adopted, and it was thought that $30,000 would very largely take care of those Indians who are now dependent and who are homeless and without means of support.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to strike out the words "and to remain available until expended" in the committee amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan a question. Have any of these Indians received any allotments in the past?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I stated a moment ago that it is my understanding that they have not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] striking out certain words in the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a letter addressed to the honorable Secretary of the Interior by F. G. and B. B. Collett, field secretaries, Indian Board of Cooperation, California, on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be placed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

JANUARY 26, 1915.

Hon. FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are taking this opportunity to ask your careful consideration of the fact that there are not only 1,568 homeless Indians in California—as shown on page 144 of the hearings of the House of Representatives for 1914 entitled "Land to be bought for California Indians"—but that there are others, and that there is no adequate provision being made to supply even that number with land for homes in the near future.

Besides those mentioned in the hearings referred to, there are approximately 118 Indians at Stewards Point, Sonoma County, without land; at Pleasanton there are 19 not provided for; at Colusa the allotment made was not adequate to provide even for a small acreage for every family, and some are compelled to live elsewhere. Others, from different localities, keep applying to our board to try and get land for them.

The $10,000 asked for this year is wholly inadequate and out of proportion with the immediate need.

To provide for the entire 2,550 acres, as estimated on the same page, as sufficient for the 1,568 Indians, it would take $54,825 at the average price previously paid per acre of $21.50, and the total estimated appropriation needed has only been $50,000. At the rate which the small appropriations of late years have made it possible to buy land, it will be many more years before these homeless, waiting Indians are provided for.

Your attention is called to page 143 of the House hearings to the analysis of expenditures for the year ending June 30, 1914. There was $1,297.90 expended in order to expend $1,125 for land. This economic breach was acknowledged in the same hearings to be on account of the smallness of the appropriation which made perplexity as to its wisest expenditure. "In the year ending June 30, 1913, there was land purchased only "For the Guidiville Band in Mendocino County, 43.12 acres, at a cost of $2,000; and for the Wappo Band in Sonoma County, 50 acres, at a cost of $2,500." A like small sum year by year, administered by one or another to whom the purchase of land is only a side issue, will carry this matter on almost indeterminably while the Indians with all their priority of claim suffer and die, homeless, and landless, without claim even to the 6 feet of soil in which they are buried.

Again, in this connection, it should be borne in mind that California land is increasing in value at an enormously rapid rate, and lands which could have been bought reasonably several years ago are almost fabulous now—as that of Colusa, which was bought for the Indians at $90 per acre about six years ago. The adjoining land now brings $250 per acre.

At this rate of increase it will take almost three times as much to buy the same amount of land six years from now.

Therefore, it is plainly a matter of economic import to the Government to make this year's appropriation for land sufficiently large to conclude the purchase of land as rapidly as possible; and it is also an action preeminently just to the California Indians, for it is to be remembered that under the Spanish and Mexican laws that controlled prior to the cession of the territory by Mexico to the United States the Indians' right of occupancy was recognized, and they could not be legally evicted.

Also, under this transfer, existing land titles were guaranteed by the United States Government. But there seems to be no record of more than two out of several hundred of these having been of any value, though these land grants contain thousands of acres of the most fertile land in California.

In the year 1851 a United States commission, duly authorized, secured the signatures of about 400 Indian chiefs to treaties. These chiefs represented approximately 150 bands or tribes, practically all of them located in California. There were 18 of these treaties, all similar in tenor. The terms of each treaty were substantially as follows:

The Indians agreed to:

(a) Cede their rights in the land to the United States Government.

(b) Keep the peace.

(c) Accept the sovereignty of the United States.

(d) Accept certain reservations, 18 in number, aggregating about 3,500,000 acres, described in said treaties by metes and bounds.

The Government agreed to:

(e) Pay the Indians certain sums in goods, amounting to about $2,500,000.

(f) Reserve in perpetuity, for the Indians' use and enjoyment, different reservations specified in said treaties.

(g) Provide as many schools and instructors as were needed by the Indians and keep them open as long as necessary.

The Senate of the United States failed to ratify these treaties, and the Government therefore quite properly considered them inoperative. But why did the Senate fail to ratify? Because certain influential gold miners, whose mining claims would be affected, used their influence against it.

However strange as it may seem, proceedings under them have been conducted by the Government exactly as if they were deemed in full force and effect, in so far as the Indians were to become obligated thereunder; but the Government has disposed of all the lands set apart as reservations under the proposed treaties, and denied the Indians their rights to interfere in any way.

But prior to the passage of the Indian allotment act in 1887, it was impossible for an Indian to acquire land in California from the public domain. The relief came too late to save the Indians' rights from the greed of the white settlers, backed by the provisions of the homestead laws. Eviction of Indians from lands they fully believed to be theirs under the treaties they had signed with the Government in 1851 became quite general until when relief came it was too late. Out of 210,000 of the earlier days but a miserable remnant of 20,000 are left, and the condition of these may be tersely summed up in the language of an old chief, who recently replied to a white friend who inquired after the welfare of his people, "52 years white man makes promise, no keep 'em; hope all gone."

By every court of the land these Indians are recognized as wards of the Federal Government, and as such should be amply provided for. However, it is a pitiful fact that they alone of all the Indians of the United States have not only never received anything for their lands but are still waiting year by year even for the little allotted space of ground for mere existence.

We therefore ask you, honorable Secretary, both as a Californian and as one interested in the cause of humanity, to urge an adequate appropriation this year for the purchase of land, and that the matter of purchase be carried forward with all possible speed.

Very sincerely,

F. G. & B. B. COLLETT,
Field Secretaries, The Indian Board of Cooperation, California.
(Temporary address, General Delivery, Washington, D. C.)

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 24, line 6, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$108,125; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $114,125" and insert "$118,125, of which sum not exceeding $10,000 may be used for general repairs and improvements to buildings," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 650 Indian pupils at the Sherman Institute, Riverside, Cal., including pay of superintendent, $118,125, of which sum not exceeding $10,000 may be used for general repairs and improvements to buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 12, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$20,500; for general repairs and improvements, $2,000; in all, $22,500" and insert "$24,100, of which sum not exceeding $2,000 may be used for repairs and improvements to buildings," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 125 Indian pupils at the Fort Bidwell Indian School, California, including pay of superintendent, $14,100, of which sum not exceeding $2,000 may be used for repairs and improvements to buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 19, to insert:

For reclamation and maintenance charge on Yuma allotments, $40,000, to be reimbursed from the sale of surplus lands or from other funds that may be available, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill whether any estimate has been made for that appropriation?

Mr. ASHURST. In response to the question of the Senator from Colorado I will say there was an estimate made for that item, but through error the item was omitted from the House bill. I will read the record of it if the Senator desires.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator need not do that.

Mr. ASHURST. It has been estimated for.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that in the past a number of the appropriation bills have carried the same amount in exactly the same words. Does the Senator understand that this is to be a continuing appropriation every year of the same amount; and if so, why should we appropriate $40,000 for this particular purpose? I notice in the appropriation bill of last year an identical item carrying a similar amount, and I have not seen anything in the hearings to justify it. I should like to know whether this item is to be carried in the appropriation bill year in and year out and never cease.

I know, Mr. President, that whenever an item gets into an appropriation bill it is a very difficult thing to get it out, and I think that we do not look after such matters closely enough. Perhaps there is some good reason for this, and perhaps $40,000 should be expended every year upon this project, but I believe the chairman ought at least to let us know the reason for it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely right about that. I will read from the hearings in regard to that, as follows:

This fund is required to meet the construction expenses incurred by the United States Reclamation Service in the irrigation of this reservation, and is similar to items of like nature occurring in previous appropriation bills.

I will also read a very short extract from the statement of Mr. W. M. Reed, chief inspector of irrigation, on page 149 of the hearings:

Mr. REED. The reason that we put that proviso in there is that during the past two years we objected somewhat to the payment that we have been making for maintenance and operation and construction, and we found that the laterals of the system built by the Reclamation Service were not yet far enough along to serve all of the lands that require water, and we have that proviso in order to withhold the payments until such time as the Indians are to have the water furnished. In the past we have made payments for construction upon laterals that were not built, and we have also made maintenance and operation payments for services that were not rendered. Therefore we have asked that this proviso in this particular case be placed in the bill.

Mr. CARTER. That provides that charges shall not be made against allottees until the water is placed on the land.

Mr. REED. It provides that charges shall not become due and payable until the water is available for use on the land.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I believe that it is necessary for the Government to assist the Indian in putting water upon his land, and I do not see any indication from the statement read that this appropriation will be any less for a number of years; but as it is reimbursable under the act of March 3, 1911, and it is specifically so stated, I presume the item is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, at the top of page 25, to insert, as a new section, the following:

FLORIDA.

SEC. 4. For support and civilization of Seminole Indians in Florida, including the purchase of such lands as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper, $10,000, of which $5,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill whether that item has been estimated for?

Mr. ASHURST. It has been estimated for by the department. It will be found on page 19 of the report of the committee.

Mr. THOMAS. This is for the support and civilization of Seminole Indians in the State of Florida. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Florida if the Seminole Indians of his State are not civilized yet. The State of Florida was admitted about 70 years ago, and the Seminole War occurred shortly afterwards; and consequently the process of civilization should have been accomplished by this time, it seems to me.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Seminole Indians in Florida, comprising some 650 to 1,000, have lived heretofore very largely in the southern part of the State, in what are known as the Everglades, about 4,000,000 acres down there covered most of the time with water. The Everglades are now being reclaimed by the State and the water taken off, and the Seminoles are losing the privileges which they have always enjoyed of having an abundance of game and otter and other things that have contributed to their support. We are trying now to get them interested in agriculture. The water is being taken off of their reservation. They have two or three little scattered pieces of land here and there, and it is becoming quite important that they devote their attention a little to producing something, rather than living off the game, the fish, and the water animals that heretofore were abundant in that region.

They are civilized in a way. Life has been a very easy proposition for them heretofore, because they had nothing to do but to fish and hunt; but now the civilization of the white man has taken possession of that area, and we find that it is necessary to civilize the Indian along a little different line, and teach him agriculture; and that is partly what this appropriation is for.

I will say that the commissioner down there is a very energetic and capable man, devoted to the cause of these Indians, and he actually applies part of his own compensation to their benefit, as shown by his letter. I hope the Senator will not raise any question upon this item. It has been estimated for, and it is a very small amount, but it is important for the benefit of these Indians.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have been greatly edified by the explanation of the Senator from Florida. I do not know much about the Seminole Indians. I have been down to Florida once or twice; I have had one or two of them pointed out to me, and they acted to me as though they were civilized. They were smoking, chewing, and swearing just like civilized people, and seemed to have all of those earmarks of enlightenment and civilization of which the Anglo-Saxon so justly boasts, so I am surprised that they are still to learn some of our other peculiarities, and that it requires some $10,000 to begin the work, because that is what it means. Next year, I presume, we will have to apropriate $10,000 more to continue the work of civilization and support.

I do not understand that I can object to this item, but, as was said by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] a few moments ago, whenever an appropriation of this sort is injected into an appropriation bill it becomes a precedent, and it either commands the amount with which it originates or else that amount is increased.

I should like to ask the Senator from Utah, who is very familiar with all these appropriations, or the Senator having the bill in charge, whether this is an original amendment or whether it duplicates an appropriation hitherto made?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to answer the question——

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly; I am very glad to receive an answer.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to the Senator from Utah doing so.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the appropriation of $10,000 has been carried in the appropriation bill in the past for this particular purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. This identical appropriation?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the truth about it is—and it is all a matter of record, there is no use in guessing about it—that the act of 1911 carried an appropriation of $10,000 for the relief of distress among the Seminole Indians in Florida and for purposes of their civilization, and that is the first act.

Mr. THOMAS. The first one?

Mr. FLETCHER. Not a dollar of it was used. Last year the appropriation act extended that appropriation; that is all. It made it available. It was not used by anybody. It is not fair to talk about this $10,000 being carried annually in the appropriation bills for the benefit of these Indians. The first appropriation was made in 1911. It was never used; it has not been used to this day; and the only thing that is asked now is that this appropriation of $10,000 shall be granted in addition to whatever may be unexpended of the original appropriation of $10,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in asking the question I intended to be fair. I think I am fair. The fact that it was not used——

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not want the impression to be created by the statement that this item had been carried in every appropriation bill for years.

Mr. THOMAS. I made the inquiry to ascertain whether it was or not; and I venture the assertion that from now on it will be.

Mr. ASHURST. Well, it ought to be.

Mr. THOMAS. And it will be increased, whether these Indians are civilized or not. Whenever these items of appropriation are put in a bill they continue, they become fixed charges against the Government; and while they are small in themselves, in the aggregate they are enormous. It is the aggregate of these appropriations which makes this bill nearly a million and a quarter dollars in excess of all the estimates, in the face of the fact that the Treasury, instead of being replenished, is being depleted constantly.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Florida must have misunderstood what I said in relation to this item. I have said in the past that items of this kind have been carried in the appropriation bill from year to year, and I have not taken the time to look back to see how far; but in the case of this item I stated that the last appropriation bill provided for $10,000, the same amount as is provided in this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will only be fair enough to read that act, he will see that it says that the amount carried in the appropriation act of March 3, 1911, "is hereby reappropriated and made available."

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not a new appropriation at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course it was a new appropriation, or else it would not have been in the appropriation bill. I want to say to the Senator, however, that the bill now under consideration appropriates $10,000, irrespective of what was appropriated in the last appropriation bill. There is not any question about that. I have not said anything in relation to the advisability of the appropriation, because I know nothing of it. I simply answered the question of the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Idaho," on page 25, after line 21, to insert:

For maintenance of the sanatorium at Fort Lapwai, Idaho, for incidental and all other expenses for its proper conduct and management, including pay of employees, repairs, improvements, and for necessary expense of transporting Indians suffering with tuberculosis and trachoma to and from said sanatorium, $40,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee when the sanitarium was established and whether it is completed to-day?

Mr. ASHURST. There was so much confusion that I could not hear the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I wanted to find out on what date the sanitarium was completed, if completed, and when the appropriation was made for it.

Mr. ASHURST. I will give the Senator the information I have at hand. The House hearings, on page 158, contain the following information, at the bottom of the page:

The Fort Lapwai Sanitarium has been established for several years—

The Senator will see that that does not state the number of years—and now has a capacity for treatment of 100 patients. The statement given above shows expenditures for all purposes for the institution during the fiscal year 1914. These payments were made from the general appropriation "Relieving distress and prevention, etc., of disease among Indians, 1914," but this has become too heavy a drain upon the latter appropriation, and therefore specific provision is requested.

Some $15,000 was spent for salaries for employees, $2,000 for traveling expenses, $486 for transportation of supplies, $7,000 for subsistence, and so forth. I now have the information for which the Senator asks. It has been in use for two years, and it was changed from a school.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason I asked the question was that I wanted to know from what fund this has been paid in the past, because under the heading of "Idaho" in the last appropriation bill there was no appropriation for this particular item. I believe it is a splendid thing to establish this sanitarium, and I was simply wondering whether this was the first year of its maintenance.

Mr. ASHURST. No; it has been in operation two years, and it will treat about 100 patients.

Mr. SMOOT. But the expense is paid out of a lump-sum appropriation?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; the expense heretofore was paid out of the sum appropriated for "relieving distress and prevention of diseases among Indians," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 3, to insert as a new section the following:

IOWA.

SEC. 6. For maintenance of the sanatorium at Sac and Fox Agency, Iowa, for incidental and all other expenses for its proper conduct and management, including pay of employees, repairs, improvements, and for necessary expenses of transporting Indians suffering with tuberculosis and trachoma to and from said sanatorium, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 20, to insert as a new section the following:

LOUISIANA.

SEC. 8. That $1,500, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be expended for the relief and for clearing the title to the lands owned or possessed by the Chettimanchi Band of Indians of Louisiana, and for the purchase of such lands as may be necessary to put them on a self-supporting basis: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, require that the legal title to all property purchased, or the title to which is to be cleared, with the funds hereby appropriated shall be in the name of the United States, for the use and benefit of the Indians.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator having charge of the bill please inform me whether that is a new appropriation or whether it is one which has been carried heretofore?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senate approved and favorably passed upon this appropriation last year, and it went out in conference. I will give a brief history of it.

Mr. THOMAS. Is there an estimate for it this year?

Mr. ASHURST. It was estimated for.

Mr. THOMAS. Was last year the first time the hopeless and helpless condition of this band of Indians was brought to the attention of Congress?

Mr. ASHURST. I shall have to give the Senator a brief history of it. The Indians were about to lose their land by reason of some encumbrance when a very worthy lady, moved by humanitarian impulses, came forward and paid off the lien, paid the amount of money that was about to be raised by selling the Indians' lands, and this is to reimburse her. It has been estimated for, was passed and approved by the Senate last year, and it only went out in conference.

Mr. THOMAS. If that is the purpose of it—and I have no doubt of the Senator's statement—I think the provision ought to say so. It says that this amount of $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used, among other things, to purchase such lands as may be necessary to put the Indians on a self-supporting basis. On the face of it, that would indicate that the amount of the appropriation is in excess of the sum due to this lady.

Mr. ASHURST. Sometimes an abundance of caution requires that we use appropriate language. The Senator will notice, in line 23, page 26, the words—to be expended for the relief and for clearing the title to the lands owned or possessed by the Chettimanchi Band of Indians of Louisiana, and for the purchase of such lands as may be necessary to put them on a self-supporting basis:

Mr. THOMAS. To relieve them, to clear the title to their lands, and to buy other lands.

Mr. CLAPP. Was there not some question as to the equity expiring, in which event, instead of redemption being made, it would have to be purchased; and was not the word "purchase" put in for that reason?

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. CLAPP. I am not certain, but it is in my mind that some such explanation was made of the word "purchase."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, inasmuch as the State of Louisiana has shown such becoming modesty in asking for only $1,500 to begin with, I shall not make a point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Michigan," on page 27, line 10, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$60,450; for general repairs and improvements, $4,000; in all, $64,450" and insert "$66,450, of which sum not exceeding $6,000 may be used for general repairs and improvements to buildings; for dairy barn, $5,000; in all, $71,450"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. For support and education of 350 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Mount Pleasant, Mich., and for pay of superintendent, $66,450, of which sum not exceeding $6,000 may be used for general repairs and improvements to buildings; for dairy barn, $5,000; in all, $71,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Minnesota," on page 27, line 18, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$39,175; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for septic tank, $5,500; in all, $49,675" and insert "$46,175, of which sum not exceeding $8,000 may be used for general repairs and improvements to buildings; for septic tank, $5,500; in all, $51,675," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 225 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pipestone, Minn., including pay of superintendent, $46,175, of which sum not exceeding $8,000 may be used for general repairs and improvements to buildings; for septic tank, $5,500; in all, $51,675.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 2, after the word "available," to insert "for payment of expenses incurred after June 30, 1914, in making required enrollment," so as to make the clause read:

That the unexpended balance of the appropriation for "Enrollment of Chippewa allottees, White Earth Reservation, Minn.," contained in the act approved June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., p. 89), making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Service for the fiscal year 1914, is hereby reappropriated and made immediately available for payment of expenses incurred after June 30, 1914, in making required enrollment.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Inadvertently, the word "salaries" was left out on line 3, and although we are dealing with Senate amendments here, if the chairman has no objection, I suggest inserting it after the word "of," so that it will read "of salaries and expenses."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 3, in the committee amendment, after the word "of," the first word in the line, it is proposed to insert the words "salaries and," so that, if amended, it will read:

For payment of salaries and expenses.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 4, to insert:

That the seventh paragraph of section 9 of the act approved June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., p. 88), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the roll herein provided for shall be made in triplicate and shall show the allotment number or numbers, together with the description of the property allotted, and the name, age, sex, and whether the allottee is of full Indian blood or a mixed blood. The roll shall also state whether the person named is living or dead, and if dead, the approximate date of death shall be stated, when it can be ascertained, together with the age of such person at death as near as practicable. No allotment nor the allottee thereof shall be enrolled where there is a suit now pending, or hereafter commence prior to the completion of such roll, to cancel any conveyance of such allotment until such suit has been finally determined."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Minnesota to state briefly what changes are made in the present law by this amendment?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; I will do so.

When the act was passed for this enrollment there was a question as to what constituted a mixed blood, one of the courts having held, I think, that there had to be at least one-eighth white blood. The Supreme Court of the United States held that any degree was mixed; that a mixed blood was a mixed blood, and the department suggested this amendment. It occurred to me that it might have been made more briefly, but the department suggested that it was better just to reenact the provision with this change, where it says, on line 12:

and whether the allottee is of full Indian blood or a mixed blood.

That will save a great deal of cost and labor in simply determining and reciting the fact of mixed blood rather than to go on and ascertain the particular degree, which is no longer necessary under the decision of the Supreme Court. I think it might have been done more briefly, but the department suggested this means of accomplishing the purpose, and I have no objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the only change?

Mr. CLAPP. That is the only change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota if the last word in line 18 should not be "commenced" instead of "commence"?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; that is undoubtedly a typographical error.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will make the correction. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 20, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to use the same for the purpose of constructing, equipping, and maintaining a hospital, to be located on the Leech Lake Reservation, the site to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, for the use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota. Section 8 of the act approved August 1, 1914, is hereby amended in so far as to permit of the purchase of a site in the city of Cloquet, Minn., and the construction thereon of a hospital instead of on the Fond du Lac Reservation.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. First, as to the first item of that amendment, last year I think we appropriated for two hospitals, and this year we are appropriating for a third one. The Indians are so located in that State that there ought to be at least three. Now, section 8 is amended in this respect: Under the bill of last year it provided for one of the hospitals to be located on the Fond du Lac Reservation. This adjoins the city of Cloquet. It was found that by building it inside of the city limits—it is a small city of perhaps six or seven thousand people—the water facilities and sewerage of the city could be utilized, at a great saving of expense; and to put it beyond any question as to the authority, the department suggested this change, so that they can place it inside the city without any question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 12, to insert:

That the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota, is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses of the general council of said tribe to be held at Bemidji, Minn., beginning July 13, 1915, pursuant to the constitution of the general council of said Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, organized in May, 1913, and to pay the actual and necessary expenses of the members of the executive committee of said council when attending to the business of the tribe, and to pay the expenses to Washington, in January and February, 1915, of the delegation of Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota appointed by the president of said general council pursuant to the resolution of said general council of date August 14, 1914, to present the affairs of said Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota to the officials of the United States, said $4,000 to be immediately available, and the expenses of said delegation to be paid by the Secretary of the Interior upon itemized accounts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the expenses of said general council to be paid by the Secretary of the Interior upon itemized accounts approved by the president of the executive committee of said council and certified to by its secretary. The Secretary of the Interior may authorize an inspector or special agent to attend future sessions of said general council and conventions to which delegates therefor are elected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 2, to insert:

Hereafter on ceded lands in the State of Minnesota embraced within the provisions of the law entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, the minerals in and mineral rights pertaining to any of the lands the cession of which was provided for in said act and for which the United States has not conveyed title shall be and remain in and are reserved for the use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 12, to insert:

That the following-described lands within the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn., be, and the same hereby are, created into a forest reserve, to be known as the Red Lake Indian Forest: Townships 150 and 151 north, ranges 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36 west, and townships 152 and 153 north, ranges 32, 33, and 34 west of the fifth principal meridian, except the lands in township 151 north, range 36 west, which lie north of the north line of sections 26 to 30, inclusive, and except all lands within sections 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 18, in township 153 north, range 34 west. The provisions of this section shall not apply to any lands which have heretofore been reserved for school, agency, church, or town-site purposes, or granted to private parties or corporations, within the area described: Provided, That when any of said lands are no longer needed for the purpose for which they were reserved the Secretary of the Interior may declare such lands to be a part of the Red Lake Indian Forest.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, as to that portion of this committee amendment from line 13 on page 32 down to and including line 7 on page 33, I should like to ask why this portion of this Indian reserve is proposed to be included in a forest reserve. I simply want information upon the subject, because I know that in some instances where a forest reserve has been extended over an Indian reserve there has been quite serious conflict and some very serious questions arising, owing to the difference in jurisdiction, the conflict of jurisdiction between the Interior Department upon the one hand, which has jurisdiction of the Indians and the Indian reserves, and the Agricultural Department upon the other hand, which has jurisdiction over the forest reserves. The effect of this amendment is to extend a forest reserve over an Indian reserve.

Mr. CLAPP. I shall be very glad to explain it.

Mr. FALL. I should like to have the Senator explain the purpose of it.

Mr. CLAPP. I will take the suggestions in the inverse order. In the first place, this bill does not create a forest reserve in charge of the Department of Agriculture, but keeps this entirely within the charge of the Secretary of the Interior, as will be seen from the further language of the bill. That is to avoid any conflict.

Now, I think the Senate should be advised. Of course there is on this Red Lake Reservation a large amount of agricultural land, and there is also one of the finest stands of white pine, probably, east of the Rocky Mountains. This pine is in a position where one of four things has to happen to it—either there will be an annual loss in the dead and down timber and in the timber that has reached maturity, or the Government will have to provide for the sale of this timber in some form, or the Government will have to take over the timber and account subsequently to the Indians for it, or we will have to make provision whereby the dead and down timber can be removed, the ripe timber removed, and at the same time the growing timber retained.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. Is this one of the reservations of timber which the Secretary now by law has no jurisdiction over? Upon some reservations the timber has been excluded by special act from the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior. In the case of the greater number of the reservations which I have any knowledge of to-day in the United States the Secretary of the Interior has the power now to dispose of the mature timber and the dead or down timber. Is this one of the reservations over which he has no jurisdiction?

Mr. CLAPP. He would have no jurisdiction to carry out the plan of an annual or an occasional crop of timber. In some of the acts relating to the power of the Secretary with reference to pine timber the words have occurred, "the Red Lake Reservation in Minnesota being excepted herefrom."

Mr. FALL. That is only as to a contract of sale?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. FALL. He has no right to contract for the sale of timber, but he still has jurisdiction.

Mr. CLAPP. I doubt whether he could contract for the sale. But, Mr. President, we are going further in this amendment, and that is what I want the Senator from Oregon to listen to. He will see the provision——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota will suspend for a moment. The Chair will suggest that the amendment has been read only in part.

Mr. CLAPP. I know.

Mr. FALL. I found that I had made a mistake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will pardon the Chair, the Chair will suggest that the amendment be read in whole and probably the entire information will be given by the reading.

Mr. FALL. I think that is proper.

Mr. CLAPP. I realized that when I took the floor, but I thought it made little difference when a general explanation was made. If the Senator from Arizona is agreeable I will withhold the explanation until the entire reading of the amendment has been completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the amendment.

The Secretary read from page 33, line 8, to line 24, on page 35, as follows:

That the forest shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the principles of scientific forestry with a view to the production of successive timber crops thereon. The said Secretary is hereby authorized to sell dead, down, and matured timber and other marketable products, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and to establish such sawmills and accessories as may be necessary to manufacture the dead, down, and matured timber into various products, and he may purchase such equipment and employ such persons as shall be necessary to carry out the purpose of this act. Before any expenditures are made or contracts entered into hereunder the Secretary of the Interior shall submit an estimate, and annually thereafter, of such proposed expenditures, to be approved by Congress. The Indians, without charge, shall be allowed for fuel, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, dead timber, standing or fallen, which is not of a merchantable grade or suited for timber.

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to maintain at all times a forest cover on all parts of the forest which are not better adapted to agricultural uses than to the production of forest crops, and he may establish nurseries or purchase seedlings or transplants when needed for reforestation purposes.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue a permit to any head of a family or adult unmarried member of the Red Lake Band of Indians entitling him or her to the exclusive use for a term of 10 years of any tract of land, not exceeding 20 acres in area, fronting on either Upper Red Lake or Lower Red Lake, having a shore line of not more than 50 rods. Similar permits may be issued by the said Secretary for legal subdivisions which do not border upon either of the said lakes with the same restrictions as to area. In the granting of these permits preference shall be given to Red Lake Indians who have occupied such land for a period of not less than three years prior to the passage of this act and each permit shall be renewed so long as the person or any member of his or her immediate family shall continue to reside thereon, unless in the opinion of the Secretary the best interests of the Red Lake Band of Indians demand that such permit be not renewed; and when a renewal is refused the Secretary shall cause an appraisal to be made of any permanent improvements placed upon such land by the permittee, or his immediate family, and shall pay to him, from the proceeds of the Red Lake Indian Forest, the amount of such appraisement. If any Indian permittee or his immediate family shall fail to reside upon the shore line or interior tract covered by his permit for a period of at least three months in any year, the permit shall be subject to cancellation by the Secretary of the Interior, and when a permit is thus canceled the Secretary may pay the permittee the value of his permanent improvements from the proceeds of the Indian Forest if, in his judgment, the improvements are of any value to the Red Lake Indians. If lands covered by a lapsed or a canceled permit are assigned to another applicant, such new permittee shall be required to pay into the Red Lake Indian Forest fund the value which the improvements thereon have at the time of the issuance of such permit.

That every permit or lease issued under authority of this act to Indians or to other persons or corporations shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to cross the land covered thereby with logging roads or railroads, to use the shore line, or to erect thereon and use such structures as shall be necessary to the proper and economical management of the Indian forest created by this act.

That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the terms of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the last words read, lines 24 and 25, page 35, should be stricken out. This was taken from a bill which my colleague [Mr. NELSON] had introduced. The words, of course, have no place here as they would have had on that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment will be amended on page 35, lines 24 and 25, by striking out the words:

That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the terms of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. FALL. I ask for information if it would not be proper to place a period after the word "act," on line 18, page 33, and a capital "B" in the following word?

Mr. CLAPP. There can be no objection to that of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. LANE. I wish to say——

Mr. CLAPP. Just a moment, if the Senator will pardon me. The word "pine," after the word "matured" on line 12, should be inserted. When this was before the committee the first proposition contained the authorization to sell posts and rails and such things, and without the word "pine" to limit it to dead, down, and matured timber, the Secretary might not have the authority to sell the small stuff such as the posts and rails.

Mr. STERLING. To what page does the Senator refer?

Mr. CLAPP. Page 33, line 12, after the word "matured."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 12, after the word "matured" and before the word "timber," insert the word "pine," so as to read "matured pine timber."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANE. In regard to this item I will say that the Indians, such as have had communication with the committee, have protested against its adoption. They say they have not been consulted; that they already own the land; that it is their land; and they have the right to camp upon the shore of the lake, whereas they will not hereafter be permitted to do so unless with the approval and good will of the supervising officer that they do so; that if they are removed from these highlands, the farm lands they will be compelled to occupy are swamp lands, which they can not till until after they have been irrigated. They have been concerned about it, and have so many times asked that they be permitted to pass upon it before we extend a right which will forever alienate them from the fishing. They wish to be consulted, and they are against this disposition of rights which they have enjoyed for ages.

Mr. CLAPP. I hope the Senator will withhold his point of order until I make one correction. In the first place, it does not take away the title from the Red Lake Indians. It does not affect the title to their lands at all. It simply provides that the timberland shall not be allotted at present, but that the agricultural lands may be allotted.

Mr. LANE. The Indians say that the so-called agricultural land is a swamp; that the timberland they now have access to, and I think in many instances they would have to get a permit to have access to it. I wish to make a point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. I hope the Senator will listen for a moment.

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator is not listening; he is going off.

Mr. LANE. I am going to walk around a little. I do not have to sit down.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator thinks that he can listen, perhaps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines now to yield.

Mr. CLAPP. I wish to make this statement once and for all. Here is a large body of pine land. Some of it is being destroyed. It is dead and down. There is danger of fire going through there. The dead and down timber ought to be disposed of, the mature timber ought to be disposed of, and the growing timber ought to be preserved, and there is not authority anywhere to do this without legislation.

In the Cass Lake region we tried an experiment. There we set aside a large forest reserve. The Government owned or held all the pine but 5 per cent for reforestation. Afterwards we amended that to 10 per cent. Go into any forest and a tree naturally grows as high as it can for sunlight and will go no deeper for moisture than is necessary. Thin out a forest 5 to 10 per cent and the first strong wind that comes blows down what you have left. The only reasonable way in which to develop a forest reserve is nature's way. As trees grow old they die out and the strong trees absorb the sunlight, shade the ground, and in the course of time nature has produced a park that can be supplemented by human activity, if it is along the line that nature has prescribed for that particular work.

Now, it is proposed in this bill to give the Secretary of the Interior the authority to sell the small stuff suitable only for posts and poles and rails that are a menace to that reservation lying there upon the ground. It is proposed to give him authority to sell the dead and down timber that is a menace to that reservation. It is proposed to give him authority to sell the mature timber that instead of increasing in value has ceased to grow valuable, and at the same time to retain and protect and save the younger and growing pine timber that there may be a succession of forest upon that land.

In order that the Secretary shall not plunge this project into extravagance that shall absorb the income, we have put a provision in here that not a dollar shall be invested and not one dollar of debt can be incurred except upon the estimates first submitted to Congress and to be approved by Congress.

It is a fact that some of the Indians came there and that they opposed this measure. I talked it over with them. Of course, it would be more agreeable to the Indians and I believe more and more and in this very bill in making provision for a continuing council, that when the estimates come here from the Secretary of the Interior from year to year to recognize a legal representation from these Indians to appear here to review those estimates and to pass upon them in connection with the two committees of Congress.

Mr. President, it is possible to carry these things too far. That timber is there. The dead and down, as I said, is a menace to the standing timber. One of two things confronts us, either to sell the timber and denude that forest and take the last great stand of pine timber east of the Rocky Mountains or adopt a system of conservation that can not run riot, because not one dollar can be invested, not one dollar of contract can be incurred, until the Secretary shall first come here and submit his estimate, and those estimates be approved, and representatives of the Indians here sitting around the committee table review and consider these estimates.

I hope the Senator from Oregon will not press his point of order. This land has stood there, and for years we have been unable to accomplish anything with it. The Senator from Oregon can not realize the greed of those men who would like to see this measure defeated, that this timber may sooner or later go upon the market. He little realizes the efforts that are being made behind my distinguished colleague [Mr. NELSON], who is the author, let me say, of this bill, and myself to defeat this measure. It will be the old, old story of the pine disappearing and in its place little better than a barren waste.

Mr. President, these Indians are possessed of this magnificent domain. This does not dispossess them of their title. It does not change their title one iota. That there may be no differences between them, that there may not be two Indians claiming the same camp site upon the lake shore or within the body of the timber, we provide for the orderly exercise of that camping right through permits issued by the Secretary of the Interior.

Back of this pine domain lies one of the finest agricultural districts in the State of Minnesota, but it needs draining. Congress has either to appropriate money for draining that land or it has to lie there useless to the Indians, or by the wise use of this system the proceeds of the pine sold in an orderly way to preserve this great forest so that it can be used to drain this outside agricultural lands, and thus the Indians in time will have his outside agricultural home drained by the proceeds of the very pine that to-day is going to waste and is a menace to the standing pine upon that reservation.

I want to say to the Senator from Oregon and those Senators here that men who live in the States where these problems arise have to deal with them. My colleague and myself have to face these Indians. We have to face the people of our State in the conduct of our legislation with respect to these Indians. I submit, Mr. President, to the Senate that, occupying that position, clothed with that responsibility, our voice and our opinion and our judgment upon this matter ought to be as sufficient as the judgment or the protest of one who comes here and who manifestly does not understand the terms of the bill, because one of the objections made by the Senator from Oregon is that here we are taking the title away from these Indians, when any layman reading the bill will see that we ought not to dispossess these Indians in any manner whatever of their title.

It is true that we do provide for selling their dead-and-down and mature timber and reserving their green and standing timber, that that forest may be preserved and that there may be a source of income hereafter for these Indians.

Now, Mr. President, I have done my duty, I have discharged my responsibility, and if I am unable to appeal to the Senator from Oregon let this pine go, let this dead-and-down timber rot away until it amounts to nothing, let it be a menace to that forest, and let forest fires sweep through there and take from these Indians hundreds and hundreds and thousands, aye, millions, of dollars that this bill wisely and justly attempts to conserve for their use.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I am interested in this legislation for two reasons—first, the welfare of the Indians, and next, a little bit of State pride.

When I came to Minnesota, in 1871, Minnesota was one of the great white-pine States of the Union. Since that time, however, pine has been absorbed by the lumbermen. They have gotten hold of all the pine land in the State except this. They have logged it off. The way the lumbermen treat the land when they get a piece of land is to strip it. They do not leave any trees there to seed it; they leave the offal there, the limbs and brush, and brush fires go through, and the land thus denuded of that timber grows up to scrub oak, poplar brush, willow brush, hazel brush, and all other kinds of brush except pine.

Now, in northwestern Minnesota there is one of the sources of the Red River of the North, two beautiful lakes connected with a narrow channel, so that practically so far as boating is concerned it is one lake. There are some 22 townships on this Red Lake Reservation connecting the lakes, perhaps 24, if I include the lakes. The Indians are located around this lake in the eastern end of the reservation, on a peninsula, a neck between the two lakes, and on the south shore of one of these is this body of pine. It is the only virgin pine we have left in Minnesota. There is perhaps an area equal to one township of real pine. There is some oak besides. It is the purpose of this legislation to conserve this pine for the benefit of the Indians and to have one little pine forest left in the State of Minnesota.

There are between 1,100 and 1,200 of these Red Lake Indians. There is no doubt there are about twenty-odd townships of prairie and meadow land, good agricultural land, for their allotment. They are entitled to an allotment of 160 acres of agricultural land on this reservation. If you establish this forest reserve there is more than enough agricultural land left to give them 160-acre allotments. There will be enough to cover the allotments and probably will be more than a township left.

The purpose of this legislation is to leave this timber for the benefit of the Indians, to have it remain as a permanent forest, to take only the dead-and-down timber and the matured timber—that is, the timber that has ceased growing—to be sold for the benefit of the Indians, and the Indians are left that strip [indicating on a map]. If I could show this map, which I can not, to my colleagues here in the Senate, I could point out to them that the design of this bill is to leave a strip along the shore of the lake for these Indians to occupy. In addition to that, they can continue to occupy this forest and use it, and they are entitled to the dead-and-down timber for their own use, and the other timber—the mature timber and the dead-and-down timber not used by them—is to be sold for their benefit. They will get all that is in this pine, and it will remain there permanently, and every Indian on the reservation will have an allotment of 160 acres.

I have a map here in my hand. I can point it out. Here are the two lakes. Red Lake, the source of the Red River. This yellow part here [indicating] is the agricultural meadowland, and the land that it is designed to reserve for timber is this blue line around the shore of the lake.

As I said, this legislation is for the welfare of the Indians, and it is for the purpose of preserving and continuing the only pine forest we have left in the State of Minnesota.

I will state another reason why this legislation is urgent. I have been appealed to by some of the lumbermen of Minnesota within the last two years to get legislation permitting them to buy this timber and cut it, and if they have their way they will get hold of this land. What the lumbermen in Minnesota want is to have this pine timber allotted to the Indians, and then they will go and buy the allotments from the Indians and strip the land of timber, and the Indians will have nothing left.

I have been up in that country, Mr. President. I am familiar with the situation. There are, as I said, between 1,100 and 1,200 Indians there. They are entitled to allotments. They ought to have taken their allotments long ago, but some of the unscrupulous white men have advised them not to take allotments, but live there on the shore of the lake, and they have been living around the shore of the lake fishing, hunting, and trapping and carrying on no agriculture.

As a friend of the Indians, Mr. President, I am anxious that these agricultural lands should be allotted to the Indians and that we should try and have them become farmers and self-sustaining; and then in addition to that we want them to have the privilege of living around the shore of this lake. Only a few of their allotments would come up to the lake. Most of them would be at a distance from the lake. But this measure proposes to give them a strip of land of 50 feet frontage on the lake for each Indian, a strip of land lying on the lake shore, so that wherever they get their allotments on the reservation they can come to the lake shore and camp there and fish and have a good time.

My information is that all the Indians up there, with the exception of a few men, that we call the tools of the lumbermen, are in favor of this measure. One of them came down here; he is squatting on the lake. He got hold of an Indian lawyer from Wisconsin, a lawyer who has a squaw wife, as they call it. They laid their heads together and came before the committee and represented that there was a great opposition to this measure.

Mr. President, I am familiar with the Indian situation up in that country. I have been up in that country; I know what the opinions of the Indians are, and as a friend of the Indians I want them first of all to secure these agricultural allotments there that they may become farmers. In the next place, I want this forest reserve to remain there in perpetuity as long as God Almighty will let it grow. I do not want our lumbermen to strip that piece of pine as they have stripped every other piece of pine in the State of Minnesota.

I wish Senators could go to the State of Minnesota and see the large areas of pine land that the lumbermen have taken and stripped of pine and have not left any for reforestation, but allow the refuse, the limbs and the brush, to remain on the land, and have oftentimes set fire to it and stripped it. So those lands that were once the finest pine forests in Minnesota are to-day covered with scrub oak, poplar brush, and hazel brush, and covered with all kinds of rubbish except pine.

Now we have an illustration of what can be done by reforestation. Less than 100 miles, not over 50 miles, away a forest reservation was established on some of these Indian lands. Under that plan of a forest reserve they were allowed to sell the good timber for the benefit of the Indians, but they were required to preserve 10 per cent of the mature trees for seed purposes, and they did preserve it. They were required to keep the fire out of that reservation. This map shows it. It is the Green Reservation. They have demonstrated what now can be done in the shape of reforestation without planting any trees.

If you reserve a percentage of from 5 to 10 per cent of the mature trees and leave them, they will furnish the necessary seed; and if you keep the fire out, the young pine sprouts will come up, and they will grow as rapidly as the climate and the weather of that country will permit.

We have, as I have said, an illustration of that kind. In reference to the Red Lake Reservation, there the timber is still uncut; nothing has been cut except what little the Indians may have used for their camp fires in winter. The forest is there. It is one of the best and finest, and the only one remaining in the State of Minnesota. We want to preserve that reservation, first, to show to future generations that Minnesota has once been a pine State; we want to show one little remnant of that body of white pine.

In the next place, Mr. President, we want this forest reserved for the use of the Indians. We want them to take agricultural lands and to become good farmers; we want to let them have the use of this timber for their fuel. The dead-and-down and mature timber—that is, the timber that has ceased to grow and is likely to perish—we want sold and disposed of for their benefit. However, a part of this agricultural land near the outlet of Red Lake River is low and needs drainage before it can be utilized to advantage.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. STERLING. How long have these lands, which the Senator from Minnesota describes as agricultural lands, been surveyed, if they have been surveyed?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, yes; they were surveyed a long time ago.

Mr. STERLING. Remembering the rapidity with which lands have been allotted in the western part of our State, the wonder to me is that the lands in this reservation had not been allotted years ago. Why have they not been allotted? Why has not the department made such allotment?

Mr. NELSON. I do not know, except from what is common report in that section of country. A few of the squaw men and a few of the lumbermen have been among the Indians urging them not to take allotments; and the Indians have lived in common. I think that now most of these Indians are inclined to take their allotments. It is important that they should, because there is a great pressure to have these agricultural lands thrown open to settlement.

Shortly before I came here to attend this session of Congress a delegation of settlers, farmers living up in the Red River Valley, came to my home to see me about securing legislation throwing the Red Lake Indian Reservation open to homestead settlement, with some qualifications; that is, homestead settlement with a payment of a given price per acre for the benefit of the Indians. I went over the matter with those gentlemen and I said: "We have agreed to give these Indians allotments of 160 acres apiece. There are between eleven and twelve hundred of them, and some claim there are even as many as fifteen hundred of them. If those Indians are to get their allotments of 160 acres each—and they certainly ought to have them—there will not be exceeding a township of surplus land left. That land will be of the poorest; so you can not expect any legislation to open this land."

Less than a month ago a representative of the lumbermen in Minnesota came to Washington and asked me if I could not have this legislation put over this session. He was urgent to have it put over. Last year a prominent lumberman came here and wanted to know when legislation could be secured opening these pine lands for sale, so that the lumbermen could get possession of it. The lumbermen in the State are hungry for this pine, and they are anxious to secure it as soon as possible, to dispose of it, and to make what money they can out of it.

I am concerned only in the welfare of the Indians and in the welfare of our State. To me it seems it would be a great mistake if this timber were to be treated as the other timber has been treated. Down here [exhibiting on map] we have a representation of the White Earth Reservation. Some years ago large allotments of pine lands were made to Indians there, and what became of them? The lumbermen bought the pine from the Indians; the land has been stripped of the pine; and there are no settlers on it. Some of the Indians got a fair value for their land, and some did not. Unless we have legislation of this kind, Mr. President, the same thing would transpire as to this reservation that took place in the other Indian reservations of Minnesota.

I know that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] is actuated by good motives, but if he were as familiar with the situation as are my colleague and I—if he knew the situation as we know it, if he knew what was for the good of the Indians and for the good of our State—I am sure he would make no objection to this proposition.

Mr. LANE and Mr. STERLING addressed the Chair.

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Just one question. I want to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether we have allotments made absolutely to the Indians, or whether they are made under restrictions as to alienation, and so on?

Mr. NELSON. When I speak of allotments I mean the usual allotments as they have existed under the law; that is, allotments in severalty with a limitation of 25 years, under what used to be called the Dawes allotment scheme—allotments to Indians on the theory that the Government is to hold the allotments in trust for 25 years, preventing the Indians during that time from selling, mortgaging, or making the land liable for any debt or other liability; in other words, that the Indians could hold the land for 25 years, occupy it, and use it before they got final title to it. That is the kind of allotment to which I refer.

Does the Senator from Oregon desire to ask me a question?

Mr. LANE. I was going to make a further statement, if the Senator is through.

Mr. NELSON. I have not yet concluded.

Mr. President, I might say a great deal more about this matter, but I am unwilling to take up the time of the Senate unnecessarily. It has been my ambition to reserve this pine so long as possible for the benefit of these Indians, remembering what little pine forests there are in the State of Minnesota. All the proceeds of the sale of whatever there is left of pine will go to the Indians; no white man can get any of it. The proceeds from the sale of the pine, aside from what is used for fuel, will inure entirely to the benefit of the Indians. As my colleague [Mr. CLAPP] has well said, the proceeds of it can well be utilized to drain some of the low and wet lands that are near the outlet of Red Lake River, where that river flows out of the lake.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to say that I did not make myself plain if I said that titles to lands were being alienated. There is a provision in the bill for the appraisement of any permanent improvements. The Indian who was here stated that a number of Indians had improved their property; that they would lose their homes; that they would then have to go upon lands which in a large part were swampy, with no provision in the bill for draining those swamps.

In addition to that, I wish to say that there is a provision in the bill, if it has not been stricken out, for the sale not only of the dead, down, and mature timber, but for the sale of other marketable products, which takes in everything upon the land. It seems to me that no timberman can go there and cut down the timber without the consent and permission of the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior must withstand their blandishments. If the department gives the right sort of guardianship to those Indians, no one will be allowed to cut off the timber.

There is no provision, as I say, for drainage. The Indian made this statement, and he showed me a telegram from other Indians stating that the Indians had not been consulted; that if a council could be called and they could be shown that they might have access to this timber after it was reserved and taken care of and have access to the lake, which they could not get under this provision in the bill without a permit of some sort, and if the land were drained so that they could go and make a living upon it and they would have the right of fishing and hunting, as they do now, and not be forced to enter upon an entirely new kind of work in order to maintain their existence, he did not think there would be any trouble; but he said he did not think it was right for this disposition to be made of their homes, where they had lived for generations, without their being consulted in the matter; and I think that he was right. For that reason I make the point of order; and next year, 12 months from now—you do not have to sell it to the timberman—in the meantime come in here with a provision that protects the Indian, I will help you preserve that timber to the best of my ability; but the Indian should be consulted this year and should be heard before his patrimony is taken away from him.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to say to the Senator that his remarks show how easy it is for a man to get impressions. The Indian representative was here. He and I went all over the subject, and he agreed with me that it was better at this time not to make this provision for drainage.

Mr. LANE. I would like to ask the Senator how the Indian is going to farm the land if it is not drained—if it is a swamp?

Mr. CLAPP. They are not farming it.

Mr. LANE. I know they are not, and they never can until it is drained.

Mr. CLAPP. They have not as yet taken any allotments on the outside land.

Mr. LANE. That is true; that is what the Indian said.

Mr. CLAPP. And it was after an agreement and understanding with him that, instead of putting a provision into this bill, which was somewhat long anyway, for the drainage, he and I both agreed that it would be better to let the drainage go until a later time.

There are two things the Senator fails to comprehend: First, the menace from fire, and, secondly, the fact that there is a waste every year in the loss of the dead, down, and mature timber. Mr. President, before the point of order is disposed of——

Mr. LANE. I wish to say right there, if the Senator will allow me, that after this item went into the bill the Indian came to me.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course he went to the Senator. Indians are like white men; they do not like to have things done without being the prime wheel in the mechanism that does it. The Senator would have done the same thing, and everybody else would have done likewise; but the Indian did agree with me that it was better at this time not to make any provision for drainage.

I want to state to the Chair that on the 15th of February, 1915, I reported this item in the form of a bill, having been authorized so to do by the Committee on Indian Affairs, a standing committee of the Senate. There have been, I am free to say, some slight changes in the verbiage; but the main provisions of the amendment are in a bill that is on the calendar, reported by me on the 15th of February by order of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. Question!

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has a point of order been raised?

Mr. LANE. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is it?

Mr. LANE. That the item is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Wherein does the general legislation consist?

Mr. LANE. And also that the item has not been estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not general legislation.

Mr. LANE. Well, there is no estimate for it, and it is legislation separating these people from their rights for all time without their having been consulted concerning it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is trying to ascertain just what is the point of order.

Mr. LANE. The provision does not properly belong on this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Whether it properly belongs on the bill is not the question at all. The question is wherein consists the general legislation? Is there any legislation upon this subject now?

Mr. LANE. No. There have been no allotments made. The amendment provides for the sale of the timber lands of the Indians and of all marketable products. It makes provision for that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it not an Indian reservation, in which the Indians hold jointly?

Mr. LANE. Yes; I understand they hold in common.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Do they not hold it in tribal relations?

Mr. LANE. As I understand, that is so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Where is the general legislation?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it does not provide for the sale of any of the land.

Mr. CLAPP. Or for any allotment.

Mr. NELSON. Or for any allotment.

Mr. LANE. But of their homes. It is not germane to the bill, as I understand.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if the Chair desires argument on the matter, I should like to be heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is trying to find wherein consists the general legislation.

Mr. FALL. I so understand; and if the Chair desires to hear me afterwards upon that subject I want to be heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has the egotism to think that the Chair knows what general legislation is. The Chair has read these provisions now twice and is unable to see wherein there is any general legislation in the proposed amendment.

Mr. LANE. It is legislation, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. How is that?

Mr. LANE. It is legislation which is not germane to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question of germaneness is another question. The Chair thinks the difficulty in the mind of the Senator from Oregon consists in the fact that he confuses general legislation with germane legislation. If the Senator from Oregon chooses to raise the question of the germaneness of the legislation, then that is a matter with which the Chair has nothing to do.

Mr. LANE. I do; I raise any and all points against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a question for the Senate; but the amendment does not seem to the Chair to be general legislation. It seems to be simply special legislation looking after, or looking after getting—the Chair does not know which—the property of the Indians which is held in tribal relations. So that, so far as its being general legislation is concerned, the Chair is compelled to overrule the point of order. If, however, the Senator raises the point of order that it is not germane to the subject matter of the bill, that is a question for the Senate to settle.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I will say that I have no interest in the matter whatever; it does not matter a snap of a finger to me what becomes of this property; but when a representative of the Indians themselves comes here and says that they have not been consulted—that through this proposed legislation they will lose their homes and will be forced, if it is construed strictly, to live upon swamp land, which they can not cultivate, and asks that we do what we can to give them an opportunity to be heard upon it—I wish in their behalf to offer every point against the amendment that I possibly can; and I raise the question that it is not germane.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon raises the question as to whether these provisions are germane to the bill. That is a question which the rules of the Senate provide shall be settled by the Senate. The Chair, therefore, puts to the Senate the question, Are these provisions germane to the pending appropriation bill?

As many as believe the amendment to be germane will say "aye." [A pause.] Opposed, "no." [A pause.] The ayes have it, and the amendment is declared to be germane. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was:

That whenever the board of county commissioners of any county in the State of Minnesota establish a State rural highway in accordance with the laws of said State, which highway directly benefits allotments of Indians not subject to taxation or special assessments, but which allotments would be assessed for such benefits under the laws of the said State were they not exempt by treaty, act of Congress, or other law, the said board of county commissioners may make a schedule of assessments against such benefited allottees, the amount of said assessments in each case being that prescribed by the laws of the said State for lands situated and benefited similar to the allotments of such allottees, and when so made file the same with the Secretary of the Interior. If in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior the projected State rural highway is one that will be for the best interests of the Indian allotments affected, then he shall ascertain whether the assessments proposed against the said allottees are fair and just as compared with assessments against other lands similarly situated and benefited. If he shall find that said assessments are fair and just in the manner and to the extent aforesaid, he shall make an order that the said assessments are and shall be charged against the several allottees benefited. But the amount of any assessment or levy made or charged during the time said allotments are held in trust by the United States shall not be nor at any time become a lien on said allotments. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to pay to the county treasurer of such county said assessments and parts thereof as they become due out of any funds belonging to the Indians owning said benefited allotments, and which funds are under the control of the United States or Secretary of the Interior, or out of any tribal funds under the control of the United States or Secretary of the Interior which are subject to be prorated among the members of the tribe to which the Indians owning such benefited allotments belong. Such sums as may be paid from tribal funds shall be charged against the Indians whose respective assessments have been paid: Provided, That every Indian who has been assessed in the manner aforesaid shall have the right to appeal within 30 days after being notified of such assessment to the Secretary of the Interior for a reexamination and readjudication of whether or not he has been assessed greater than his proportionate share, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to reduce the amount of such assessment if in his judgment justice requires it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I had not intended to question any of the amendments relating to the State of Minnesota, but upon a careful reading of pages 36 and 37 I feel that that is a most extraordinary amendment; and unless some good reason can be given for it by the Senator from Minnesota I shall feel constrained to make a point of order against it.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, under the State law of Minnesota roads are laid out and assessments are made for benefits. It so happens that a proposed road leading from Duluth west through the State and through this Indian country can not be constructed under the State law unless provision is made whereby the Indian lands can come within the scope of the law. Primarily I think it is an excellent thing, because there must be roads through the Indian country, and a great deal of the country, in northern Minnesota especially, requires roads.

In order to prevent any injustice being done, the plans have to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and he has to ascertain whether the proposed assessments are fair. If he finds that they are fair, he can make an order that the assessments are to be charged against the allottees benefited.

Then, the amendment provides later that if the Indian feels that the assessment is not a fair one he still has a right of appealing in 30 days to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall make a reexamination and is authorized to reduce the amount of such assessment, if in his judgment justice so requires.

It will be practically impossible, I think, to construct the road without this provision. We had to have a similar provision, I will say to the Senator, last year with reference to drainage in northern Minnesota. The law requires that the drainage districts shall be prescribed by the court and the assessments authorized and confirmed by the court. Under the law the land within a drainage district must be brought within the purview of the cost, the amount as to each piece being, of course, determined by the court, but all the land embraced in a district must be included. That could not be done as to the Indian lands without action by Congress, and I obtained the passage of a bill which authorized the Secretary, just as is done in the case of this amendment, to approve of the assessments.

As I am advised, the same condition obtains with reference to the highway law. The highways are built with State aid, and under the laws of the State all the land must theoretically be made subject to the burden of building the roads; that is, part of the cost is met by the State, part by the counties, and part is assessed against the land; so that the provision could not be a legal one so long as there were lands that were not subject to assessment. Therefore, we have provided here that even the land held in trust by the Government may come within the purview of that law, all the time leaving the power in the Secretary of the Interior to determine what amount shall be paid.

I do not know that the amendment could be more carefully safeguarded. It is absolutely essential to the carrying forward of the highway plan, and I think that what little may be assessed against the allotments will be more than compensated by the benefit the allottees will receive by reason of that road being built through their country.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, if the purpose of the amendment is to enable the State of Minnesota to construct a particular line of road from Duluth west, should not the amendment be limited to that road?

Mr. CLAPP. No; because it is limited by operation of law. The Indian lands are all there along the line of this road. I do not know that I could say accurately that the State constructs the road; and yet, perhaps, that would be a proper statement. The people get certain aid from the State when they comply with certain requirements—some from the State, some from the county, and, as I have said before, by assessment against the land.

Mr. THOMAS. I assume that the language of the amendment——

Mr. CLAPP. This provision was drawn in this way, so that if there should arise another case affecting Indian land it would not be necessary to secure further action by Congress. Of course, the road system in the northern part of the State, unsettled as it is, must grow and expand, and there will be other road projects up there under the State law, and so that it would not be necessary every time such a matter arose to get congressional action. I thought it wise to give the Secretary this authority, and I believe that we can easily and safely intrust it to him.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator whether the Indian Bureau has not the power now to construct roads through Indian reservations as a continuation of, or to connect with, lines that have been constructed by county commissioners as rural highways?

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think they have; in fact, I am quite certain they have not. They can not use Indian money without appraisement. Every little while we are called upon to authorize the use of Indian funds for the construction of roads through Indian reservations.

Mr. THOMAS. I will make no further objection.

Mr. CLAPP. I want the Senator to thoroughly understand the matter. This is in one sense a reservation of the tribe, and in another sense it is not a reservation; in other words, most of it is a ceded reservation. The Government is simply holding the title in trust for the Indians and most of it, of course, is under allotment.

Mr. THOMAS. My principal apprehension was that it might be used as a precedent for the other States; but in view of the explanation of the Senator I will make no point against it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield for a question?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. This amendment does not in terms provide that the Indian allottees shall have notice of the assessment. It is true that it does provide, beginning with line 13, on page 37—

That every Indian who has been assessed in the manner aforesaid shall have the right to appeal within 30 days after being notified of such assessment to the Secretary of the Interior—

And so forth. I wondered if it would not be well for the amendment to provide in terms that he should be notified of the assessment; or does the Senator from Minnesota think that the State law itself regulating the assessment will provide for such a notice, so that the Indian will be protected?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; and whoever is carrying forward this project will see to it that notice is given, because the project is never beyond the right of appeal until 30 days have elapsed after notice has been given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 20, to insert:

For the payment of high-school teachers at the White Earth Indian School, Minnesota, for instruction of children of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be used under rules to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That not to exceed $1,000 of this sum may be used to continue the education of boys appointed under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914," approved June 30, 1913: And provided further, That the unexpended balance of $555.43 remaining from the appropriation of $4,000 for the higher education of Chippewa boys appointed under the provisions of the said act is hereby reappropriated, made immediately available and will remain available until unexpended, under the same provisions as those contained in the original act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Arizona to the fact that on page 38, line 13, there seems to be a typographical error.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; that is a misprint. The letters "un" should be stricken out.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "unexpended" and insert "expended."

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Montana," in section 11, on page 38, line 20, after the word "employees," to strike out "$12,000" and insert "$20,000, of which amount not exceeding $4,500 may be expended for salaries, the remainder to be immediately available for subsistence," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Indians at Flathead Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $20,000, of which amount not exceeding $4,500 may be expended for salaries, the remainder to be immediately available for subsistence.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that the amount appropriated for the support and civilization of Indians at the Flathead Agency, Mont., last year was $12,000. In this bill it has been increased to $20,000. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why that increase was made.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senate hearings show conclusively on page 189, et seq., that the sum of $12,000 was not sufficient for the support and maintenance of those Indians, and I believe the committee unanimously came to the resolution that this sum was necessary. It was disclosed that many of the Indians were starving, and that the rations were not sufficient to maintain a person; that the ration for one day was not even sufficient for one meal. I am profoundly convinced that this is a necessary and a proper increase. I have no doubt in the world about it.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that this is an emergent case of immediate necessity; that this appropriation is made for people who are destitute and in need.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 2, after the word "employees," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$25,000, of which amount not exceeding $8,000 may be expended for salaries and the remainder to be immediately available for subsistence," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Indians at Blackfeet Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $25,000, of which amount not exceeding $8,000 may be expended for salaries and the remainder to be immediately available for subsistence.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is an increase of $10,000 from last year's appropriation.

Mr. ASHURST. The same statement which I just made with reference to the other item applies here, except that the exigency was so apparent that the committee used language in lines 3, 4, and 5 providing that $8,000 of this must not be expended for salaries, but must be used immediately for subsistence. There is an emergency there; and the committee also came to the unanimous resolution that this was a necessary and just increase. It was the subject of some considerable discussion and investigation.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment provides, however, that of the $25,000 not exceeding $8,000 may be expended for salaries.

Mr. ASHURST. That is all that is necessary for salaries.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a pretty good proportion.

Mr. ASHURST. That is about the sum requisite for salaries to employees in and about the agency.

Mr. SMOOT. That is about a third of the whole sum. Does it take a third of all that is appropriated for these Indians to pay for salaries for handling them?

Mr. ASHURST. Of course the Senator knows that there are, in addition to the superintendent, farmers, blacksmiths, and various other employees. I have not the number at hand just now, but that is not an excessive sum.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to say that this $25,000 is not merely for the Indians but it is for paying the expenses of the agency and the stationary employees who are there the year round.

Mr. SMOOT. No; there is an appropriation made in another part of this bill for the payment of agents and all the other help. This is simply for the support and civilization of the Indians at the Blackfeet Agency, Mont. It says, "including pay of employees." Of course that does not include the agent in charge of the agency. If the Senator says, though, that it is the usual amount, well and good; but I thought it took a considerable amount of the appropriation to pay the employees if it took one-third of the whole amount.

Mr. ASHURST. It took, for salaries and wages there, $8,153, last year.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to say that this is the item that I referred to when I was speaking of the other matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 16, after "$6,000," to insert, "Provided, That hereafter no tribal grazing lease or permit on the Crow Reservation shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior without first procuring the consent of a majority of the members of a council regularly called by said Indians: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, upon the application of any Indian allottee on said Crow Reservation, to build a fence in full compliance with the laws of Montana, sufficient to hold or turn all stock, inclosing the allotment of any Indian allottee, the same to be reimbursed out of any distributive tribal funds to which said Indian may be entitled; and such Indian allottee shall be permitted to lease his allotted lands when so fenced as aforesaid for a term not exceeding five years to any person or persons desiring to lease the same without interference on the part of any Government official: And be it further provided, That any lessee of allotted Indian lands on said Indian reservation shall be required to maintain said fence in good repair on the allotted lands so leased; and the Secretary of the Interior shall have the power, in case of any unfair treatment of the lessor by the lessee, to cancel or revise said lease. Natural guardians having the care and custody of minors or incompetent persons may make application, execute the lease above provided for, collect the rents, and do and perform all acts on behalf of such minors or incompetent persons which are herein provided to be done or performed by said Indian allottee, and there is hereby appropriated sufficient money, out of any tribal funds which are now or may hereafter be available, to carry out the provisions herein, said tribal funds to be reimbursed under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe," so as to make the paragraph read:

For fulfilling treaties with Crows, Montana: For pay of physician, $1,200; and for pay of carpenter, miller, engineer, farmer, and blacksmith (art. 10, treaty of May 7, 1868), $3,600; for pay of second blacksmith (art. 8, same treaty), $1,200; in all, $6,000: Provided, That hereafter no tribal grazing lease or permit on the Crow Reservation shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior without first procuring the consent of a majority of the members of a council regularly called by said Indians: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, upon the application of any Indian allottee on said Crow Reservation, to build a fence in full compliance with the laws of Montana, sufficient to hold or turn all stock, inclosing the allotment of any Indian allottee, the same to be reimbursed out of any distributive tribal funds to which said Indian may be entitled; and such Indian allottee shall be permitted to lease his allotted lands when so fenced as aforesaid for a term not exceeding five years to any person or persons desiring to lease the same without interference on the part of any Government official: And be it further provided, That any lessee of allotted Indian lands on said Indian reservation shall be required to maintain said fence in good repair on the allotted lands so leased; and the Secretary of the Interior shall have the power, in case of any unfair treatment of the lessor by the lessee, to cancel or revise said lease. Natural guardians having the care and custody of minors or incompetent persons may make application, execute the lease above provided for, collect the rents, and do and perform all acts on behalf of such minors or incompetent persons which are herein provided to be done or performed by said Indian allottee, and there is hereby appropriated sufficient money, out of any tribal funds which are now or may hereafter be available, to carry out the provisions herein, said tribal funds to be reimbursed under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there has been some controversy for some years over the leasing question on the Crow Reservation. I think there has been a good deal of just criticism as to the method of leasing this property, and especially as to the terms of the leases themselves. The department has leased lands to cattlemen and other stockmen who desired the use of the tribal lands, stipulating the amount per head that could be used upon the range, and limiting the range itself. Now, the fact is that on all of these leased lands there are certain allotments which have been made to the Indians. These allotments have not been fenced with any particular care. Those Indians who desired to use their lands on the reservation have in some cases produced a certain amount of hay and stacked it, only to have it destroyed by the herds of the lessees of the range.

This amendment proposes to furnish material for fencing such allotments as the allottees may desire fenced. It makes no provision, however, as I thought it did make when it passed the committee, for giving to the allotment holder such share of the total money received from the lease as his area is of the whole amount of land used. Of course, it is undoubtedly true that these acres in allotment are not counted in the description of land leased by the lessee, but they are nevertheless used by him. It has seemed to me that this was unfair; that the Indian had a just complaint in the matter. I think there ought to be a provision in the amendment whereby the owner of an allotment that is pastured by a stockman should receive such a pro rata share of the amount of lease money paid as his allotment is of the total area of the land allotted.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In regard to this Crow Reservation I will ask the Senator whether these are indiscriminate stock leases or whether they are leases confined to certain classes of stock? Are they cattle leases or sheep leases or both?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Both.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I did not know how that might be. I can see how under the law as interpreted by the court the lessee would receive pay under the cattle leases, but not under the sheep leases. That is the reason for my inquiry.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They are for all purposes that the stockmen would require.

As I said, there has been a good deal of complaint about this, and it does seem to me, in order to keep good faith with the Indians, that it could be easily cured. It could be so arranged that an Indian who had an allotment, even though it was not fenced, but was used by the stockmen for pasturing purposes, should receive his pro rata share of the amount of lease money in the proportion that his allotment bears to the whole area pastured.

This may seem a little matter, but it is one that could be adjusted, and in my judgment it would save a great deal of trouble. It would be equitable, at least, and it would be treating the Indian just exactly as the white man would demand that he should be treated. It seems to me that we can do no less than that.

I have not prepared an amendment, because until it was read I supposed that this amendment covered the point I am trying to make here. I am sure that it was so understood among the members of the committee, at least by myself.

Mr. President, I do not know whether this item will be objected to or not. It has been rumored that a point of order might be made against this amendment. I hope it will not be made. Montana is receiving a very large amount of appropriation under this bill, many of the items of which, in my judgment, are subject to points of order. If there is one item in it that would make for a better understanding between this Government and the Indians, this is the one. That an injustice has been practiced under it there can be, in my judgment, no question.

I am not now blaming anybody in particular, because it has seemed that the easiest way to avoid taking into consideration the rights of the individual Indian was to ignore his rights as an allottee on the Indian reservation. This fencing provision will cure the case of those Indians who have a personal use for their particular allotment. There is nothing in here, however, that protects those Indians who do not farm or cultivate their individual allotments, and yet such allotments are worth something to the cattlemen or stockmen who graze upon them. Therefore I repeat that this ought to be remedied, and if I could get the permission of the Senator to pass over this amendment for a few minutes until I could prepare in a few words a proposition to the effect that the Indians whose allotments are used, but not fenced, shall receive their pro rata share of the lease money I should be content to have that course followed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator, since he has expressed his approbation of the fencing provision here, whether the language does not make it rather a dangerous proposition? It commits the Government to the fencing of each one of these Indian allotments. I have not any doubt but that that would be taken advantage of by all the allottees who have not themselves fenced, for the reason that the very language here gives them the authority to lease an allotment after it has been fenced to anybody the Indian chooses without any supervision by the Department of the Interior, and it is expressly stated in the amendment that the lands, "when so fenced as aforesaid," for a term not exceeding five years, may be leased "to any person or persons desiring to lease the same without interference on the part of any Government official."

It occurs to me—and I address myself now to the Senator from Montana—that that might be rather a dangerous provision, and it would suit me very much better if the latter part of that paragraph were stricken out.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that the amendment must have been very, very ill considered. I rose, however, to say to the Senator from Michigan that the position he takes is unquestionably sound; that the allottees ought to receive such part of the entire amount paid for grazing as their individual allotments bear to the entire area of grazing land, or on some other similarly equitable basis. I am very sure that upon a moment's reflection the Senator from Michigan will not give his approval to the amendment as it now reads. If he desires to prepare an amendment along the line he suggests, I shall join him in requesting that the matter be postponed until he has an opportunity to prepare the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, as I said, I understood the amendment to be rather different. As I recall, it was proposed that somebody should draw an amendment along the lines we had discussed in the committee, and I do not recall ever having seen it again after it came in, so it was rather a stranger to me when it came up to-day.

Mr. WALSH. It would be a very simple matter to demonstrate mathematically to the Senator from Michigan that he could not possibly give his adherence to this amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will ask the chairman to allow this amendment to be passed over temporarily and proceed with the other items, until we can see what we can do with it.

Mr. ASHURST. There is no objection to its being passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over, then, until the completion of the bill, or until called up.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 10, after "$10,000," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For the support and civilization of Rocky Boy's Band of Chippewas and other indigent and homeless Indians in the State of Montana, including pay of employees, $10,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 14, after the words "the sum of," to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$150,000"; and in line 18, after the word "Indians," to insert "seeds, and necessary farming equipment," so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States not to exceed the sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Indians on the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana, for the purpose of purchasing and caring for cattle for the use of said Indians, seeds, and necessary farming equipment, to enable them to become self-supporting, under such rules, regulations, and conditions as said Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the chairman explain why the sum was increased from $75,000 to $150,000?

Mr. ASHURST. The amount of $150,000 was requested to be set aside from the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Indians of the Blackfeet Reservation, Mont., for the purpose of purchasing live stock to assist the Indians in embarking in the live-stock industry. There are at the present time about 2,500 Indians living on that reservation, a number of whom are already successful stockmen and have good herds, but there is quite a large number who have no cattle at all. The land on the Blackfeet Reservation is especially adapted to the raising of live stock, and owing to the shortness of the summer season is not especially suitable for agricultural purposes. The allotments made to these Indians comprise 280 acres of grazing land and 40 acres of irrigable land each. Owing to the fact that it is impracticable to make a success of agriculture a large portion of these Indians seek employment elsewhere at day labor, and their homes and allotments are therefore particularly neglected.

I read from pages 196 and 197 of the House hearings. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Utah that this is in accordance with the estimate—$150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 12, after the word "practicable," to insert "and any moneys heretofore or hereafter repaid by the Indians shall be available for reexpenditure under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for its repayment to the United States in the purchase of seeds, live stock, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment, and for such other purposes as may be deemed proper in promoting the civilization and support of said Indians until June 30, 1925," so as to make the clause read:

That any moneys which may be due from the Indians of the Fort Belknap Reservation, State of Montana, and unpaid on June 1, 1915, for property purchased under the provisions of the sections of the Indian appropriation acts approved April 30, 1908 (35 Stats. at L., pp. 70–83), appropriating the sum of $25,000 for the purchase of implements and other equipment for said Indians, under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior might prescribe for the repayment by the Indians to the United States of the sum so expended, and March 3, 1909 (35 Stats. at L., pp. 781–795), authorizing the use of the repayments made by the Indians until June 1, 1915, shall be collected as soon thereafter as is practicable, and any moneys heretofore or hereafter repaid by the Indians shall be available for reexpenditure under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for its repayment to the United States in the purchase of seeds, live stock, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment, and for such other purposes as may be deemed proper in promoting the civilization and support of said Indians until June 30, 1925.

Mr. SMOOT. The appropriation provides that it shall be reimbursable, and this amendment now provides that—

Any moneys heretofore or hereafter repaid by the Indians shall be available for reexpenditure under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for its repayment to the United States in the purchase of seeds, live stock, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools—

And so forth.

Does the Senator believe that that is a safe provision of law? It does seem to me, Mr. President, that that is going far, far afield from the position first taken by Congress.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator propounded to me a question very difficult for me to answer. In fact, I do not think I will attempt any answer at all, because I might have to explain my explanation. However, the Senator will recall that a very protracted discussion was had on this subject when this bill was up last year.

This is a part of the revolving appropriation. When the money is reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States it is made available for a like purpose, as it is in the language of the estimate. It was approved by the House and by the Senate committee. I trust that this bill will not establish a principle of general legislation, but in view of the fact that it was thoroughly discussed last year and the purpose for which it may be used is set out as a revolving fund I see no particular objection to it at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that Congress has not at any time I know of objected to making appropriations for this purpose wherever they have been reimbursable from the Indian fund, but this is going away beyond that. I do not believe there ought to be money, whether from a reimbursable fund or not, that comes into the Treasury of the United States unless it can be accounted for, and I do not believe it ought to be appropriated for any future purpose unless Congress says it shall be used for that particular purpose, and this is unwise legislation.

Mr. ASHURST. That is, the method, the Senator thinks, is unwise?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the method.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator permit me to read him from page 129 of the hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. I will, gladly.

Mr. ASHURST (reading)—

Senator PAGE. What is the necessity for this clause?

Mr. MERITT. This is a reimbursable appropriation. The time allowed by Congress was so short that the Indians have not been able to reimburse the entire amount. They have returned to the Treasury something like $10,000, but we would like to have the item for a reimbursable appropriation, and giving the Indians on this reservation a longer time, about the same time that we are allowing other Indians under general reimbursable items, and in order to bring that about we would like to have inserted, after the word "practicable," the following language, which was omitted by the House.

Then follows the language to which the Senator objects.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will observe that the House had not put in that language, and I think the least thing we can do is to strike it out. I therefore ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I had no part or parcel in having this amendment inserted. I do not think I was present in the committee when it was done; in fact, I am sure I was not; but I know it is in accordance with the general plan of revolving fund that the Indian Bureau has been insisting upon for years and has made loud and strong claims for. The Indian Bureau was represented before the committee by Mr. Meritt. He discussed the matter with the committee and gave his reasons for it, and the reasons appear to have been satisfactory to the committee. As long as the committee has seen fit to adopt the idea that the bureau has promulgated on that subject, I believe the amendment ought to stay in.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, it seems to me, with all due deference to the Senator from Montana, this is establishing a precedent of appropriating money that we ought not to establish. It allows the Secretary of the Treasury to expend money in the Treasury of the United States without any authority of Congress given therefor. While I do not——

Mr. MYERS. Let me say to the Senator, if he will permit me, here is the authority right here.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I say this establishes the practice of the Secretary of the Interior, and the same would be applicable to any other department, expending from the Treasury of the United States moneys without any authority of Congress for any definite purpose. While a revolving fund is probably well enough, while it is well enough to keep on using this fund from year to year for the definite purpose stated, I think from year to year it ought to be appropriated in definite sums. It seems to me we are setting a precedent, if this amendment passes, that will return to plague us in other matters.

We had an illustration of that, I will say, in Montana a number of years ago, and we put an end to the practice. There was a revolving fund in connection with the Forestry Service where the entire expense of the Forestry Service as authorized out of the Treasury, so far as I know, received from rentals, and so forth, was subject to the disposition of a single officer. It worked very badly, and the consequence was that Congress thereafter changed the method of that appropriation. I think we ought not to enter into it in the Indian Service, because the Indian Service has enough to bear by reason of the complexity of its duties without having possibly also to bear not the scandal, perhaps, but the possible repetition of a scandal arising in connection with this fund. I hope the amendment will be disagreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 21, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to announce, at such time as in his opinion seems proper, the charge for construction of irrigation systems on the Blackfeet, Flathead, and Fort Peck Indian Reservations in Montana, which shall be made against each acre of land irrigable by the systems on each of said reservations. Such charges shall be assessed against the land irrigable by the systems on each said reservation in the proportion of the total construction cost which each acre of such land bears to the whole area of irrigable land thereunder.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I think it is right to say before we enter upon the legislation presented by this amendment and by the several amendments——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has not yet been read.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to state the position of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will first be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

On the 1st day of December after the announcement by the Secretary of the Interior of the construction charge, the allottee, entryman, purchaser, or owner of such irrigable land which might have been furnished water for irrigation during the whole of the preceding irrigation season, from ditches actually constructed, shall pay to the superintendent of the reservation where the land is located, for deposit to the credit of the United States as a reimbursement of the appropriations made or to be made for construction of said irrigation systems, 5 per cent of the construction charge fixed for his land, as an initial installment, and shall pay the balance of the charge in 15 annual installments, the first five of which shall each be 5 per cent of the construction charge and the remainder shall each be 7 per cent of the construction charge. The first of the annual installments shall become due and payable on December 1 of the fifth calendar year after the initial installment: Provided, That any allottee, entryman, purchaser, or owner may, if he so elects, pay the whole or any part of the construction charges within any shorter period: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, grant such extension of the time for payments herein required from Indian allottees or their heirs as he may determine proper and necessary, so long as such land remains in Indian title.

That the tribal funds heretofore covered into the Treasury of the United States in partial reimbursement of appropriations made for constructing irrigation systems on said reservations shall be placed to the credit of the tribe and be available for such expenditure for the benefit of the tribe as may be made under existing law.

And there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $525,187.93 for this purpose, $4,544.40 thereof to be credited to the Indians of the Blackfeet Reservation, $440,217.78 thereof to be credited to the Indians of the Flathead Reservation, and the balance, $80,425.75, to be credited to the Indians of the Fort Peck Reservation, the same being the amounts heretofore covered into the Treasury on this account. The cost of constructing irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians on these reservations shall be reimbursed to the United States as hereinbefore provided, and no further reimbursements from the tribal funds shall be made on account of said irrigation works, except that all charges against Indian allottees or their heirs herein authorized, unless otherwise paid, may be paid from the individual shares in the tribal funds, when the same is available for distribution, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, we have in the amendment just read entered upon a new system of conducting irrigation projects in the Indian lands of Montana and, so far as I know, of Indian lands anywhere. For years we have been making appropriations for these reservations—the Blackfeet, Flathead, and Fort Peck—in Montana, under the proviso or law that the Indian lands, the Indian property, on those reservations should be holden to make good any advances made from the Federal Treasury.

It will be remembered that last year there was a somewhat extended discussion as to whether, under this arrangement, the Indian rights to the water on the reservation covered by these irrigation projects was fairly and properly safeguarded.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to call the attention of the Chair and of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that the reading of the amendment had not yet been completed. If I am not misinformed the amendment continues down to page 51.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. FALL. The committee amendment embraces several different and distinct subjects. The portion of the amendment as to which the Senator from Vermont is now raising the question commences on line 22, on page 42, and ends with line 5, on page 44. Following that are entirely different subjects treated of; but this is upon the subject of the method of collecting for charges, and so forth, of which the Senator from Vermont is now speaking. The balance is an appropriation which could stand alone, even if this first portion were stricken out.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not know that it is material, but I think it is all one amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to be heard before yielding to the Senator from Montana. My remarks will be addressed not only to what has been read but to the items on pages 45, 46, and 47. So far as I am concerned, I rather think, for the benefit of the discussion, it might be well, as the Senator from Arkansas suggests, to have the Secretary read the bill down to line 13, on page 48. I should certainly be pleased to have that done, if no objection is made.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PAGE. I yield for a question.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is correct. The matter embraced down to line 16, on page 51, is all one amendment, and was offered as one amendment by myself in the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and was acted upon by the committee as one amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It embraces three different projects.

Mr. PAGE. I should be glad, if I may be allowed, to have it read in full, down to the bottom of line 15, on page 51, as suggested by the Senator from Montana.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the sum of $50,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, for continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in Montana, which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended: Provided, That the entryman upon the surplus unallotted lands to be irrigated by such systems shall, in addition to compliance with the homestead laws, before receiving patent for the lands covered by his entry, pay the charges apportioned against such tract as herein authorized, and a failure to make any two payments when due shall render the entry subject to cancellation, with the forfeiture to the United States of all rights acquired under the provisions of this act, as well as of any moneys paid on account thereof. The purchaser of any Indian allotment to be irrigated by such systems, purchased upon approval of the Secretary of the Interior, before the charges against said allotment herein authorized shall have been paid, shall pay all charges remaining unpaid at the time of such purchase, and in all patents or deeds for such purchased allotments, and also in all patents in fee to allottees or their heirs issued before payment of all such charges herein authorized to be made against their allotments, there shall be expressed that there is reserved upon the lands herein described a lien for such charges, and such lien may be enforced, or, upon payment of the delinquent charges, may be released by the Secretary of the Interior. (Acts Mar. 1, 1907, vol. 34, p. 1035; Apr. 4, 1910, vol. 36, p. 277; Mar. 3, 1911, vol. 36, p. 1066; Aug. 24, 1912, vol. 37, p. 526; June 30, 1913, vol. 38, p. 90; Aug. 1, 1914, vol. 38, p. 596.)

That the sum of $686,996.81 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana, which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended: Provided, That the payments for the proportionate cost of the construction of said systems required of settlers on the surplus unallotted land by section 9, chapter 1495, Statutes of the United States of America, entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," as amended by section 15 of the act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 448), shall be made as herein provided: Provided further, That nothing contained in the act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 444), shall be construed to exempt the purchaser of any Indian allotment purchased prior to the expiration of the trust period thereon from any charge for construction of the irrigation system incurred up to the time of such purchase except such charges as shall have accrued and become due in accordance with the public notices herein provided for, or to relieve the owners of all land allotted to Indians in severalty from payment of the charges herein required to be made against said land on account of construction of the irrigation systems; and in carrying out the provisions of said section the exemption therein authorized from charges incurred against allotments purchased prior to the expiration of the trust period thereon shall be the amount of the charges or installments thereof due under public notice herein provided for up to the time of such purchase. (Acts Apr. 23, 1904, vol. 33, p. 365; Apr. 30, 1908, vol. 35, p. 83; May 29, 1908, vol. 35, p. 450; Mar. 3, 1909, vol. 35, p. 795; Apr. 4, 1910, vol. 36, p. 277; Mar. 3, 1911, vol. 36,

p. 1066; Aug. 24, 1912, vol. 37, p. 526; June 30, 1913, vol. 38, p. 90; Aug. 1, 1914, vol. 38, p. 593.)

That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation in Montana, which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended: Provided, That the proportionate cost of the construction of said systems required of settlers and entrymen on the surplus unallotted irrigable land by section 2 of the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 558), shall be paid as herein provided: Provided further, That nothing contained in said act of May 30, 1908, shall be construed to exempt the purchaser of any Indian allotment purchased prior to the expiration of the trust period thereon from any charge for construction of the irrigation system incurred up to the time of such purchase except such charges as shall have accrued and become due in accordance with the public notices herein provided for, and the purchaser of any Indian allotment to be irrigated by said systems purchased upon approval of the Secretary of the Interior before the charges against said allotment herein authorized shall have been paid shall pay all charges remaining unpaid at the time of such purchase, and in all patents or deeds for such purchased allotments, and also in all patents in fee to allottees or their heirs issued before payment shall have been made of all such charges herein authorized to be made against their allotments, there shall be expressed that there is reserved upon the lands therein described a lien for such charges, and such lien may be enforced, or, upon payment of the delinquent charges, may be released by the Secretary of the Interior. (Acts May 30, 1908, vol. 35, p. 558; Aug. 24, 1912, vol. 37, p. 526; June 30, 1913, vol. 38, p. 90; Aug. 1, 1914, vol. 38, p. 593.)

That in addition to the construction charges every allottee, entryman, purchaser, or owner shall pay to the superintendent of the reservation a maintenance and operation charge based upon the total cost of maintenance and operation of the systems on the several reservations, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to fix such maintenance and operation charge upon such basis as shall be equitable to the owners of the irrigable land. Such charges when collected shall be available for expenditure in the maintenance and operation of the systems on the reservation where collected: Provided, That delivery of water to any tract of land may be refused on account of nonpayment of any charges herein authorized, and the same may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be collected by a suit for money owed: Provided further, That the rights of the United States to water for Indian lands shall be continued in full force and effect until the Indian title to such land is extinguished.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations and issue such notices as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and he is hereby authorized and directed to determine the area of land on each reservation which may be irrigated from constructed ditches and to determine what allowance, if any, shall be made for ditches constructed by individuals for the diversion and distribution of a partial or total water supply for allotted or surplus unallotted land: Provided, That if water be available prior to the announcement of the charge herein authorized, the Secretary of the Interior may furnish water to land under the systems on the said reservations, making a reasonable charge therefor, and such charges when collected may be used for construction or maintenance of the systems through which such water shall have been furnished.

The work to be done with the amounts herein appropriated for the completion of these projects may be done by the Reclamation Service, on plans and estimates furnished by that service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill in regard to the amendment, beginning on line 16, on page 46. The sum of $686,996.81 seems to be a very large one for the purposes of irrigation on the Flathead Indian Reservation. I should like to know what the appropriation last year was for the purpose of irrigation, and as to whether or not that has been expended; and, further, as to whether this is based on an estimate; and if so, as to the details of that estimate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in reply to the question of the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, I will say that the sum of $500,000 was estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury, as required by law, and that last year for this project $500,000 was estimated; but there was a balance of $186,996 unused, which sum, although appropriated last year, being unused, the department notwithstanding wishes now to use, and it has been added to this appropriation as estimated for by the Treasury Department. The estimate was made in view of and in the light of the fact that $500,000 would be used. Since, however, the $500,000 was not used, it was necessary, in order that they should be able to complete the work with some reference to regularity, and all that, that the $186,996.81, an unused balance from the last fiscal year, be added to this appropriation.

Mr. STERLING. With inability to use $500,000 last year, there being $186,996.81 left of that appropriation, why the necessity for so large an appropriation this year? Is it not probable that it can not be used, in view of the failure to use last year's appropriation?

Mr. ASHURST. Of course the department has no desire merely precipitately and hurriedly to use money. It uses the money in pursuance of a well-defined policy of construction, with due regard to security of foundation and propriety in building ditches. The department ought not to be penalized because it did not precipitately expend the money. It argues for care and diligence in the public service that they have not used the money precipitately. It was estimated for, and I have here the estimate. That is all I have to say about the matter.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. My attention was diverted at the time the Senator from South Dakota made his inquiry, and I did not hear the question he addressed to the chairman of the committee. Will he state it again, so that I may understand what he wants to know?

Mr. STERLING. The inquiry is, Why should we appropriate this year $686,996.81 for irrigation purposes on the Flathead Indian Reservation of Montana when all of the appropriation of $500,000 made last year was not used, and $186,996.81 was left over from that appropriation? Would not $500,000 be a sufficient appropriation this year, if $186,996 was left over from the $500,000 appropriation of last year?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will gladly answer that question, and explain it according to the facts. The Senator from South Dakota is not exactly right in his understanding of the facts; he is under some misapprehension. There was not $500,000 appropriated for this project last year.

Mr. STERLING. I so understood from the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Arizona was in error. He should have said that was for a preceding year.

Mr. MYERS. There was not $500,000 appropriated for the project last year, nor has there ever been in any one year $500,000 appropriated. There has never been as much as $500,000 appropriated in any one year for the Flathead reclamation project. The Indian appropriation bill for last year, the year beginning July 1, 1914, and ending July 1, 1915, appropriated only $200,000 for work on the Flathead reclamation project. That was all that was obtained out of conference. The Senate voted $250,000, but, as I have said, only $200,000 was obtained out of conference.

For the year before that—that is, for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1913, and ending July 1, 1914—the appropriation, which was made in the spring of 1913, was $325,000. The Senate voted $375,000, but I could only get $325,000 out of conference. That money was supposed to be expended during the year beginning July 1, 1913, and ending July 1, 1914; but it has not been the practice of the Reclamation Service, which is in charge of this project, to take just the exact sum of money which has been appropriated for a fiscal year and begin spending it on the 1st day of July of any year, and just exactly use up all of that money by the 1st day of July of the next succeeding year. That is impossible and impracticable for this reason: The fiscal year of the Government begins on the 1st day of July of each year and ends with the 30th day of June of the following year. The plans for this reclamation work are made up in the winter, and the work is begun upon them as soon as practicable in the early spring of the calendar year, and most, if not all, of it is let by contract. It is impossible for the Reclamation Service to figure that they can spend just exactly what was left over from last summer and utilize it up to the 1st day of July, and then depend upon getting a new appropriation beginning on the 1st of July to carry them on into December. They do not know that they are going to get any new appropriation; and, if they do, they do not know how much it will be, and the plans are made and the contracts often let before the appropriations are passed.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator say now that plans already made call for the appropriation of $686,996 to be expended in the next fiscal year?

Mr. MYERS. I think so, but can not say positively. The Reclamation Service could tell, however, and I could learn by going to the phone and calling them up.

But, continuing the thread of my explanation, the Reclamation Service has been prosecuting the work on parts of this project where the work is very badly needed. Part of it is on the Pablo Canal, which they began in the spring of 1914 and on which they continued the work up to late last fall. In order to have money with which to continue to prosecute the work this spring and up to the 1st of July of this year and complete it by that time, in order to be sure of money for that purpose and not be dependent upon a new appropriation for this year, the sum of $187,000 was reserved or held in abeyance from the appropriation for the year from July 1, 1913, to July 1, 1914, with the expectation that that money would be used to complete certain work by June of this year so that the irrigation ditches might be available to the settlers for this year's growing crop. They felt safe in doing that, because it had always been the custom of the Comptroller of the Treasury, who has to approve these expenditures, to permit the expenditure of money, after it was once appropriated for such a project, after the expiration of the fiscal year. That is, heretofore in all the life and history of this project, if money which was appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30 of a certain year was not used up the Comptroller of the Treasury Department permitted the Reclamation Service to draw the money and expend it, even after the 1st day of July; but when they started to draw upon this $187,000, or to make arrangements to get it, the Comptroller of the Treasury reversed his entire practice of years before and told them that, because the money had not been expended prior to July 1, 1914, it was forfeited, and that the Reclamation Service could not have the use of it, and that it was lost forever to the project.

Mr. STERLING. Unless reappropriated.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; unless reappropriated.

Mr. STERLING. Exactly. Now, I should like to ask the Senator what was the appropriation last year from which this amount of nearly $187,000 was left over?

Mr. MYERS. It was the appropriation of year before last, made in the spring of 1913. It was $325,000, adopted in conference, and it was all appropriated to be expended by the 1st day of July, 1914; but there was $187,000 that was not expended by that date, and it was held back for the express purpose of completing certain work this spring, so that there was $187,000 lost, unless reappropriated, out of a $325,000 appropriation, leaving only $138,000, of which the project received the benefit out of an appropriation of $325,000 intended for it. The project is in no condition to lose that money and it would not be right for it to lose it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think the statement made by the Senator from Montana makes the case all the stronger against so large an appropriation now. If that amount has been left over out of the appropriation of 1913 or any subsequent appropriation, that of 1914, still less reason is there for now appropriating $500,000 in addition to the amount left over from that appropriation.

Mr. MYERS. I can not help that. I am only stating the facts, but I can not agree with the Senator's conclusion. It was left over because the reclamation officials had been in the habit, year in and year out theretofore, from the beginning of this project, of leaving a part of the money over to be expended the next spring, because the calendar year, the working year, does not fit in with the fiscal year, which begins the 1st of July.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, I understand, Mr. President. The question is not as to whether it is left over to be drawn upon or as to whether it is to be reappropriated. It is the question of the amount, and of the necessity for so large an amount.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. I will yield to the Senator from Vermont, but I claim the floor.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Montana is correct.

Mr. PAGE. I beg pardon; I will wait until the Senator has concluded.

Mr. MYERS. The appropriation for last year was $200,000, and it has all been expended. Now, then, they calculated to use this $187,000 this spring; and if they can get it by virtue of a reappropriation it will all be used up by the 30th day of June of this year, and there will not be a cent left of it, and they will then have not a cent to begin work on for the new year, beginning next July, unless more money is appropriated.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to know as to what amount the Senator has referred to of which there will not be a cent left. Is it the $187,000 or is it this entire appropriation?

Mr. MYERS. If this year's appropriation is made immediately available, as asked, there will not be a cent left of the $187,000 by the 30th day of June. It will all have been used on uncompleted work that was left over, uncompleted from last summer; and for the year beginning July 1, 1915, the appropriation will be just whatever this Congress appropriates outside of the $187,000. That is, if it appropriates $500,000 more, it will have $500,000 to begin work with on the 1st of next July.

Mr. STERLING. Can the Senator inform me as to the details of the work to be done that will call for the use of $187,000 up until the 30th day of June, or the beginning of the next fiscal year?

Mr. MYERS. I can. I have the documentary evidence. It is contained in letters here from the Reclamation Service, which I will read.

I will first read a letter from Mr. A. P. Davis, Chief of the Reclamation Service.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1915.

Hon. H. L. MYERS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Copy of your letter of January 20 to Mr. E. F. Tabor has been sent to me, with his reply of January 26, and comments by Mr. H. N. Savage of January 28, both inclosed herewith.

The condition as noted in these letters is critical, and I wish to emphasize the necessity of immediate consideration of the situation.

It appears that in passing upon the Indian appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1914 (38 Stat., 582), there was a change in the ruling, one which was not fully appreciated until decision was made by the Comptroller of the Treasury. The effect of this change was to cause to revert back to the Treasury certain portions of appropriations which under the rulings of previous years had been available until expended.

You fully appreciate the peculiar conditions existing where construction of irrigation works can be carried on most advantageously during certain seasons of the year. The fiscal year is such that it terminates at the beginning or near the time when greatest activity should be displayed in construction. It has been found advantageous therefore, as well as economical, to lay out the work and if necessary execute a portion of it after the end of the fiscal year, notably in the instances where the appropriations for the fiscal year have not been available until too late to accomplish the best results during the season in which they have been made.

The unexpected change, unless corrected, must lead to considerable hardship among the families located on the dry lands, who have been confidently expecting that the irrigation works would be built and have made preparations accordingly.

Yours, very truly, A. P. DAVIS,
Director and Chief Engineer.

(Two inclosures.)

The next letter I have is from Mr. E. F. Tabor, the project manager on the ground:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
St. Ignatius, Mont., January 26, 1915.

Subject: Flathead project—E-5.

Hon. H. L. MYERS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of your inquiry of January 20 concerning status of work on Flathead project.

Under date of January 2 this office was advised that owing to the wording of the appropriation act passed June 30, 1913, apportioning funds for use on Flathead project, no portion of that appropriation was available after July 1, 1914. The act did not provide that the money appropriated would be "available until expended," and consequently, as an item of the Indian bill for fiscal year 1914, no portion could be expended after the close of said fiscal year. This decision has reduced the balance available for construction very materially. The exact figures are not at present available to this office.

So far as this office is informed, contracts have not been awarded for any of the additional canals or structures which it was hoped to have completed by June 15, 1915, and the only hope of early construction of said works now seems to lie in the early passage of an appropriation bill which shall make money for construction immediately available.

This office is in receipt of frequent inquiries from entrymen as to whether there is positive assurance that water can be furnished for the season of 1915, but at the present time is unable to answer these questions.

Respectfully, E. F. TABOR, Project Manager.

The next letter that I have is from Mr. H. N. Savage, late supervising engineer:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
SUPERVISING ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
Great Falls, Mont., January 28, 1915.

Subject: Flathead project funds.

Hon. H. L. MYERS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MYERS: This office has received a copy of your letter of January 20, 1915, to the project manager, concerning the status of work on the Flathead project, Montana, and of his reply thereto. It is deemed desirable to supplement the project manager's letter with some additional information and explanations.

Owing to the wording of the appropriation act, passed June 30, 1913, in which was included an item appropriating funds for construction of irrigation works, Flathead project, the Comptroller of the Treasury had held that no portion of such appropriation was available for expending after July 1, 1914, since it was not explicitly provided, as has been usually done, that the appropriation was "available until expended." This is said to have reduced the balance available for construction by about $187,000.

As you are aware, payment for all liabilities incurred is first made out of the reclamation fund and claims are subsequently prepared against the Indian Service. Materials and supplies purchased out of the reclamation fund are not charged to the Indian appropriation until after such materials and supplies have been used in the work. Equipment used in construction is held as the property of the Reclamation Service, and claims are made monthly against the appropriation in the Indian bill for the use of such equipment and depreciation thereof. It has been the requirement, however, to reserve from the appropriation made in the Indian bill a sufficient amount to cover the cost of such equipment, materials, and supplies on hand. Due to the above facts, a considerable portion of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1914 had not been covered by claims against the Indian Service for work done prior to July 1, 1914, although a considerable amount had been reserved to cover the equipment being used and a considerable portion of the appropriation would have been eventually expended for materials and supplies already purchased and already paid for out of the reclamation fund, but for which claims had not yet been made against the Indian appropriation.

On December 22, 1914, proposals were received for the construction of structures, Pablo laterals "A" and "31-A" and sublaterals, these structures being necessary for the completion of works for the irrigation of lands included in what is known as the Valley View tract, lying about 6 miles southwest of Polson, Mont. The specifications required the completion of the work on or before May 31, 1915. The lowest bid on this work was very satisfactory, but, owing to the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury referred to above, there will be no funds for performing the work. The estimated cost of this work, including all materials, supplies, and overhead charges, is about $67,000.

On December 15, 1914, proposals were received for the excavation of canals, Pablo lateral A and sublaterals, for the irrigation of lands lying in the vicinity of Horte, about 12 miles west of Ronan. These canals were to have been completed before June 30, 1915. A very satisfactory bid was received for performing the work. There are, however, no funds for the construction of these canals, the estimated cost of which, including all materials, supplies, and overhead charges, will be about $25,000; nor are there any funds for the construction of the structures on these canals, the estimated cost of which, including all materials, supplies, and overhead charges, is about $42,000.

The present financial status of the project, according to the understanding of this office, is such that it will be impossible to construct any of the works described above unless funds are provided by the present Congress, and it will not be possible to construct them in time for use in 1915 unless funds appropriated are made available for immediate use. The work mentioned above is such as would have been constructed and paid for out of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1914, except for the reversion of funds as hereinbefore explained, and of course forms but a small part of the work which it is very desirable to perform in connection with the irrigation of lands on the Flathead project.

Very truly, yours,

H. N. SAVAGE, Supervising Engineer.

CC—PROJECT MANAGER,
St. Ignatius, Mont.

Now, I wish to supplement that with a few remarks, which I will make as brief as possible, explaining why the sum of $500,000 was first put in this bill by the Indian Committee, and why it was then increased by $187,000, to make in all $687,000, lacking a few dollars and cents. I speak in round numbers.

It had not been the practice in former years—last year it was done, but prior to that it had not been the practice—to put in the bill appropriating these funds to this project or other projects the words "to remain available until expended." It was not known to be necessary. It had never been done. It had not been found to be necessary. That language was not put in the departmental estimates. The Comptroller of the Treasury had held right along in prior years that it was not necessary to use those words and that it was not necessary to use up or check out all of these funds prior to the 1st day of July of a certain year, when the fiscal year ended, but had uniformly held that if obligations were incurred and contracts let and the work planned and outlined, the money could be drawn out afterwards and used until expended; and the Reclamation Service had been going on that theory. They have already made plans and planned work and let contracts and executed part of the work, without paying for it as yet, of course, to consume all of this $187,000; but when they came to draw on the money they found that the Comptroller of the Treasury had suddenly, and without any notice to anybody of his intention, reversed all of his prior rulings, and that he said: "You can not draw any more of this money, because it was not checked out before the 1st day of July, 1914."

That money, as is shown in these letters, had been planned to be spent this spring to complete certain work, and much of it is already contracted for, and, in fact, as the letters say, much of it has already been spent. That is, the Government is obligated for it. Now, before these letters brought this subject to my attention the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs had met and had revised its system and plan and method of procedure of conducting work on this reclamation project, had done it at the request and demand of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and certain other Senators on the Indian Committee of the Senate, who thought that the old system was not fair to the Indians, and did it in compliance with the idea and wishes of the Indian Bureau. The Indian Bureau coincided with these Senators on the committee who thought that the old plan was not entirely fair to the Indians, and the Indian Bureau prepared this entire amendment which has been read here, including the sums of money contained in it, and submitted it through Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to the Indian Committee.

My colleague [Mr. WALSH] and I and the Representatives from Montana in the House of Representatives examined this amendment and decided that it was acceptable to us, and Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner, who was attending all the sittings of the committee, explained the plan in detail, and it seemed satisfactory to everyone. There was not a dissenting note uttered in the committee, as far as I know, and I was there all the time the discussion was on in regard to it. The Indian Bureau recommended that the sum of $500,000 be appropriated for this work for the year beginning July 1, 1915, and ending June 30, 1916. It will take about $5,000,000 to complete this project. Appropriating $200,000 a year, as was appropriated last year, would take 25 years to complete the work, and the Indians for whom it is intended to be a benefit would nearly all be dead, and the white settlers would nearly all be dead. But we were not able to get an appropriation of more than $200,000 last year, owing to the intense opposition in the Indian Affairs Committees of the House and the Senate and the Indian Bureau to the method of procedure on which the work was being conducted and the money expended, and on account of those objections we could get only $200,000 last year.

This year the plan is changed in toto to conform to the idea of the Indian Bureau and the ideas of those Senators on the Senate Indian Committee who have not been satisfied with the old plan. I think the old plan was fair, but others did not. In fact, the Indian Bureau drew up this amendment. It is a bureau amendment, and under the amendment and under that plan of procedure the Indian Bureau estimated and recommended that the sum of $500,000 be appropriated for the coming year. That was in the estimate sent in by the Treasury Department, made up by the Indian Bureau, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and it went the regular round and was approved by all the officials and came in from the Treasury Department as a regular estimate of $500,000 for this project for the coming year, beginning July 1, 1915.

Mr. Meritt, the assistant commissioner, was present and stated to the committee that the Indian Bureau thought this amount necessary and thought that it ought to be appropriated, and that it was in the interest of the settlers and the Indians, as well.

Now, on the new plan, the project, in the Indian Bureau's opinion, was on a better basis to appropriate a larger sum than heretofore and to push it on to completion as rapidly as possible. That $500,000 that was estimated for and that the Indian Bureau recommended and urged is for work to begin the 1st day of July, 1915, and ending June 30, 1916. It is a larger sum than has ever been appropriated for any one year heretofore because we have never been able to get what the Reclamation Service demanded for this work. The Reclamation Service, year after year, for years back, has demanded the sum of at least $600,000 a year for the work, but owing to objections to the plan on which it was being prosecuted we could never get out of Congress more than $200,000, as in the case of the year before last, to $400,000, the most that was appropriated for any one year.

The work is lagging, lagging in a most lamentable manner, but the Indian Bureau, the Indians, and the white settlers alike understand that all objections have been remedied and overcome by this proposed legislation, and understand that a fair amount, reasonably necessary to push the work along with all reasonable speed, was expected and promised for this year, and accordingly $500,000 was recommended and the committee voted $500,000 and put it into the bill; $500,000 for the year beginning July 1, 1915, and ending June 30, 1916. Everybody was agreeable and willing to an appropriation of $500,000, and it was put in the bill.

Then there came to light through this correspondence and to my knowledge for the first time the fact that, owing to an unexpected reversal of the rulings of the Comptroller of the Treasury, the sum of $187,000 out of $325,000—which was appropriated for the year ending July 1, 1914, although plans for its expenditure had been made, and although the Government had obligated itself for much of it—had not been paid out, as it was intended to be used to meet these obligations that had not been covered and put a finish to certain very important work this spring that was left over from last fall.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly; with great pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have listened to the Senator with a great deal of interest. He has stated two or three times that the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury was a new and unexpected ruling. I confess I had not so understood. I have always understood that an appropriation for a specific year, if it were not used in that year, could only be used subsequently by being reappropriated by Congress, unless the appropriation first carried a specific provision that it should be used until exhausted. I am somewhat surprised at the information; the Senator is giving us the impression that that practice has not prevailed. I can hardly think that is true. I presume it may have been the case in regard to some one appropriation; but I think the practice has been that if an appropriation is not made throughout the year for which it is appropriated it must then be reappropriated by Congress, and that has always been the rule, I think. Other Senators here probably know better than I do.

Mr. MYERS. I am speaking of this one item, and my authority is the letters I hold in my hand from the head official and other officials of the Reclamation Service. I think they may be relied upon; they certainly know the facts and, I think, are stating them correctly. I rely on this information, direct from the officials of the Reclamation Service——

Mr. WALSH. Will my colleague pardon me?

Mr. MYERS. Very gladly.

Mr. WALSH. I feel like saying that whatever may be the fact, it is perfectly obvious that the Reclamation Office, in whose charge was the work, proceeded on the assumption that that amount would be available, and did not make the effort to utilize it there, because they thought it could be more economically used at a later time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not want the Senator to think that I am antagonizing this proposition, but the Senator from Montana having stated several times the understanding of the Reclamation Service I wanted to put on record that that was not my understanding.

Mr. WALSH. I simply meant to indicate that whether it should have been done that way or otherwise the reclamation officers evidently proceeded on the assumption that it would be available, and then they find themselves in a state of surprise and learn it is not available.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. FALL. I think there is no question but that the statements of both Senators are absolutely correct. The Senator stated the law as it is. The Reclamation Service, however, which are handling this particular project, are not governed by the general law as to turning into the Treasury of the United States funds unsued at the expiration of a fiscal year. Their funds are not subject to such reversion to the General Treasury. They continue to operate for the particular project until the project is completed so long as there is any money unused that they can get hold of. So they were doubtless very much surprised to find that this being not within the provisions of the general reclamation fund but being a specific appropriation was subject to take the regular course.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator for the additional light upon the subject. I speak only of this particular reclamation project and these letters are my authority; these letters from high officials of the Reclamation Service state that prior to the time to which they refer they had been allowed invariably by the Comptroller of the Treasury to use the funds, to check them out, after the 1st of July, the end of the fiscal year, and when in pursuance of such custom they came to draw out $187,000 they found they were prevented by a new and to them very surprising ruling of the comptroller. So I get now to this point, that under this new method of prosecuting work on the Flathead project, which is entirely satisfactory to the Indian Bureau and which appeared entirely satisfactory to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, because not a member of the committee objected to it, and they accepted it by unanimous consent, it was agreed by the Indian Bureau and by the officials of the Government who make estimates and by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, that $500,000 was needed for this project and could be profitably used to good advantage for the year beginning the 1st day of July, 1915, and ending the 30th day of June, 1916.

After that had been done, after that appropriation had been recommended by the committee, these letters came to hand and the department for the first time through an unexpected and unprecedented ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, to the great surprise of the Reclamation Service, learned that the project had lost the sum of $187,000 which had been once appropriated to it by Congress; money that had been voted to it and allotted and set aside for that project. It had been lost through the unexpected action of the Comptroller of the Treasury; and we found also that Representative STEPHENS of Texas, the chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs, was evidently so impressed with the injustice of the project losing $187,000, which Congress had once said it ought to have and which in fact and in right belonged to the project, that Representative STEPHENS of Texas, on the 15th day of last month, February, introduced in the House a joint resolution to reappropriate that $187,000 to the Flathead project, and also $33,000 for the Fort Peck project, and $64,000 for the Blackfeet project in Montana, all in the same boat, all lost to those projects on account of this misunderstanding between reclamation officials and the Comptroller of the Treasury. The resolution of Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, introduced in the House, is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the unexpended balances, amounting to $186,996.81, $33,561.95, and $64,295.23, in the appropriations made in the acts approved June 30, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 77), making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, for continuing the construction of irrigation systems on the Flathead, Blackfeet, and Fort Peck Indian Reservations, in the State of Montana, be, and the same are hereby, reappropriated and made available for use in such work during the fiscal year 1915, the same to be reimbursed to the United States.

When I found that Representative STEPHENS had introduced that joint resolution I felt it was hopeless to get the joint resolution through both branches of Congress in the few remaining days of this session, and therefore I did not introduce a counterpart resolution in the Senate and by that method endeavor to recapture this money, which had been actually lost to these projects through misunderstandings between the reclamation officials and the Comptroller of the Treasury. I did not believe there was a particle of a chance to get a joint resolution of that kind through Congress at this late day, owing to the crowded condition of the Senate Calendar and such a tremendous pressure here for the attention of the Senate to other work.

Therefore, the Senate Indian Affairs Committee being still in session, I went to that committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, and submitted the resolution of Representative STEPHENS to the committee and addressed it upon the justice of recovering this money for these projects and reappropriating it. I endeavored to impress upon the committee the just claims that these projects have for this money which had been lost and forfeited and had lapsed through no fault of the settlers nor of the Indians, the people to be benefited by it, but through a misunderstanding of the reclamation officials and the Comptroller of the Treasury, and I asked that these sums be added to the appropriations for these projects in the regular Indian appropriation bill.

I succeeded in getting the $187,000 that was due the Flathead project, and which had been lost in this manner to the Flathead project, reappropriated and added to the $500,000 which had been appropriated for that project. I was not successful in getting the $33,000 for the Fort Peck project nor the $64,000 for the Blackfeet project reappropriated. They stand upon the same principle. They stand on the same basis of right and justice, and one is as much due to the respective projects as the other. But, of course, the Flathead project was the principal item, and I asked for that first and the committee granted me that, but it refused the other two projects.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in this connection I should like to ask the Senator from Montana what relation, if any, there is between this appropriation of $686,996.81 and the appropriation found on page 44, beginning with line 12, as follows:

And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $525,187.93 for this purpose, $4,544.40 thereof to be credited to the Indians of the Blackfeet Reservation, $440,217.78 thereof to be credited to the Indians of the Flathead Reservation, and the balance—

The appropriation seems to be, according to the paragraph above, for irrigation purposes.

Mr. MYERS. I will answer that.

Mr. STERLING. I ask the Senator what is the relation between the appropriation he is discussing and these previous appropriations?

Mr. MYERS. The appropriation figures at page 44, which the Senator from South Dakota has just read, simply represent bookkeeping. They do not pay out a dollar of money. It was simply a part of the general reorganization scheme of reforming the method of procedure for the prosecution of this project that those figures were put there in that way. They do not represent paying out a dollar. It is simply a matter of bookkeeping to correct what, in the committee's opinion, needed correcting in the past method of prosecuting this work; and the chairman, and I believe every member of the committee, will coincide with me in that; and I will be glad to call on my colleague, who is very conversant with it, to verify what I say.

Mr. WALSH. Possibly I might clear up whatever obscurity there may be concerning the item about which the Senator from South Dakota asks information.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to endeavor to clear up whatever obscurity there may be in the mind of the Senator concerning the consequence of the item concerning which he has asked a question.

Mr. MYERS. I yield to my colleague for a further statement on that point.

Mr. STERLING. I shall be very glad to hear from the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. For the information of the Senator from South Dakota, I will state that that represents a certain amount of money which has been taken out of the tribal fund of these Indians for the reimbursement of the Treasury on account of appropriations heretofore made. Appropriations have been made in the aggregate of about $1,400,000 for this project. Under the law as it has heretofore existed that amount was to be reimbursed from the tribal fund of the Blackfeet Indians.

Some of the Blackfeet Indians took their allotments under the reclamation project; many others took their allotments above the irrigation project, and they secured practically no benefit whatever on account of it; yet under the law as it existed the Senator will see that from time to time certain lump sums were taken out of the tribal fund to reimburse the General Government, and the proportion of that which belonged to the Indians whose allotment was above the ditch was likewise taken in order to reimburse the Treasury.

A year ago it was urged on behalf of the Indian appropriation bill that that was entirely unjust to Indians who had taken their allotments above the ditch; that the irrigation project should be built by the lands under the ditch; that the lands of the white settlers as well as the lands of the Indians, who had selected their allotments under the ditch, were the lands that should be burdened, and the other lands should be freed from the charge. They propose at this time to correct that erroneous system. They, therefore, propose that hereafter these appropriations shall be a charge only upon the land under the ditch, the lands taken by the white settlers, the unallotted lands, as well as the allotments. They further provide that the amount of money which has heretofore been taken out of the tribal fund and put into the General Treasury, in the amount to which the Senator has now directed our attention, shall be taken out of the General Treasury and put into the tribal fund; and hereafter that only so much be taken out of the tribal fund as is properly assignable to those Indians whose allotments are under the ditch. So that the appropriation to which the Senator invites our attention is no provision for any further expenditure of money, but simply is a transfer of funds, which were originally taken out of the tribal fund and put into the Treasury, back from the Treasury into the tribal fund.

Now, that I have the floor I feel like saying that I hope very sincerely that the Senator from South Dakota will not feel moved to make any objection to this appropriation, aggregating $186,986.81, on this matter. My colleague [Mr. MYERS] has referred to the appropriations made in preceding years—only $200,000 last year, and $325,000 the year before. The work has been going on since the year 1908; that is, five years, and the aggregate is about $1,250,000 or $1,300,000 altogether.

I will now read to the Senator a paragraph from the report of the commission that was sent out last fall to investigate this matter. This item was the subject of very earnest debate a year ago, as will be recalled. Considerable question was raised concerning the feasibility of this and other Indian projects in the State of Montana, and Congress passed an act providing that a commission should go out to investigate these matters, and come back and give information and facts upon which the Senate could wisely proceed in the future with reference to them. I am only going to detain you now to read a paragraph from that report touching the Flathead Reservation. I read from the letter transmitting the report of that commission, published as House Document No. 1215, at page 35:

> As has been previously stated, there are under this project 97,000 acres of allotted lands and 55,000 acres of land other than Indian, namely, homestead land, State land, and vacant land. It is the opinion of this board that in working out the plan of properly distributing the waters having their sources in the tribal timberlands, the building of a comprehensive system sufficient in size to convey water to the homestead, as well as the Indian land, the most economic plan was followed to control the water supply; also to properly protect the Indians' water rights. The building of a system to have conveyed water to the Indians' lands only would eventually have been fraught with many complications, and the Indians would beyond doubt, sooner or later, have lost valuable water rights by homesteaders, not under the system, filing on and making a beneficial use of the water. The understanding of the homesteader that water would eventually be delivered to his land (however, no definite promise was made on the part of the United States as to date of delivery) enabled the United States, as agent for the Flathead Tribe, to dispose of practically all their surplus lands at the appraised value.
> The Indians and whites under the various divisions on this reservation are demanding continually that irrigation water be furnished for the allotments and homesteads taken as irrigable land at the earliest possible date, as well as to be informed of the estimated costs. Under the present method of financing this project it is absolutely impossible to accurately estimate the cost, as it depends to a large extent on the rate of progress of the work, which progress is entirely governed by the annual appropriation. For example, if the annual appropriation be limited to $100,000 for this project, it will take about 50 years to complete it, and in the meantime many of the Indians and homesteaders will be left in a destitute condition, while, on the other hand, if $500,000 are made available each year for construction purposes, the work can be completed within a period of 10 years. It can readily be seen that the work extended over a period of 50 years will probably cost 50 per cent more than if completed within a period of 10 years.

The Senator will understand that the lands under the project were appraised, and appraised upon the assumption that they would be subject to irrigation, and that the irrigation project that was outlined would be prosecuted with reasonable dispatch to completion. When this reservation was thrown open there was a large map prepared for the information of those who desired to enter lands within it, upon which map were depicted those lands which were under the project and which would be irrigated by it, and likewise the lands that were above the ditch and would not be open to irrigation. They were appraised accordingly. The Senator from South Dakota knows enough about these matters to understand that the land that was in such a situation as to be susceptible of irrigation from the ditch would be appraised relatively high, while the other land beyond would be appraised at a correspondingly low figure. The intending settler had his choice to go and take the land under the ditch or to take the land above. Many of them selected lands under the ditch; and, bear in mind, paid their money upon that assumption, and upon the assumption that this work was going to be prosecuted with reasonable diligence, and that in due course of time they would have water for the irrigation of their land. They made their settlement—and the Senator will bear in mind that this thing was opened in 1910, five years ago—and many of these settlers have lived upon their land for the entire period of five years and have proved up, so far as they can prove up, they have acquired the title to this land, and they have been crying for water every year since, and have not yet got it.

Mr. President, among these meager appropriations—I speak relatively, of course, for absolutely they are large; but speaking with reference to the extent of the project, a project that contemplates the expenditure of $5,000,000, this meager appropriation could not have completed the project in less than about 15 years—the Reclamation Service set aside this amount of $186,000 for the purpose of paying for contracts which they expect to complete within the current fiscal year.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will permit me, I wish to say I am not opposing an appropriation of $186,000 here; indeed, I wish that it should be available for these irrigation projects. I think it is to be regretted that the Comptroller of the Currency held that, the end of the fiscal year having come, it could not be used, and, if used at all, that it must be through a reappropriation.

But the point with me is this: I believe in appropriating money for the reasonable needs of the service, but if $186,000 was left over from a previous appropriation on the 1st day of July, 1914, I hardly think that $500,000 additional will be required to meet the reasonable needs of the project between this time and the time when we can make another appropriation.

I am not at all unfriendly to irrigation projects; I am in entire sympathy with them, and I would rather err on the side of liberality for them than to stint them or to stint the Reclamation Service in promoting and developing these projects; but it seems to me that, in view of what we did last year, less than $687,000 all told should be appropriated at the present time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not pretend to base a judgment upon such meager facts as these. The Reclamation Service has come forward and has informed the Senate that it could make use very conveniently of an appropriation of $1,081,000 for next year, as my understanding about the matter is. The Indian Bureau felt, however, that, in view of all the conditions to which reference has repeatedly here been made, the conditions in which the country finds itself situated to-day, they would not ask for an appropriation of more than $500,000 for the work next year. That estimate was made; it was conveyed to the Senate upon the assumption that the $186,000 would be available between now and the 1st day of July, but it has been discovered that it is not available.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me just one observation there? From my understanding of the contents of the letter read by the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] $187,000 would more than pay for all the work done under contracts which have been let and for all materials contracted for. It seems inconceivable to me that now, in addition to the appropriation of $187,000 to pay for the work contracted for or for the materials contracted for, there can be used $500,000 between now and the 1st day of July, 1916.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the Senator from Montana speaks about the claim of the Reclamation Service, that more than a million dollars—a million and a half dollars, as I remember—could be expended within the next year. There are many other reclamation projects calling for expenditures, and I do not see how it is possible that more than a million dollars can be expended on that one reclamation project, in view of the other demands upon the Reclamation Service for the extension and development of various reclamation projects.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am trying to answer the argument of the Senator from South Dakota, who advances the idea that because $186,000 had been left over from the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, it is improbable that the Reclamation Service will be able to expend profitably as much as $500,000 during the ensuing year. I say to the Senator that the Reclamation Service has reported that it can expend very profitably and economically upon the project during the next year something over a million dollars—$1,081,000, as my recollection is—so that we have here the statement of the reclamation officers that they can utilize it to good advantage, not that they ought to get it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if the Reclamation Service has furnished any detailed plans of improvement for the development of this irrigation project which would call for that expenditure? Is it not just a rough general statement that that much can be used?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from South Dakota that I insisted a year ago that the Reclamation Service should provide the Indian Bureau with a detailed statement of just exactly what they were going to do with the appropriation of $250,000 that was asked for at that time. That was furnished, and I am very sure the same thing was done in this connection. I myself insisted upon just exactly what the Senator wants, and I am very sure that the information is available.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I want to finish my argument in a few words. I hope I have made it plain to the Senator from South Dakota that the sum of $500,000 which the committee first ordered appropriated for this project is intended for use in the year beginning July 1, 1915, and ending July 1, 1916. Is that amount necessary? Yes. Why? Because it is estimated for, and the Indian Bureau asks for it and says it is necessary, and that it ought to be appropriated.

Now, we base our contention for the appropriation of $500,000 for the next fiscal year upon the urging of the Indian Bureau and upon the estimates of the Treasury Department that it is necessary now to appropriate that amount, and we think that is good authority.

As to the $187,000 that was previously appropriated and has now become unavailable through a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, I hope I have made it plain that it is to be used to complete the work between now and the 1st of next July, which has already been planned and mapped out and contracted for and obligations in regard to which have been incurred.

As to where that $187,000 is to go, in the letters which I have read the reclamation officials cite one piece of work they want to complete this spring which will take $67,000; they cite another piece of work they want to complete this spring which will require $42,000; and they cite another piece of work they want to complete this spring which they say will take $25,000. Those sums amount to $134,000. In addition, they referred to many expenditures that have already been authorized and to property and material bought and obligations incurred and as to which all that is lacking is to issue checks in payment therefor, but the Comptroller of the Treasury will not let them do so. The difference between $186,000 and $134,000 is $52,000, and certainly I apprehend, under the statements of the reclamation officials here produced, that the said sum of $52,000 must be required to provide for past obligations which they have incurred. So that the Senate Indian Committee raised this appropriation from $500,000 to $687,000 in order to reappropriate what legitimately and properly belonged to the project, but which had been lost to it through a surprising misunderstanding of officials.

At the time the Indian Bureau recommended $500,000, and at the time the Senate committee authorized it it was done under the impression of the bureau and the committee that all of the money previously appropriated was available and that none of it had been drawn back with a string beyond their reach and lost to the project. I will quote Mr. Meritt on that point, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who was before the committee when this sum was raised to $687,000. He told the committee that the Indian Bureau recommended $500,000, with the belief and under the impression that all of the money theretofore appropriated was available and could be used and that the $500,000 was intended to be in addition to all prior appropriations. I will read his testimony on that point:

Senator WHITE. In making the estimate for this year of $500,000 that is carried in this bill did the department consider that the other fund that you are asking was not so available?

Senator MYERS. That is for Mr. Meritt to say.

Senator WHITE. In other words, did you figure that you could not use this $187,000, I will say, in round numbers, in addition to the $500,000 which you are claiming in this bill?

Mr. MERITT. Yes; we were figuring on using all the money heretofore appropriated.

Senator WHITE. As well as what is in this?

Mr. MERITT. Yes; but the comptroller has held that those funds were not available because of a provision in one of the general appropriation bills.

Senator WHITE. I did not know but what the estimate had been made excluding that, but I understand now that under the estimate of $500,000 for the present year you anticipated using this $187,000 that Senator MYERS is speaking of?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.

Senator PAGE. I may be confused about it. I had supposed that this was not to help out on our last year's appropriation bill. I thought they had gone back to the year before last and that the money must have been already turned back into the Treasury. Am I right about that?

Mr. MERITT. Heretofore the money appropriated for the irrigation projects has been available until expended, but there was a provision incorporated in one of the general appropriation acts that made it necessary to expend the money within the year for which it was appropriated, and this money not being expended within that year reverted to the Treasury contrary to the practice that had theretofore prevailed in the financing of these projects.

In other words, since they submitted their estimate of $500,000 the loss of the $187,000 was discovered.

Senator LANE. When did you make the estimate?

Mr. MERITT. We made this estimate in December.

In other words, Mr. Meritt says that they recommended $500,000 on the theory that all of the money appropriated theretofore was available and could be used and would be used. Now, the $187,000 is to complete certain necessary work this spring, and the entire sum is made immediately available so that they can begin work at once this spring, and it is to remain available until expended, so that this setback will not occur again. The Reclamation Service and the Indian Bureau unite in saying that this $687,000 can be profitably used to good advantage, and is necessary for the coming year and for the completion of certain very necessary unfinished work this spring. We simply stand on their estimates; we stand on their testimony; and we ask you if you will stand by it likewise.

God knows the poor settlers on the ground need the money badly enough. Their plight is pitiful. They are desperate. They are starving for lack of water to put on their land, which ought to have been put on by the Government years ago, and would have been put on but for the meager appropriations that have been doled out for this project year by year; and it is to the benefit of the Indians, too, because the white people can not pay for their lands until they get water on them. The land is worthless without water. The settlers can not raise any crops and make any money until they get water on their land, and the sooner they get water on their land the sooner they will be able to pay for the land and the sooner the Indian fund will get the money that the land brings. It is to the interest of all alike, the white and the Indians both.

I appeal to the Senators to stand by the estimates and the recommendations of the Interior Department, the Reclamation Service, and the Indian Bureau, and allow us this entire sum of $687,000, which they say they can use profitably, and which is needed in order to prosecute this work in a businesslike manner.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. FALL. The Senator, of course, has confined his remarks very largely to the appropriation, and the necessity for the particular amount of the appropriation. I am not prepared to disagree with him upon the necessity for the appropriation, nor qualified to speak as to the necessity for the amount. However, this amendment is being treated as a whole.

On page 50, lines 14 to 16, inclusive, there is a proviso as follows:

Provided further, That the rights of the United States to water for Indian lands shall be continued in full force and effect until the Indian title to such lands is extinguished.

Mr. President, I can see very grave objections to that proviso injected into the middle of this amendment, which relates solely to the Flathead and Fort Peck and other Indian lands which are treated of in the amendment. This is a general amendment. It would be applicable to every Indian reserve in the United States. It would repeal the act of Congress of 1866, under which we acquired water rights, and have since that time been acquiring water rights, for irrigation purposes. It would repeal the desert-land act of the United States. It would undoubtedly repeal many provisions of the reclamation act, or at least render them nugatory; and it would prevent the settling of public lands around the Indian reserves, on which the citizens are not now precluded from settling. It certainly can not be the purpose of the Senators from Montana to work any such hardship or any such change in the law. I do not understand it to be their purpose.

The Senator has frankly stated that this entire amendment has been promulgated by the Indian Bureau, the Department of the Interior, and not by himself. Now, I will say frankly that so long as that proviso remains in this amendment the amendment will never be adopted with my vote, and I shall protest against it for the time that I think is necessary. I will say further that with this amendment in this bill I should never find it possible to vote for the bill at all.

I will ask the Senator from Montana if he will not agree to this proviso being stricken from the bill?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, this entire amendment was gotten up by the Indian Bureau as its plan for the reform method of procedure for prosecuting this work, and I have no authority to agree that that be stricken out. The committee reported it. It is in the hands of the Senate now. I have no individual authority in the matter.

Mr. FALL. Then, Mr. President, I shall make a point of order as to this proviso in the amendment, that it is general legislation of the most obnoxious character conceivable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is unable to rule upon that point of order for the reason that the Chair understands that the entire body of the amendment, as it has been read, was prepared as one amendment to the bill; and if the Senator makes the point of order that the amendment is general legislation——

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have no desire to do that. I do not want to make the point of order against the whole amendment, and for that reason I asked the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], who is so much interested in this amendment, if he would not agree that this proviso might be stricken out.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I have no authority to agree to that. I can not agree to that.

Mr. FALL. I think the committee would agree to it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, as one of the members of the committee I shall not agree to that. I am opposed to eliminating that provision.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. At the time the Senator from Montana was insisting that this was all one amendment, a vigorous protest was made to that statement; and while it was read without objection, as the Senator from Vermont said he wished to have the whole matter read so that he could discuss it, I think the Senate is entitled to have this matter printed in italics, separated into its distinctive parts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rules of the Senate, the Senator from Wyoming has a clear right, where there are several propositions embodied in an amendment, to have the question divided.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask that that may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt about that. Now, this amendment is as full of general legislation as it possibly can be, if it is taken as a whole; and if there is a point of order raised as to the entire amendment the Chair will sustain it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask that it may be divided, Mr. President.

Mr. FALL. I had felt that, and I had no desire to interfere with this general scheme. I had made a protest myself against considering this amendment all together, and had suggested to the Senator before he began his argument that as a matter of fact the amendment from line 22, of page 42, down to line 5, on page 44, for instance, treated of one subject matter and could be separated; and that if it were ruled out, the balance of this appropriation and all that he wanted would remain in the bill; but that it had nothing to do with and was not germane to the balance of the amendment. He insisted, however, upon treating it all as a whole. Now, I do not want to put the Senator in the position of having me make a point of order against the entire amendment, and yet I will state to the Senate now that so long as this proviso remains in this bill the bill will not pass if I can prevent it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment being divided, with the permission of the Senate, into as many sections as may be compatible with the sense of the legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us take it up, then, section by section, and see whether it will be agreed to.

Mr. FALL. I shall want to know what is going to be done with this proviso, in order to see how I shall want to vote on the other sections.

Mr. ASHURST. Why does not the Senator move to strike it out.

Mr. FALL. Very well; I will adopt the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, and move——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to make a suggestion, suppose we dispose of these matters as they arise, and then the Senator can move to reconsider.

Mr. FALL. I will vote against every line of this amendment unless this proviso goes out of it. Therefore, I do not know how to vote. The Senator can easily see the position I am in. I will vote against the entire bill if this proviso stays in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is clearly a divisible proposition.

Mr. FALL. Very well, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proviso is clearly divisible. The Senator from New Mexico raises the point of order that it is general legislation. May the Chair inquire whether this changes present statutory law on the subject?

Mr. FALL. It does.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the point of order is sustained, and the proviso is out of the bill.

Mr. FALL. Very well.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, line 14, after the word "owed," the following words are stricken out:

Provided further, That the rights of the United States to water for Indian lands shall be continued in full force and effect until the Indian title to such land is extinguished.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I should like to suggest that lines 14 and 15, on page 51, ought to go out of the bill.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out lines 14 and 15, on page 51, which read as follows:

All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me, I rise to secure some information from the desk. Will the Senator pardon me until I get it?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire of the Chair what action has thus far been taken with reference to this amendment, commencing on page 42?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). The Chair is informed that the proposition was divided, but no Senator has suggested how it shall be divided.

Mr. WALSH. And no proceedings have thus far been taken?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussions which we have been having here for the last hour or two in regard to the increase of this appropriation, on page 46, line 16, from $500,000 to $686,996.81, as it now stands in the bill. As recommended by the department it was $500,000. I want to read from the hearings what was said about this matter while it was under consideration in the committee, because I think it will throw a good deal of light on this question.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. PAGE. Page 130 of the hearings of the Senate committee on this bill, Volume I.

Senator MYERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offered certain proposed amendments to this bill, which I offered too late to get printed in the bill, and they are printed here as separate amendments and have been laid before the committee.

I will take up first your calendar No. 226. I wish to be heard upon that.

It is for this committee to decide the fate of the Flathead reclamation irrigation project for the benefit of the Indians and whites on the Flathead Reservation. There has been about a million and a half dollars expended on that. As I understand the expenditures heretofore have been largely made in such manner as to cover the lands of the Indians, and the future expenditures to be made in the immediate future, I understand will necessarily be required to be made largely on the lands of the white settlers who went on there, etc.

I read this because I want the Senate to understand that we have been considering, in all the previous years, a project based upon reimbursement for these moneys devoted to irrigation projects out of the Indian land.

I omit some of the unimportant matter and read on the same page:

Now, I will state my understanding of the attitude of the Indian Bureau; and, of course, if I am incorrect in any way, I would like Mr. Meritt to correct me, because he knows about it better than I. I will just state this as a connected part of my brief statement.

My understanding is that at the beginning of this session the Indian Bureau wanted certain changes made in the method of using this appropriation and the method of procedure, and that the plan of the Indian Bureau was to introduce that as a separate bill, making the change and coupling with it the amount to be appropriated for this coming year. I think the inclination of the bureau was, as evinced in talks between bureau officials and myself, to recommend $500,000, but their plan, as I understand it, was to put it in a separate bill covering this appropriation of, say, perhaps, $500,000.

Now, I want to have the Senate understand that this took place about the middle of January. I might give the exact date in a moment, but it is not necessary. The correspondence with the Reclamation Service, to which the Senator has referred and which he has read, was in the hands of the department last August.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to correct that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to correct that statement. One letter is dated January 28, 1915; another letter is dated January 15, 1915; another letter is dated January 26, 1915; all mailed in Montana.

Mr. PAGE. As I understood the Senator, and I made a note of it at the time, the date was August 1, 1914. If I misunderstood the Senator, I withdraw the statement with pleasure. I understood that this correspondence was in part in the hands of the department last August.

Mr. MYERS. I never made any such statement, and I am willing to comply with the rule of a legal trial and submit the letters themselves, to show what dates they bear.

Mr. PAGE. I withdraw it, because I have no doubt the Senator states the fact exactly.

Mr. WALSH. As I am sure the Senator desires to be correct, I wish to correct him in another statement. The Senator stated for the information of the Senate that the appropriations have heretofore been made upon the theory that the project was to be paid for out of the tribal funds.

Mr. PAGE. Yes; reimbursable out of the tribal funds, as I understand it.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator omitted to state that only that portion of the charge assignable against the Indian lands was to be paid out of the tribal funds. The settlers upon the lands were required to pay their proportion. I read from the act of 1908:

Provided, however, That the entryman or owner of any land irrigable by any system hereunder constructed under the provisions of section 14 of this act shall in addition to the payment required by section 9 of said act be required to pay for a water right the proportionate cost of the construction of said system in not more than 15 annual installments, as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, the same to be paid at the local land office, and the register and receiver shall be allowed the usual commissions on all moneys paid.

I should like to have the Senator from Vermont get the idea out of his head that it ever was proposed that the white settlers should avail themselves of the tribal funds of the Indians for the purpose of paying their proportion.

Mr. PAGE. I perhaps have been in error, although I do not now see that I am. I have been laboring under the impression, because I have heard the statement made many times for years. I remember distinctly when the senior Senator from Montana had been before us in years past, and has asked for large appropriations, he has said, "Now, remember, members of the committee, that this appropriation is reimbursable." The understanding I had was that it was first chargeable to the Indian fund. Of course if any money was paid in later by white settlers it went to the credit of the Indians. I do not think we materially disagree. The point I first want to get at, although I may come later to what the Senator referred to, is the discussion in regard to this matter had before the committee at the time $500,000 was agreed to. I will read a little further:

Senator MYERS continued:
I do not know that that was ever definitely settled—

That is, $500,000—

but it was my understanding and was agreeable to them, and also coupling with it a change in the law as to the methods of procedure.

Mr. PAGE. That refers to the change which was made in the original plan, where the money was reimbursable out of the Indian fund; but the plan which has been adopted in this bill makes the irrigation project not a charge upon the Indian lands as heretofore but rather on the Federal Treasury as a gratuity appropriation, and provides the funds for carrying out this project, with the expectation that the irrigable or irrigated land will eventually make good the expenditure by the Government.

It is a fact well known to gentlemen who have been upon the Indian Committee for many years that there are projects that pay out and projects that prove almost worthless. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] on Saturday, in speaking of an irrigation project in his State—and, by the way, you remember he spoke parenthetically—said, "I want to say now that this project proved to be an absolute failure."

I think we shall be very fortunate if we do not find that in this measure we are undertaking a great and important project which perhaps ought to have been provided for in a separate bill. But I am making no point of order, although I think a point of order would lie. I want to say to the Senator from Montana that if I could see an appropriation for this measure of only $500,000 I should cheerfully agree to it, provided the proviso just stricken out on the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] was left in. I shall later address myself to that particular feature. With that proviso out I am opposed to the entire appropriation, because I believe that the Indian has not been properly protected.

I now again take up the hearing before our Committee on Indian Affairs:

Mr. MYERS. Now, the Indian Bureau, having had in contemplation the plan of a separate bill, made no recommendation last fall or early in the winter for any estimate or item for the Flathead project to go into this bill, not that they intended to leave it out or kill it, but, as I say, in pursuance of the idea that it would be done by a separate bill.

So there was no estimate or recommendation for any appropriation in the Indian appropriation bill, nor for any in the sundry civil bill, nor any in the reclamation bill, the idea being all the time an independent bill. Therefore there was no item that went into the Indian appropriation bill on the part of the House committee, and it passed the House without anything for the Flathead reclamation project. The sundry civil bill contains none for it and the reclamation bill contains none for it.

Senator PAGE. May I interrupt you? You say the Flathead. The same is true as to all of these projects, is it not? They have made no recommendation as to any of them?

Senator MYERS. As to the Flathead, Fort Peck—I am coming to them. I am taking them up in order. Yes; all of them. Our delegation consulted together a short time ago and felt it was very dangerous to undertake to do this in an independent bill; it was liable to get lost in the shuffle, and that really the proper place for this change in the law was in the Indian bill. So our entire delegation, the four of us—Senator WALSH, Representative EVANS, Representative STOUT, and myself—after talking over the matter amongst ourselves, made an engagement with Secretary Lane, at which Mr. Sells and Mr. Meritt were to be present. About a week or 10 days ago our entire delegation, pursuant to that end, called at the office of Secretary Lane. Mr. Sells was there and Mr. Meritt was there.

I only pause to say in this connection that the Department of the Interior is a great department. The Indian Commissioner, Mr. Sells, is a very excellent gentleman. I raise no question as to his integrity, but, like other good men, he is susceptible to influences—proper influences, of course—and when a body of men as strong as the whole delegation from Montana appear before him and they hold a conference and agree upon the sum of $500,000, I can not believe that $500,000 did not fairly cover the necessities of this case.

Mr. MYERS. May I interrupt the Senator just there?

Mr. PAGE. In just a moment. The $500,000 estimate was two or three hundred thousand dollars—I have not the exact figures—more than it was two years ago. It is $175,000 or $200,000 more than it was last year. I think Congress appropriated for 1914 and for 1915 the sums of $200,000 and $325,000, respectively; and I say it is fair to assume that when we give that project $500,000 for 1916 we are treating Montana liberally.

Now, lest I be mistaken about my understanding of this matter, I want to read what was said before the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator give me a moment to reply?

Mr. PAGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Meritt said before the Indian Affairs Committee that $500,000 was recommended. When that recommendation was made the Indian Bureau had no knowledge of the $187,000 being beyond their reach, but supposed it was available.

Mr. PAGE. Far be it from me to stand here and question the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I simply say that the language was put into his mouth, as it seemed to me, by those pressing for this larger appropriation. I will take up this matter later, and before I get through I think I will show the Senator that there was a fair understanding that $500,000 would be accepted by Montana as a liberal appropriation for this project.

I continue my reading from the report:

Mr. MERITT. We are proposing to appropriate $500,000 for the Flathead project, $50,000 for the Blackfeet, and $100,000 for the Fort Peck project. That is all reimbursable and is made a lien on the land irrigated.

Senator PAGE. Yes; I understand that. Now, here are $440,000, $80,000, and $4,000 appropriated—$524,000 in all. Is that reimbursable, and if not reimbursable, can we state unqualifiedly that it is provided for so that eventually it is repaid to the Federal Government?

Mr. MYERS. What page is the Senator reading from?

Mr. PAGE. Page 150.

Mr. MERITT. No, sir; that is not reimbursable in the regular reimbursable sense, because it is returning to the Indians money that has been paid out of their tribal funds to reimburse the Government for moneys advanced for the construction of this project.

I now wish to call attention to the proviso which has been stricken out on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico

[Mr. FALL], the clause which protects the Indian's rights in case he does not make immediate use of the water supplied by this irrigation project.

I will state my understanding here; and the Senators from Montana will correct me if I am wrong.

I said to the Senators at the meeting of the committee at which this matter was considered: "Gentlemen, you remember that last year the department, through its assistant commissioner, put in the proviso that the failure of the Indian to make beneficial appropriation of water within a given time should not divest him of any of his water rights." The contest here in the Senate last year, which lasted, I think, for two or three days, was upon the question, Could the Indians' money be properly taken to put into a project where the State claimed that, despite the decision in the Winters case, the first party to make beneficial use of the water was entitled to it?

It is conceded that on the north of this reservation there is a lake the waters of which run down into the reservation and are then used for irrigation purposes. Near the outlet of the lake there is an opportunity to tap the outlet and take the water away from the reservation. It is a matter of pretty general knowledge here that while the decision in the Winters case was read and carefully considered in the Senate, the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], all took the position that the decision in that case must be taken in connection with other and later decisions, and that despite that decision, which seemed to be very clear, the Indians' right was not protected; that if the white man should make beneficial use of this water before the Indian did, that under the laws, and I think they said under the State constitution of Montana, the white man was entitled to that water.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. FALL. As a matter of fact, the Winters case was only applicable, under the state of facts, to a treaty Indian reserve—that was the theory upon which the Supreme Court decided that case—that there was a treaty or an agreement with the Indians by which the Indians, at least by implication, reserved to themselves the water. Therefore the Winters case would not in any event be applicable as to a water dispute upon a nontreaty reserve—that is, an Executive reserve—for instance, created simply by order of the President.

Mr. PAGE. I am under the impression that the Blackfeet Reservation came within the provisions of the treaty. I understand that the treaty with the Blackfeet Indians was made before the admission of Montana to the Union and that, at the time the treaty was made, there was an implied reservation, at least, of enough water to supply their reservation, and to that extent could not be taken away from them. I will read what the court said about the matter. This is in Winters v. The United States, United States Reports No. 207:

> In view of all the circumstances of the transaction this court holds that there was an implied reservation in the agreement of May 1, 1885 (25 Stats., 124), with the Gros Ventre and other Indians establishing the Fort Belknap Reservation, of a sufficient amount of water from the Milk River for irrigation purposes, which was not affected by the subsequent act of February 22, 1889 (25 Stats., 676), admitting Montana into the Union.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. PAGE. I do.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, that was the point that I was calling to the Senator's attention, that the Supreme Court in deciding upon this proposition rest their decision upon at least an implied agreement; in other words, that there was a treaty here by the terms of which, if not directly, yet at least by implication, the Indians had reserved to themselves the title to that water, and it never became a subject of appropriation by other parties. I was simply calling the attention of the Senator to the fact that that decision would not, in any event, whether it is good law or not, apply to a nontreaty reservation or an Executive order reservation.

Mr. PAGE. If I may be allowed, I should like to have the Senator tell us if the Blackfeet Indian Reservation is not a treaty reservation?

Mr. FALL. I think it is; so I was not making that point against this particular reservation.

Mr. PAGE. Then that is not material as to this particular case, because it is covered by the Winters case, as it seems to me. The court continues:

> And that the water of that river—
>
> Speaking of the river which supplies this reservation—
> can not be diverted, so as to prejudice this right of the Indians, by settlers on the public lands or those claiming riparian rights on that river.

There, Mr. President, was the whole bone of contention last year. If the Indians were to be subject to the constitution of Montana, which provides that the first man to make beneficial use of the water—I may not quote it exactly—has the right to the water, then we do not want to put four or five million dollars of the Indians' money into this project. It would be wrong to do so; the Indian should be protected. We were agreed that perhaps it might be best that the appropriation should be made to continue that work, but we reached that conclusion because of the safeguarding proviso which has now been stricken out on motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

I have great respect for the legal ability of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and when he tells me that this decision in the Winters case, plain as it seems to be to a layman like me, does not protect the Indians' water rights on this reservation because of the constitution of Montana or some law of that State, I am thrown into great doubt as to the wisdom of this appropriation.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. PAGE. With great pleasure.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I think that, as I have once or twice said, the Supreme Court—while I am frank to say that I do not think they have agreed with themselves in other cases in their expression of the Winters case—the Supreme Court in the Winters case was dealing with a state of facts, as they say, and that state of facts was this: The Indians had formerly held a much larger reserve than they held at the time this case was presented to the court; that a portion of that reserve or of the Indian lands had been thrown open, and that it could not be said that because the Indians agreed with the Government in 1888 that they should occupy a more restricted area—it could not be said that as to that portion of the lands which they had formerly held they had yielded their water rights in proportion; in other words, that they had really retained enough water, whatever it was, a sufficient amount of water, to irrigate the lands remaining within their restricted area, and that they had a prior right. The Supreme Court recognized the right of prior appropriation; but they claimed that the right to appropriate the water, so far as it might interfere with the necessities of the Indians remaining within the restricted area, was reserved between the Indians and the United States Government.

The Senator from Vermont will understand that we claim the right to appropriate water and obtain title to it by the act of Congress of 1866 and the subsequent acts granting permission to construct irrigating ditches upon public waters running upon the public domain. Of course in disposing of the public domain the Congress of the United States can provide such rules and regulations as it sees fit. It has provided rules and regulations generally by which I may acquire, for instance, under the local laws and customs of the State, an appropriation of sufficient water from whatever source I can obtain it, from the public domain, to irrigate my piece of land.

They were simply holding in this case that here was a large area of Indian land; that a portion of it had been by agreement thrown open to public entry; that as the Indians owned this water and the land originally, they could not be considered to have yielded the water necessary to irrigate the remaining lands.

Mr. PAGE. I thank the Senator for his elucidation. I should be glad now to have him point out to me that section which has been thrown out. I refer to the proviso.

Mr. FALL. The proviso is on page 50.

Mr. PAGE. I will read it, as follows:

> Provided further, That the rights of the United States to water for Indian lands shall be continued in full force and effect until the Indian title to such land is extinguished.

Mr. FALL. Now, Mr. President, the Senator has called attention to this proviso. I have explained my objection to the proviso; but I want to say, in addition to what I have said in reference to the manner of acquiring water rights upon the public lands, that on a nontreaty reservation or an Executive-order reservation upon which waters rise and flow off on the public domain, under this proviso, if it had remained in this bill, never could a settler upon the public domain have acquired under the act of 1866, or under any other act, the right to the use of water. For instance, suppose that within half a mile of the edge of the boundaries of an Indian reservation a large spring rises and flows down through a canyon where it is not possible to irrigate a foot of land upon an Indian reservation, and flows off onto the public domain. Under the law as it stands, under the different acts of Congress, under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, under the local rules and customs of the State in which that reserve happens to be situated, I can make an appropriation for beneficial purposes and acquire title to that water. Under this provision never could I have done so, and there would remain the question of the Government's power to sell that water to some municipality, to sell it to some railroad, or to sell it to somebody else and deprive the actual homesteader, the citizen hunting a home upon the public domain, of the right ever to acquire a drop of that water.

As I said in making the point of order, it would have been a repeal, in so far as that particular case was concerned, of the act of Congress of 1866 and the subsequent acts of Congress under which the great domain in the West has been settled and under which millions of acres have been put in cultivation and constitute now the richest soil in the world, by the efforts of citizens of the United States, who have gone out there and dug homes out of the desert with the aid of this water.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator will remember that last year for nearly two days we discussed this proposition, and a safeguarding provision suggested by the Department of the Interior was thrown out on a point of order, as it was suggested perhaps this proviso might be. Last year we managed to defeat this measure, I think, because the rights of the Indians were not safeguarded. This year when this matter came up, when the Senator from Montana asked for this appropriation, I asked, "How will it be safeguarded? Do you remember that we had trouble last year?" He said, "I certainly do"—I do not know the exact language he used, but I referred to the fact that some proviso was needed to justify me in voting for the appropriation, and to satisfy the Senator from North Dakota and some other Senators on our Indian committee who did not want to vote to appropriate large sums of money unless there was some safeguard of the Indian's rights—I think I will read what was said before our Committee on Indians Affairs about this matter:

Senator MYERS. Mr. Chairman and Senators, I should like very much to have action now, if it meets your approval, on the Meritt amendment that was pending last evening, for the reason that it was discussed thoroughly yesterday and we have had overnight to look into it, and I have to appear this morning at 10.30 before the Committee on Claims on two bills that I have there. They will only be sitting for a few minutes, and if I do not get there right away I am afraid I will not have any opportunity to appear before the committee. These bills have been pending a long time. I feel that I have neglected them; and can we not act on this amendment without further delay? What do you think about it, Senator PAGE? Have you looked it over?

Senator PAGE. I have, just enough to see that I want to look it over more. You remember that last year we went through and passed on all these bills. They went through easily because there was a clause attached that protected the Indian against the lapse of his water rights—

And I think I referred there to a point of order, but that does not appear here—

Senator MYERS. Yes; that is true.

Senator PAGE. Now, the very thing that prompted me to vote you a good, liberal sum last year was the fact that there was a protection to the Indians. Now, this year I see we have aimed to protect the Indian in this sentence:

"Provided further, That the rights of the United States to water for Indian lands shall be continued in full force and effect until the Indian title to such land is extinguished."

That is the very provision that has been stricken out this afternoon, with the consent of the chairman of the committee and with the consent of the two Senators from Montana, as I understand.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I want to correct that statement. I absolutely refused to give my consent. I said I had no consent to give. The proviso went out on a point of order, which the Vice President of the United States sustained, but I did not consent to it and had nothing to do with it.

Mr. PAGE. I think that is correct. I will take back the statement I made on that point. I thought the Senator assented to it.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator for acknowledging that I am right once.

Mr. PAGE. To continue the reading:

What assurance can I have from you and Brother WALSH—

It appears that the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] was also there—

What assurance can I have from you and Brother WALSH that you—or not you, but some of your friends there who are so tenacious in regard to the rights of the State—will not insist that that go out on a point of order?

Bear in mind, Mr. President, that that suggestion seems to have been almost prophetic at that time. Just exactly what I thought would occur has occurred here within the last hour. Let me continue to read from the record:

Senator MYERS. Senator WALSH and I have both stated here in the most solemn manner that we agreed to this amendment and have no objection to it.

Senator PAGE. If they should throw that out on the floor of the Senate, do you know it would change my whole attitude toward this bill?

Senator LANE. Is it subject to a point of order?

Senator MYERS. I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

Senator PAGE. What do you say, Mr. Meritt?

Mr. MERITT. I think it is very important that we get all of this legislation contained in our amendment.

Bear in mind that Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, was insistent, as he was last year, that there should be some proviso in this appropriation bill to take care of the Indian's rights; and so this proviso, which has been stricken out in the last hour, was put in there. Let me read further:

Senator MYERS. Senator PAGE, if Senator WALSH and I get up on the floor of the Senate and assert in the most solemn manner that we are for this amendment just as it is, I do not see how you could anticipate that anybody else would get up and fight it.

You see my Yankee caution came in there and told me what would occur here. I can see my good friend the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] looking at me and smiling. I knew what he would say about this matter.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PAGE. With great pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course the Yankee caution of the Senator from Vermont would preclude his sitting silent while a general provision of law was inserted as an amendment applying specifically only to Montana, but which would apply to and undermine the rights of the citizens of his own State in regard to the use of waters in that State.

I regret very greatly that I can not coincide with the Senator from Vermont; but the Senator from Vermont will understand that, aside from Indian reservations, the waters in the States are appropriated to beneficial use under the laws of the respective States, which provide certain acts to be done by the man who wants to use the water or to put it upon his land. They provide that he shall commence work at a certain time; that he shall prosecute his work diligently; that he shall prosecute his work under the course laid down by the State engineer and the land board.

There are in the State of Wyoming Indian reservations upon which there is found water which does not rise upon the Indian reservations. The Government of the United States, under the State laws, has made appropriations of water for use upon Indian lands under the laws of that State. Now, under this provision the Government of the United States would not have to comply with the laws of the State after making beneficial use of that water, but they could hold up until the crack of doom any other person who wanted to make beneficial use of that water until the Indian rights in the reservation were all extinguished.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Senator say to me that, in his judgment as a lawyer, the provisions of the Winters decision do not apply in this case?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am not speaking of this case; I am speaking of this broad general amendment, which applies not only to this case but to all cases of water upon all Indian lands, whether or not the water rises upon the land and whether they are treaty reservations or whether they are reservations by Executive proclamation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to make a suggestion for the benefit of the Senator from Vermont, which, I trust, may possibly compose this matter. The Senator from Vermont is simply desirous of doing what he can to protect the rights of the Indians on these reservations?

Mr. PAGE. That is all I want, Mr. President. If the Senator from Montana will show me how that can be done, he will find me a warm supporter of this measure up to $500,000.

Mr. WALSH. That was what I desired to do. The Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from New Mexico are fearful that this legislation, general in its character, will extend over and affect lands within their States. I am not at all concerned about it so far as Montana is concerned. I stated to the Senator before the committee that I do not think the amendment signifies anything. It does not mean anything, in my judgment; and so, if I were representing another State, I would not be objecting to it. I said to the Senator that I did not believe anybody would object to it, but seeing that objection is made, I suggest, to compose the whole matter, that, after the word "lands," on line 16, page 50, we insert "within said reservation," so that it will read:

That the rights of the United States to water for Indian lands within said reservations shall be continued in full force—

And so forth.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think that would have to go in in a different way, because this matter has already gone out on a ruling on a point of order.

Mr. PAGE. We all agree to that.

Mr. WALSH. If we could only quit the discussion of this matter, I should like to ask the Senator to withdraw his point of order, and we will consent to this amendment.

Mr. PAGE. I have made no point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH. I understand.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The point of order can not very well be withdrawn after it has been ruled upon by the Chair and sustained.

Mr. WALSH. If that is the case, then——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I presume an amendment might be offered.

Mr. WALSH. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that he move an amendment of this character, and I shall be glad to support him in the amendment.

Mr. PAGE. I would prefer to have the Senator from Montana or the chairman of the committee move the amendment, and if it covers the matter, as the Senator says, while I should want to think of it a little while, I do not see why I would not assent to it; but I assent to it with the understanding that the appropriation shall be $500,000. Upon that point I must address myself to the Senate unless the Senator agrees to it, and I shall try to show that, in view of what was said before our committee, we ought not to increase that amount.

Mr. WALSH. I was endeavoring, Mr. President, to dispose of one thing at a time, if I could.

Mr. PAGE. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. If that matter is disposed of—and I trust that will be agreeable to the Senator—we can go on.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I hope I may be regarded as sincere in this matter. I do not want to oppose a reasonable appropriation here; and the general change that has been made, although it is a change in the law, is one that appeals to my heart and my conscience.

I do not want to go back to the old system which takes the Indian's money and appropriates it to a use where he may or he may not get it back. We are the guardians of the Indian. We have no right to take his money and misappropriate it. If we want to take the money from the United States Treasury, I have nothing special to say; I will join with the rest. I guess the project is a good one. Just say to me that we will not go beyond reason. We are doing so if after having appropriated $200,000 two years ago and $300,000 last year, and if after having made an agreement as fair and square as it could be that we would only appropriate $500,000 we then come forward with the suggestion that somebody had forgotten about an old law and therefore we must add another $186,000 to this project.

Mr. President, we are raising war taxes now by taking money out of our pockets, 1 cent at a time, to pay for stamps to put on our telegrams, and the idea of adding this $186,000 in times like these is wrong. The $500,000 is all Montana ought to ask on this project this year. I want to suggest in all kindness to the Senators from Montana that the appropriations for that State as they come to us from the House aggregate $199,500, while the appropriations for Montana in this bill aggregate $1,579,000. Why, there is nothing so monstrous as this anywhere in the whole bill, if we are going to figure monstrosity by size. It is awful.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to my friend?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. I hope the Senator and the Senate will bear in mind that there was nothing put in this bill in the House about the Flathead project or the Fort Peck project or the Blackfeet project, because the departmental estimate had not been gotten out at the time the House passed on the project.

Mr. PAGE. That is absolutely true.

Mr. MYERS. They made a supplemental estimate, and it had to come to the Senate originally, because it was too late to send it to the House then.

Mr. PAGE. Yes. I want to go further and say to the Senator that we have another appropriation here which is largely a matter of bookkeeping and which should be credited to Montana in considering this matter. I am simply taking the figures as they appear in the report. It is true that we have been paying out the money of the Indians for several years and have made his whole property, personal and real, responsible for it. I remember distinctly that in the committee the Senator from Alabama [Mr. WHITE] asked some one: "Does not this place a mortgage upon the Indian's property, personal and real?" I think it was the senior Senator from Montana who replied: "It does." This language may not be exact. I give it as I remember it, and if I am wrong I should be glad to be corrected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator state offhand the aggregate amount that has been added to this bill?

Mr. PAGE. I can. I have it right before me:

Total increase, Senate amendments, $3,558,211.40.

With a decrease of $52,500.

In other words, the increase over the House bill is almost 50 per cent. That is, half of $7,720,000 would be $3,860,000, and we have increased it $3,558,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Almost 50 per cent over the House bill?

Mr. PAGE. Almost 50 per cent over the House bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and we are constantly being appealed to by members of that committee representing the majority to save even dollars. They say that every dollar counts in the present condition of the Treasury, where we have a large deficit and a much larger deficit to follow. It seems to me that that is a most extraordinary increase in one bill.

Mr. PAGE. Why, Mr. President, we have within my little State Lake Champlain. There is a 12-foot canal running from Buffalo down to Albany, and from Albany up to Whitehall, the lower end of Lake Champlain. There is an outlet for a vessel drawing 11 feet of water from the lower end of Lake Champlain to New York and Buffalo and on to the west, and the very small sum we ask for, $300,000—it will take a little more than that, but not a large sum, to complete it—will open Lake Champlain down to the north end of the lake. The Canadians have said:

If you will open up this waterway down to the north end of Lake Champlain, the forty-fifth parallel, we will open up the Richelieu Canal down to the St. Lawrence River and give you a fine waterway from Montreal and from the Gulf of St. Lawrence down through Lake Champlain to New York.

Think what an important matter it is. It takes about $700,000, but all that we should ask this year would be $300,000; and here we are taking for the Flathead project alone not $500,000, the amount that we agreed upon, but $700,000, or, to be exact, $686,000.

I do not believe the Senate wants to do anything of that kind. The Senators from Montana want it. I suppose if we should take a million and three-quarters, as they ask for, and dump it into Montana, it would make business good there for the next year. They would be happy, and I do not blame them for wanting it; but when they come to us and say that we ought to do that and leave undeveloped large projects, such as the one I have spoken of, that are so important and yet require so little money, I say it is wrong.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator submitted his request to any committee of the Senate for the appropriation of money for that waterway?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have some knowledge of its importance. Has the Senator submitted a request, and has it been denied? Is that the situation?

Mr. PAGE. No, Mr. President; it has not been denied, but we submitted our request last summer, and it went down with the whole river and harbor bill, and I have taken it for granted that it would be a waste of breath to attempt to put it on the river and harbor bill now, because I suppose you will pass a general measure dealing with no new projects, and so will not include Lake Champlain. Bear in mind, too, that you may look through appropriation bill after appropriation bill and you will not find one cent for Vermont.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or New Hampshire, either.

Mr. PAGE. Or New Hampshire; but if you will look into this bill; and turn over to the third page of the report, you will find, under the head of "Montana," $1,579,683; and then I have got to go still further and say that in addition to the above amount appropriated there has been authorized $150,000 more for the Blackfeets. Why, gentlemen, we have in this Indian appropriation bill a proviso that we shall pay $200 apiece to the members of one tribe of Indians in Oklahoma and $100 apiece to the members of another, and that means that we will take from the Federal Treasury $5,000,000. Where are we going to land if we keep on in this way?

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator mean to say that there is $5,000,000 appropriated in this bill to the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. PAGE. I so understand; at least, we propose to take from the Treasury and pay to Oklahoma tribes, in round numbers, $5,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have heard it suggested that there is $2,000,000 in the bill for Montana.

Mr. PAGE. Well, that is not quite accurate. It is not quite $2,000,000, though it is very near that. It is $1,579,000, plus $150,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. And about $5,000,000 for Oklahoma?

Mr. PAGE. And about $5,000,000 is divided to the Choctaws and Chickasaws of Oklahoma. Now bear in mind that when we increase this appropriation bill from $5,000,000 to $11,000,000 we do not take into account the $5,000,000 of the Indian funds which we distribute to Oklahoma for those two tribes. That is not considered here at all, as the money so distributed is probably Indian money. Let me read what is said about that here. Here is what the report says, on page 6:

In addition thereto—

That is, in addition to these sums, the $11,000,000 appropriated—

In addition thereto is the per capita payment to the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

Let me say that I am not here condemning the appropriation for the Choctaws and the Chickasaws. I have not gotten to that yet, and I do not know whether I will condemn it or not. When the matter came before our committee I said that I was badly mixed on this Choctaw and Chickasaw provision, and if I voted for it it would be with a great, big piece of mental reservation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit another inquiry?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if that provision for the Choctaws and Chickasaws includes the Mississippi Choctaws?

Mr. PAGE. No, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not?

Mr. PAGE. No, sir. If it should include those, it would be——

Mr. WARREN. Is the item for the Mississippi Choctaws in the bill?

Mr. PAGE. No; that is excluded. I have somewhere the exact figures in regard to this matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator, if he is at liberty to state, whether the claim of the Mississippi Choctaws was considered by the committee?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I think it has been considered somewhat by the committee, but the committee did not give it very much attention. I think the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] gave that matter considerable thought, and made some motion before the committee, and I will yield to him to state about that.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate now to explain that matter fully, but I shall make some observations on it when we get to it. I only wish to say that there is no provision for the Mississippi Choctaws in the bill. In fact, they have no money. They are not on the rolls. They have no fund whatever. My idea is that they should be taken care of; but while I am on my feet I want to say to my friend from Vermont that the $5,000,000 which it is proposed in this bill to distribute to the Choctaws and the Chickasaws, $200 per capita to the Choctaw Indians and $100 per capita to the Chickasaw Indians, of course comes out of funds that belong to these nations. It is not taken out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PAGE. Will the Senator correct me if I am wrong about this? Is it not money that must be taken from the Federal Treasury, and will it not by that amount reduce the cash in the Treasury if it is paid over to them?

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand, they have that money to their credit.

Mr. PAGE. Oh, it is to their credit.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. PAGE. But after all, our Treasury is nearly empty. Now, if we take $5,000,000 to pay over to them, while it may be an absolutely just debt—I am not questioning that at all—is it not true that it makes us $5,000,000 below what we otherwise would be in our cash?

Mr. GRONNA. That is as I understand it.

Mr. PAGE. Now, I want to revert for a moment to the statement of the Senator from Montana, which is absolutely true, and I should like his attention for a moment. When he asked to have the committee vote this $500,000 it was with the express understanding that there were several members of the committee who would not vote for that appropriation unless we could be assured that the rights of the Indians, which were conserved by the very proviso which has been stricken out this afternoon, were protected.

I know that was my impression. I may be wrong about the matter, but my impression is that this $500,000 appropriation might not have been approved by the Indian Committee but for the fact that we had the assurance—and I acted upon it and I am sure the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] did—that there was a safeguarding provision here, and unless that safeguarding provision is restored I for one can not vote for this appropriation. I do not say that the Senator from New Mexico is right or wrong in striking it out. That is not the point I raise here. I say that when he strikes it out, the safeguarding provision is not there, and I can not indorse the appropriation unless something else takes its place.

The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] said that that could be arranged, and I hope it can be. I hope still further, in the interests of economy, in the interests of good faith, in the interest of the condition of the Treasury, the Senators from Montana will consent to have this bill left at $500,000 and let it go through and save any further discussion.

Mr. ASHURST. Question!

Mr. PAGE. I do not want to yield on the suggestion of a question, because I am not through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Senator's pardon. I really thought he had concluded. He has been discussing the item for 2 hours and 10 minutes, and I thought he had concluded.

Mr. PAGE. No; I have a good deal else to say on this bill unless I am to be assured that the Senators from Montana will yield to my views about the size of this appropriation.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the question which was brought up a year ago; that is, as to whether——

Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator proceeds will he yield to me?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. WALSH. I called the attention of the Senator a while ago to the condition of things. I called his attention to the fact that the board sent out by the Senate for the purpose of investigating this thing reported to the Senate that it would not be good faith for the people who had bought these lands. It would not be good faith and honest feeling to the Indians of the Flathead Reservation to ask this along with the appropriation, practically of $300,000, because at the very lowest estimate it would take 16 years for the completion of the project.

Mr. President, this matter was gone into when it was before the committee, and Mr. Meritt before the committee told us as follows:

Mr. MERITT. The engineers on this project claim that they could expend economically a much larger amount than is here requested. The engineers want a million dollars for the Flathead irrigation project.

Senator ROBINSON. Right away?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir; for the next year's work.

I read from page 153. It was realized a request of that kind would be entirely impracticable, and the estimate was cut to $500,000.

Mr. PAGE. I was just going to read that.

Mr. WALSH. Wait a moment. Mr. Meritt, afterwards going on, told the committee, when he made that statement, he did not have in mind that this $187,000 was not available and would not be available, and asked that that be put on. If the Senator from Vermont knows more about this project than the reclamation engineers, than the board which was sent out by the Senate of the United States, than the Indian Office, than the Senators from Montana, and can make it clear to the Senate that the appropriation ought to be practically $300,000 instead of $500,000, he may appeal with some justice to the Senators from Montana. If the matter were subject to discussion, if there were any controversy about it, if the thing were debatable in any way, we might be appealed to to yield our own views and some other views.

Why should the Senator appeal to us under these circumstances to have the appropriation cut down to $300,000?

Mr. PAGE. If I may be allowed, because we are cutting down appropriations everywhere. In my own State I have referred to the fact that $300,000 would put in a link of only about a dozen miles and make a great waterway from the Gulf of the St. Lawrence to New York and Buffalo and the West, and we are compelled to go without it because of the condition of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. WALSH. I want to say to the Senator that the situation is not the same. The United States have incurred no obligation in that matter at all. It is just the same as any other river and harbor improvement. It is a matter of wisdom as to whether it should be done or not, but here you have placed yourselves under an obligation. You have the money of these people in the Treasury of the United States; you have it upon the practical representation to them that every dispatch would be exercised in the completion of this project, and we are simply asking you to make good your promise, that is all.

Mr. PAGE. I will ask the Senator in all good faith if he does not think when he came before our committee and said, "We have discussed it by and large, through and through, and finally concluded to ask for $500,000," and we granted that with great pleasure, is it not now going rather far to come here and ask for this additional appropriation under the pretense that there is a balance left over? There is not a balance from last year. You have to go back to the year before last to get that unexpended balance.

Mr. WALSH. I certainly do not recognize any want of good faith on the part of the Senators from Montana in the Senate. Certainly there is none on my part. We all proceeded upon that assumption. The assistant commissioner proceeded upon that assumption. He made the recommendation upon that assumption, and he went back and then told the committee he made the recommendation upon that assumption and he found he was wrong, and now he thinks it ought to be made $686,000.

Mr. PAGE. I think I will not criticize Assistant Commissioner Meritt. He is a good man; but he made that statement, I think, very reluctantly, according to my hearing. In this little rehearsal of what took place I call the attention of the Senate to the following:

But considering the general disposition to economize—

Bear in mind, this is Senator WALSH speaking—and that kind of thing, we felt that we ought to accede to the suggestion of the department and make that an even $500,000, and that is what has been recommended and what we are asking for.

That is what we voted for when we were considering this whole proposition, and this addition of $186,000 was an afterthought. Had we then known that $686,000 would be asked for, I doubt if we would have favored the appropriation. Perhaps we would, but it is a matter of doubt.

Please listen to this:

And my understanding is that the Reclamation Service has mapped out a plan for the Indian Office by which, by the expenditure of this appropriation fund now recommended, $500,000, the ditches will be extended so that the hopes and expectations of a good many of the Indians, as well as the white settlers, will be met.

I do not see how language could be stronger; that the department had marked out, is ready for, and wanted $500,000. They never thought of the added $186,000 until it was afterwards brought forward by the senior Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. There is no controversy about this matter at all. The Senator recognizes, as a matter of course, that it was contemplated to be expended between June 30, 1915, and June 30, 1916, and that not a dollar of it was contemplated to be expended between this time and down to the work mapped out by the work to be done during the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1915. There is no opportunity for controversy or cavil about that, is there?

Mr. PAGE. I want to read a little more; then I will listen to the Senator:

Mr. MERITT. We realize that it would be impracticable to ask this committee to appropriate more than a million and a quarter for the project for this year.

That, of course, means the Montana project.

Mr. MERITT. We also wanted to keep the total amount of the Indian appropriation bill down to a reasonable limit. One objection to placing this appropriation in the Indian bill is this: It will so increase the total of the Indian bill that we are afraid the committees will begin to cut down on other items in the bill where we absolutely need the money for the support and civilization of the Indians on various other reservations.

It seemed to him so enormous that he thought the committee would cut down the other appropriation and that Congress would do it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. ASHURST. I merely wish to ask what is the motion of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. PAGE. The motion of the Senator from New Mexico was to strike out the clause.

Mr. ASHURST. That went out on a point of order.

Mr. PAGE. It went out on a point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. It has gone out.

Mr. PAGE. I now wish to address myself to another feature of this bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Then there is no motion pending.

Mr. PAGE (reading)—

Senator MYERS. You consent, however—

I call the attention of the Senate to this—

Senator MYERS. You consent, however, for the bureau, that these amounts do go in?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.

Senator MYERS. Then I will accept your offer, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. If somebody would issue the Senator from Vermont a certified check for $187,000 in payment of a valid obligation, and he lost that check, and the party that issued it found it——

Mr. PAGE. That is not a supposable case.

Mr. MYERS. And you call on him, you would think he ought to make it good and give another check. That is exactly analogous. The project had the money and through a misunderstanding of the officials, which fault was neither of the Indians nor the settlers, the sum was wholly lost to the project. We simply ask that another check shall be issued and that the money be appropriated.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. I think it is only fair to the Senator from Montana that I should say in this connection that I was at least partly responsible for putting this in the shape that it is. The Senator from Montana, who is a member of the committee, asked that the amount not used be reappropriated. I made a suggestion that instead of doing that we increase the amount of the appropriation from $500,000 to $687,000. I realize that there is a good deal of force—and there is always, of course, a good deal of force—in what the Senator from Vermont says. I shall feel like casting my vote for the amount now in the bill, because it was, I think, fairly well understood by those who were present at the time, and we all agreed to increase the appropriation from $500,000 to the amount stated in the bill. I do not know that the Senator from Vermont was present at the time.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator from Vermont was present and distinctly voted "no."

Mr. MYERS. And the Senator from Vermont was the only member of the committee who voted "no." Otherwise the vote was unanimous.

Mr. PAGE. I am proud of the distinction.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not find any fault with the Senator from Vermont for voting "no"; but I thought it was my duty to say what I have said, because I was responsible for making such an additional increase in the appropriation that was estimated by the department instead of reappropriating the money that was unexpended.

Mr. PAGE. I have not the slightest doubt that the Senator from North Dakota was doing exactly what he thought right, and he must forgive me for doing what I think is right about this matter, and I know he will.

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly. I want to say that no one knows how much money is necessary for the next year. If the committee or the department or the bureau knew really what it needed, there would be no need of making a continuing appropriation; there would be no need of making the money available until expended. I do not say that the bureau will require $687,000 in round numbers for the ensuing year, nor do I believe anyone else knows how much will be required; but, according to the language as it is now in the bill, there would be that much money to be used, whether used during the next year or in the future.

Mr. PAGE. I simply want to proceed in this same line, because I am going to try to show to the Senate that the Senator from Montana did not expect that any such sum as $500,000 would be appropriated, and I am going to quote his own language:

Senator MYERS. Then I will accept your offer, so far as I am concerned.

That is, the $500,000—

Senator LANE. I would like to ask about that Blackfeet Agency. Are the Indians using any water from any of these projects?

Mr. MERITT. We are only asking for an appropriation of $50,000 for the Blackfeet project. I personally do not believe that the Blackfeet project will be the success that the Flathead project will be ultimately. We are asking for $500,000 for the Flathead and only $50,000 for the Blackfeet. We are going to use that money simply to finish the construction work on a project that is now being completed.

Senator MYERS. I think this is to be borne in mind, Mr. Meritt, looking at it from the bureau's standpoint, and what you regard as adequate and fair and just, that if $500,000 only is appropriated, put in here as an amendment, in conference it is inevitable it will be cut down some, if you get it through at all.

Mr. MYERS. I want to call the Senator's attention to that right now. The House will undoubtedly cut it down.

Mr. PAGE (reading)—

The conferees will probably cut it down to $250,000. You can always look forward to that.

Mr. MYERS. I say the same thing right now.

Mr. PAGE. Now, if we are to make our appropriations here at this end of the Capitol at double what we think they ought to be for fear, perchance, that over at the other end they will cut our appropriation down, we have come to a pretty pass in legislation. I can not agree to that kind of legislation. I want to vote for an appropriation that I think is right. In this case I am ready to vote for what I think is right and liberal; that is to say, if we can safeguard the appropriation, but not otherwise. I should feel very sad indeed to see this appropriation go through without some satisfactory provision, and I hope the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] will show me some provision that will relieve this matter of the difficulties which I apprehend.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am very desirous of helping the Senator from Vermont on that matter, but, as I have told him often and he has been told by other Senators, there is not anything you can put in this bill that will change the situation either one way or the other, in my estimation. I may not know the law of natural right, but I must confess that I have never been able to understand what the risk is, what the menace is, what the peril is, that the Senator from Vermont is so anxious to obviate and escape. Let us, if we can, reduce the thing to a concrete case. Will the Senator give us some kind of an idea, because if I am going to render him any help at all I must know something about the end to be attained—can the Senator give us any idea as to just exactly what he thinks he wants to do?

The Flathead irrigation project is based upon appropriations not made by any Indians at all; not made upon any rights held by any individual Indian. It is made pursuant to an appropriation made by the Government of the United States when it started this great project. Under the provisions of our law the Government of the United States went in just the same as I would go in, just the same as any private individual would go in, and it filed its appropriation and appropriated—for the benefit of everybody under this ditch, for Indians as well as whites—as much water as it could carry in its canals; in other words, the Indians' rights to the water have their foundation in that appropriation thus made by the Government of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Under the State law?

Mr. WALSH. Under the State law.

Let me say, for the further information of the Senator from Vermont, that our State has been exceedingly liberal to the Indians in that regard—very much more liberal than it has to its own citizens of white blood—for the law provides that after the United States thus makes an appropriation of water for a reclamation project, either upon an Indian reservation or beyond that Indian reservation, that appropriation holds good and it does not need to turn a wheel; it does not need to stick a spade in the ground; it holds good for three years, while if a private individual does that it holds good for but 60 days; that is all. So, Mr. President, the State of Montana can not be accused, as the Senator seems to accuse it, of any desire whatever to deprive these Indians of any rights they may have in these waters.

I say to the Senator frankly here on the floor of the Senate, as I said to him in committee, that I do not think the provision to which he has attached so much importance is of any service whatever to the Indians on the Flathead Indian Reservation. As a lawyer, I do not know when and under what circumstances it would be appealed to to defend them against any claim that might be made against them. Perhaps the Senator can enlighten me; perhaps he can tell me some conditions under which that clause would be of service; or if he will tell me what the peril is that these Indians are in with respect to their water rights I shall be glad to give him the benefit of my experience in the matter and my study of the law of water rights to help him preserve those rights. That is the situation.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I will frankly say to the Senator from Vermont, as well as has the Senator from Montana, that I will join the Senator from Montana in the sincere effort to protect the Indians in any way possible to meet the wishes of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. WALSH. Let me say, Mr. President, with respect to this matter, that so long as this work is continued, the rights of the Indians, as I indicated to the Senator, depend upon the appropriation that the Government of the United States made at the time it instituted this project, and under the law all that is necessary is to proceed with reasonable diligence to complete the project. If you do not do that, that is the only peril you run; that is the only risk you encounter. If you should fail to make an appropriation that was reasonably adequate under all the circumstances, you might imperil the rights of these Indians eventually; otherwise you could not do it. That is the only chance there is, I say to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is right.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, if I should sell a man a carload of calfskins and there was something about those calfskins which we did not discuss, I should say that there was a fair reason for compromise, because our minds did not meet; but if I should say that the skins shall weigh 8 pounds and that they shall be No. 1 in quality, and then they should prove to weigh but 7 pounds and be No. 2 in quality, I know the other party would find some fault with me. I want to say that when this matter was under consideration my mind was very solicitous about it, because I went through this fight last year. This was not a matter which did not occur to us. Let me quote from the record.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. PAGE. In a moment. I went through this fight last year and came pretty near getting worsted. I did not, as it happened, but came so near it that I did not want to take another chance.

I read from the record:

Senator MYERS. Senator WALSH and I have both stated here in the most solemn manner that we agreed to this amendment and have no objection to it.

Senator PAGE. If they should throw that out on the floor of the Senate, do you know it would change my whole attitude toward this bill?

Senator LANE. Is it subject to a point of order?

Senator MYERS. I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

Senator PAGE. What do you say, Mr. Meritt?

Bear in mind that Mr. Meritt is talking. You will see that his answers are not absolutely responsive to the questions.

Mr. MYERS and Mr. ASHURST addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PAGE. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. MERITT. I think it is very important that we get all of this legislation contained in our amendment.

Senator MYERS. Senator PAGE, if Senator WALSH and I get up on the floor of the Senate and assert in the most solemn manner that we are for this amendment just as it is, I do not see how you could anticipate that anybody else would get up and fight it.

Has either the senior or the junior Senator from Montana gotten up on the floor of the Senate and made their assertion about this matter as suggested?

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. WALSH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PAGE. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish merely to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. He stated a moment ago that in purchasing calf hides he would expect the entire lot to be delivered. The Senator is an experienced business man. Suppose he should purchase for delivery 325,000 calf hides, and upon an investigation find that, through some unfortunate lapse, through some misadventure of the contractor, the hides when delivered to him were 186,999 hides short, what would he think of the morality, what would he think of the intellectual honesty of a business house that would try to screen itself behind a technicality to avoid delivering the 186,999 hides that were short?

Mr. PAGE. The Senator is getting too close to my hide for me to answer that question. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. That is it.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. MYERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield further; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PAGE. I yield to the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and then I will yield to his colleague [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, my colleague was fully authorized to make the statement that he did on my behalf, and the Senator from Vermont has not heard either of us urge one word against this amendment. Now that the asseveration has not been made, I will undertake to make it on behalf of my colleague, as I do on my own behalf. I say that the entire amendment proposed is entirely satisfactory to both of us.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator does not think, does he, that if at the time he and his colleague made that statement the members of the committee believed that there would have been a point of order raised on the amendment, which we considered so important, that we would have approved that measure?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the testimony discloses the whole thing. The testimony discloses that the Senator from Vermont was not satisfied about the matter, and he asked me if I could assure him that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] would not make the point of order, and I told him, as a matter of course, that I could not.

Mr. PAGE. I think that is true.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to ask a question, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Vermont heard me here or in any other place or at any other time object to any part of this amendment that was prepared in the Indian Committee?

Mr. PAGE. Not at all.

Mr. MYERS. Have I said anything against it?

Mr. PAGE. Not at all.

Mr. MYERS. Then, what is the Senator attacking me about when he taxes me with professing that I was favorable to the amendment? Have I contradicted myself in any way or backtracked myself in any way?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I was simply reading what was said before the committee to induce me to vote for this appropriation.

Mr. MYERS. I am for the whole amendment, and I can not help it if the Senator from New Mexico makes a point of order against a part of it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I think I am entirely responsible for the situation, the point of order which I made having been sustained.

I think the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has been absolutely consistent, because I will say that he stated to the Senator from Vermont before the committee at that time—

> Of course, I have not been able ever to make my views about the matter very clear to you, Senator PAGE, but there is nothing in the proviso that I attach any importance to at all.

So I think the Senator from Montana has been consistent in his position in reference to the matter.

As I have said, I am responsible for it, Mr. President, and not the Senators from Montana. I had spoken to the Senators from Montana about it before I made the point of order, but neither one would agree even to any modification of the amendment. I want to do the justice to the Senators to say that although I had suggested to them that this proviso might be amended possibly to meet my views—not in principle but in this particular instance—neither of the Senators would agree to it. They would agree to no modification, and I was compelled to make the point of order to get the proviso out. I would not support the measure nor the bill with the proviso in it.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I am exceedingly sorry if I have made any statement that reflected in the slightest degree upon the integrity of either of the Senators from Montana. If I have made such a statement I will withdraw it with pleasure. I do not know that I have made such a statement, and I do not think the RECORD will show that I have; but I am very sorry if I have, for I entertain the highest respect for both of them. I simply say that when they told me that if they both supported the measure I need not have any fear—that is not the exact language; it was spoken negatively—that I need not have any fear that anybody would oppose it, I took it for granted and acted upon it. It appears now that they have conferred with the Senator from New Mexico, and here I am.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Montana asked the Senator from Vermont to give some concrete instance of what might happen with this amendment out. Of course, the Senator from Montana is aware of the rights and the source of those rights which the United States or the Indians have to this water. I take it that he knows that whatever rights the Government has as trustee for the Indians or otherwise it acquired from the State of Montana under the laws of that State.

Mr. PAGE. No; I do not so understand.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think that must be true.

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

Mr. PAGE. That whatever rights——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That whatever rights the Indians have on this particular piece of land or that the Government of the United States for the Indians holds has been acquired by appropriation from the State of Montana under the laws of that State.

Mr. PAGE. When the Senator is through I want to answer that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wanted to know if the Senator understood that to be the fact?

Mr. PAGE. I am not going to dispute the Senator's statement. He is a good lawyer, and I have respect for him as a lawyer.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am not speaking of any law about it; I am speaking of the fact and asking whether the Senator understands that to be the fact.

Mr. PAGE. No; I do not.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then I will ask one or both of the Senators from Montana as to whether or not that is a fact?

Mr. WALSH. It is a fact that the Government of the United States, under and by virtue of the provisions of the laws of the State of Montana, made an appropriation of water before it began this work of reclamation, and that appropriation is the foundation of the rights of both the Indians and the whites under the project.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I so understood; I took that to be the fact. Now, what possibly can be gained or what rights that the Indians or the Government has can be prejudiced either with or without the insertion or the omission of this particular paragraph that has gone out on a point of order?

Mr. PAGE. Because of the insistence of the Senators from every Indian State that you are correct in the law about that——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to say that it is not a question of law; it is a question of fact. The Government itself in this particular case went to the authorities of the State of Montana and under the law of Montana made the appropriation of the water for these lands. Whatever they did they did under the laws of the State of Montana, acknowledging the ownership of the State of Montana to water thus appropriated.

That being the case, it would not lie in the mouth of the Government of the United States to question the title which it obtained in that way; and so I can not see the necessity of any provision of this sort. If the Government of the United States were claiming ab initio that this was water belonging to the Indians, it would have presented a different question; but the Government, in the beginning, undertook to comply with the laws of Montana, recognizing its power over the water and its authority to dispose of it, and the Government made the appropriation the same as individuals make an appropriation, standing in exactly the same light, except that I understand from the Senator from Montana that the State of Montana gave to the Government a right superior to what it would give to a private citizen, because it gave the Government a longer time to begin the construction of the work.

I think that is a statement of the facts in the case. The question of law as to the ownership of the water, so far as this particular case is concerned, is a settled matter. The Government of the United States is not seeking to open that question any more than a tenant seeks to dispute the title of his landlord.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I am very glad to accept whatever the Senator from Wyoming gives to me as gospel. I simply want to give him the reasons why I answered that I did not understand the matter as he did.

The case of Winters v. United States was decided January 6, 1908, and here is what I get from that case:

> That there was an implied reservation for the benefit of the Indians of a sufficient quantity of water from the Milk River for irrigating purposes which was not affected by the subsequent act of February 22, 1889 (25 Stat., 676), admitting Montana into the Union, and that the water of the Milk River can not be diverted so as to preclude the rights of the Indians by settlers on the public land and those claiming riparian rights on that river.

That reads as plain as the English language can read.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. FALL. I again call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Supreme Court rests its decision upon the agreement made between the United States of America and the particular Indians prior to the acquiring of any water rights in that neighborhood from that stream by any individual; and the lands being public lands any individual acquiring lands in seeking to divert water was bound by the agreement. That is the decision of the Supreme Court. It does not apply generally at all. It is only in that one case.

Mr. PAGE. But why do we need to talk about any other case when that identical case is before the Senate now?

Mr. FALL. Because under the general reclamation laws of the United States which Congress enacted it is provided that before the Reclamation Service can commence work upon any project they must comply with the local law. This project is in the hands of the Reclamation Service. The money which we are voting is being handled by the Reclamation Service, the Reclamation Service has complied with the local law, and the title of the Indians and parties using the water under this provision comes from the State of Montana.

Mr. PAGE. Well, I still want to say that I have read the decision and have reached a false conclusion evidently, because I seem to disagree with the Senator, and I think he is a good lawyer.

Mr. FALL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. PAGE. Let me read a little more:

The rule that all parties must join in an appeal or writ of error unless properly detached from the right to do so applies only to joint judgments and decrees—

I need not have read that—

In a suit against several defendants as trespassers, in which some of them defaulted and others answered—

I need not read that——

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish at this juncture to offer an amendment, which I think will be entirely satisfactory to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. I will be very glad to hear it read.

Mr. MYERS. I offer this amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PAGE. I do.

Mr. MYERS. It is to take the place of the proviso which went out on the point of order made by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I move to insert after the word "owed" and the semicolon, in line 14, page 50, these words:

Provided further, That the rights of the United States, heretofore acquired, to water for Indian lands referred to in this amendment, viz, the Blackfeet, Fort Peck, and Flathead Reservation lands shall be continued in full force and effect until the Indian title to such land is extinguished.

I send that amendment to the desk and offer it. The substance of it is that it confines this provision to the three reservations in the State of Montana, and does not affect any other State than Montana in any way whatsoever. It applies to the rights that have heretofore been acquired for the Indians by the United States Government in the manner stated by my colleague. Would not the Senator be satisfied with that amendment? I ask that the amendment be adopted. I think it ought to settle the fears of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. When the Senator gets through talking I will commence.

Mr. MYERS. I am satisfied of that. The Senator need not assure me of that. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. I am not a lawyer and I can not tell the Senator now whether that is entirely satisfactory to me or not. I can not see why it is not. If the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the chairman of the committee, accepts the amendment I shall be very glad to have it done, and I will pass judgment upon it a little later.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, so far as I have any authority, I cheerfully accept that amendment. I have no authority, but I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. MYERS. Is not the Senator in favor of it?

Mr. ASHURST. To be sure I am in favor of it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. PAGE. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not know that I have any objection to the amendment, but I believe it is understood we are adopting committee amendments only. For one, I should like to have the amendment——

Mr. MYERS. This is an amendment to a committee amendment, and I have a right to offer that at any time—an amendment to a committee amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. No; Mr. President, that amendment went out on a point of order. That particular provision went out on a point of order.

Mr. MYERS. But this is an amendment to the amendment which has been laid before the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. I think this is an entirely different matter. It is not appropriating money to this irrigation project. It is a change of existing law. I do not think I have any objection, but I do not want to pass upon it now.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator from North Dakota or anyone else wants to make a point of order against it, why, all right. That is anyone's privilege, and it is for the Chair to decide.

Mr. GRONNA. No, Mr. President; I do not want to make the point of order. I simply ask that the amendment may go over and that we may adopt the committee amendment. That is what we agreed to do when this bill was taken up.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the amendment has been offered by the Senator, I should like to have it stated. I do not know whether he has offered it yet or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, line 14, after the word "owed," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That the rights of the United States, heretofore acquired, to water for Indian lands, referred to in this amendment, viz, the Blackfeet, Fort Peck, and Flathead Reservation lands, shall be continued in full force and effect until the Indian title to such land is extinguished.

Mr. MYERS. What is the ruling of the Chair? Is my amendment before the Senate now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment is before the Senate. There has been no point raised against it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I want to repeat what I said a moment ago, that that language went out on a point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. I realize that; but I wanted to interrupt the Senator from North Dakota. If I am not mistaken, this language restores the language that went out of the bill, but limits its application to these particular reservations upon which the appropriation is to be applied. I trust that both the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Vermont will accept the amendment and let us proceed with the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota ask that this entire matter be passed over for the present?

Mr. GRONNA. No; as the Senator from Arkansas has explained it, I am absolutely satisfied. In view of what the Senator from Arkansas has said, I am satisfied.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I remember that——

Mr. MYERS. I ask for a vote on my amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. MYERS. Very well; whenever he gets through I shall ask for a vote.

Mr. PAGE. I remember that I had no more faithful coadjutor last year than the Senator from Arkansas. I do not state that correctly; he had no more faithful coadjutor than I in this fight, and I am inclined to accept what he assures me is for the best; and yet, in the interest of all concerned, it seems to me we ought not to accept an amendment of the importance of this amendment when it can just as well go over, unless we conclude to go on and finish the bill to-night. If we do, I will try to give it consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I feel that the statement just made by the Senator from Vermont needs correction. This matter was not before the Senate last year. In the form in which the amendment was reported to the Senate I favored it, because I think it is a material improvement over existing law, and I think it does in many particulars safeguard the rights of the Indians. As to the legal effect of the proviso which has been inserted by this amendment, that is another question. I think it will avail something.

Mr. PAGE. I am inclined to accept the Senator's suggestion, because I know he is friendly to every effort that we made last year and this year to safeguard the Indians' rights. I do not care to have this considered for the present, if it is not necessary to forward the progress of this bill; but I want to say one word more before I am through with this particular feature. That is that I assented only to an appropriation of $500,000, and I want the two Senators from Montana to give this consideration and see if they do not think that in the interest of harmony they had better say that they will take the $500,000, and that, so far as I am concerned, will settle the matter entirely.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I am not here to trade nor to traffic off any rights which the Fathead project may have in this matter. I am willing to leave it to the Senate. If the Senate thinks that under the statements made and the estimates made it ought to have $686,000, I want the Senate so to declare. If the Senate does not think it ought to have that much, I want the Senate to declare what it thinks it ought to have. I have offered my amendment here in the interest of the promotion of peace and a fair solution of the matter. It is commended by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]; and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] has said that he relies very greatly on what the Senator from Arkansas says, and gives great weight to his opinion. I therefore ask that my amendment may be kept before the Senate, and I ask for a vote on it.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I do not know but that I have yielded the floor a dozen times, and probably 20 times, this afternoon; but I did not intend to yield the floor to make any motion that would take me off the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me to make a suggestion?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator has been very courteous in yielding, but it is going to be 8 o'clock now in 14 or 15 minutes, and of course I want to dispose of this item before 8 o'clock. I do not want to have the bill laid aside with this item undisposed of. I shall not interrupt the Senator further, and I hope other Senators will not, in order that we may conclude before 8 o'clock, and that the item may be disposed of.

Mr. PAGE. I did hope that after further consideration the two Senators from Montana, in recognition of the financial condition of our Treasury to-day, would say what I believe is true, and that is that $500,000 is all we ought to now appropriate. If we disagree about that, I want to be heard for just a few minutes.

Mr. ASHURST. I am very certain that neither the Senators from Montana nor any other person can convince the Senator from Vermont on this question; and I am equally certain that the Senator from Vermont can not convince the Senators from Montana. The matter must be left finally to the supreme arbitrament, the Senate. Senators can not convince each other, because they are in such utter contradistinction in their points of view. The Senator from Vermont stated that he is not a lawyer, but he glibly rushes in and attempts to discuss legal questions. Of course he will not convince lawyers, because a man who is not a lawyer and does not understand how to discuss legal propositions will not convince lawyers. This is all meant in courtesy.

Mr. PAGE. Oh, I accept it so. The Senator could not say anything that was not courteous to me.

Now, Mr. President, let us come to the $500,000 proposition, because I want to say a few words about that.

If anyone wants to see the trend of the Committee on Indian Affairs under the guidance and control and suggestion of one of the best men that I know, and that is Mr. Meritt, he wants to take up this report. There is not a Senator connected with that committee that does not respect Mr. Meritt. He is a gentleman who always gives his opinion; and yet, if you will take up your report, you will find that for some reason or other, to me unknown, he very easily comes up to the higher mark every time.

I tell you, Mr. President, this bill has not been passed through that committee with the energy to conserve the money in the Treasury in its present bad condition that it ought to have had. Now, let me take up the report in the estimates:

Indian schools: As passed by the House, $1,440,600; as recommended by the Senate committee, $1,550,000.

If there is any appropriation in the whole bill that I fully approve, it is that. I never have yet knowingly disturbed any appropriation for the education of a boy, be he red, white, or black, and I will not now if I think that money is to be faithfully expended in the interests of education; so I approve that.

Industrial work and care of timber, gratuity: The House said $400,000, the Senate committee said $450,000.

Now, Mr. President, this is all easy. The assistant commissioner said: "We can use $450,000, and I rather guess you had better allow it"; and without a word of protest, hardly ever, as these reports will show, the increase is made. I should be glad to have anyone take up the Indian appropriation bill hearings and read it from first to last. He will not find there what seems to me to be a proper effort toward reducing appropriations in view of the present condition of the Treasury. I say not any effort, but, if there were any, those efforts were not numerous. I do not say that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs can not use the money he asks for. He can, but all of us who are connected with appropriation committees know how easy it is for the head of a department to come before us and say: "I would like an addition to that appropriation."

Industrial work and care of timber, $50,000 additional.

Pay of Indian police—we talked about that last night. The House recommended $100,000. We passed $200,000, and I will say that one of the oldest members of either body on the Committee on Indian Affairs sent word to me that that appropriation of $100,000 was ample, that the increase to $200,000 was wrong, and on that ground I opposed it.

General expenses, Indian Service, we raised from $100,000 to $125,000. Does anyone know why? I confess I do not. The Assistant Commissioner, Mr. Meritt, very pleasantly says, "I think we can use $25,000 more advantageously," and the $25,000 additional goes in.

Senators, I might go through the whole list, but I have not time. Turn over to page 6 and let me read a word in closing. The bill as reported to the Senate carried $11,255,865.55. As passed by the House it carried $7,720,124.25. Bear in mind that there is an increase in that one bill of 50 per cent.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I resent that statement. The record will show that the Senator from Vermont sat in his seat and made motion after motion to agree to the estimates as submitted by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. After moving in the committee to agree to them, he comes before the Senate and spreads abroad his phylacteries, claiming to be an economist. I submit that that is not proper. Why did he move to agree to them if he now objects to them? Did he not know what he was doing then, or does he know now?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I am very glad to be put upon the stand and tell my story. I confess that I voted for many measures that were brought before us, and I am not objecting now to all these measures. I simply say that the general trend is upward on nearly everything, making in the aggregate a net increase of nearly 50 per cent. I am responsible for almost anything that was asked for in the line of education. I think very likely it is true that I voted for measures there that I do not support now, and I am willing to tell my good friend the Senator from Arizona why. After I got through with this measure I began to investigate it as I thought it was my duty to investigate, and I found that time after time we had been asked by Mr. Meritt to do things that upon investigation I thought we ought not to do, and I am acting now according to my judgment. I am not inconsistent, according to my idea of things. Perhaps I am, but I think not. It seems to me that as a member of that committee it became my duty to make the best possible investigation I could, and when I have merely an ex parte showing before the committee I have a right to go outside, to go to Indians, to their attorneys, and to men who have traveled through the Indian country and know the conditions there, and say: "What about this and what about that item in this Indian appropriation bill?" I have informed myself as best I could, and I am making no apologies to anybody now for taking the position I do in regard to economy, especially when it applies to this addition of $200,000 for the Flathead project.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may the Secretary state the amendment as amended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been stated once. It will be stated again.

The SECRETARY (reading)—

That in addition to the construction charges every allottee, entryman, purchaser, or owner shall pay to the superintendent of the reservation a maintenance and operation charge based upon the total cost of maintenance and operation of the systems on the several reservations, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to fix such maintenance and operation charge upon such basis as shall be equitable to the owners of the irrigable land.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, we had a unanimous-consent agreement that we would not do that until 8 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not in order. The Chair is going by the clock over the main d' .r.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what page is the Secretary reading on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Page 50.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

The SECRETARY (reading)—

Such charges when collected shall be available for expenditure in the maintenance and operation of the systems on the reservation where collected: Provided, That delivery of water to any tract of land may be refused on account of nonpayment of any charges herein authorized, and the same may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be collected by a suit for money owed.

At this point the Senator from Montana has proposed the following amendment:

Provided further, That the rights of the United States, heretofore acquired, to water for Indian lands referred to in this amendment, viz, the Blackfeet, Fort Peck, and Flathead Reservation lands, shall be continued in full force and effect until the Indian title to such land is extinguished.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. This proviso, as I understood, beginning on line 14, page 50, and going down to and including line 17, went out on a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It did.

Mr. SMOOT. Is this an amendment to the amendment or a substitute for that which went out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is an amendment to the committee amendment. The Senator from Montana has offered an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not understand the amendment and I should like to look at it for a minute.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the amendment was divided. The Chair held that it was divisible. I wish to know what we are to vote upon, whether it is to perfect the provision which was stricken out on a point of order or if it is an amendment to the amendment of the committee?

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota will excuse the Chair. The hour of 8 o'clock having arrived, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and a half spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN in the chair). The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to present an amendment to the river and harbor bill, and ask to have it printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Chair is of the opinion that nothing is in order except the calendar under Rule VIII——

Mr. PENROSE. Nothing is in order but the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Until the hour of 11 o'clock, when that order terminates.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent to report a bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I object. We are acting under a unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is acting under a unanimous-consent agreement, and nothing but the calendar is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can not make the report now under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. PENROSE. Nothing is in order except the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the first business on the calendar.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1240) to establish the legislative reference bureau of the Library of Congress, was announced as first in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a House resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is not in order. The Senate is acting under a unanimous-consent agreement to consider unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. This is a matter on the calendar.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator can wait until it is reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey can wait until it is reached on the calendar in regular order.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. On behalf of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2242) making it unlawful for any Member of Congress to serve on or solicit funds for any political committee, club, or organization was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 156) limiting expenditures for telegrams sent or received by Senators was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 84) providing that any Senator upon his own request may be recorded and counted as present in order to constitute a quorum was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 218) proposing an amendment to the standing rules of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I think the remarks by Senators should be in the proper form under the rules. When a bill is objected to it should be objected to in regular order and form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken, although that has not been the practice of the Senate.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 26) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I object to the consideration of that joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to investigate the condition of trade in China, for the purpose of determining the desirability of establishing there a permanent exposition of the products of the United States of America, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to the consideration of that joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2425) to authorize the Roanoke River Development Co. to construct and maintain a dam across the Roanoke River in Mecklenburg County, in the State of Virginia, approximately 20 miles below the town of Clarksville, in said State, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has objected to that bill, and would object were he in the Chamber, and therefore I object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, would it not be a good thing to file a caveat against all these bills and expedite the consideration of other business?

The bill (S. 3971) to provide for a permanent exhibit of the resources of the States of the Union in or near Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object to that bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 10) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, fixing the time for the convening of Congress and commencement of the terms of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. Res. 254) to create a special committee of five Senators to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission in investigating certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville R. R., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that go over.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Did some Senator object to that bill?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming has raised the point of order that Senators must rise to object.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was only following the course pursued by other Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order having been raised, the Chair will feel compelled to enforce the rule.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the Chair is correct in enforcing the rule, but I was only doing what other Senators were doing.

The bill (S. 121) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6827) to amend an act entitled "An act to change the name of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to the Public Health Service, to increase the pay of officers of said service, and for other purposes," approved August 14, 1912, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4161) to prohibit the importation and entry of goods, wares, and merchandise made in whole or in part by convict, pauper, or detained labor, or made in whole or in part from materials which have been made in whole or in part or in any manner manipulated by convict or prison labor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 531) to set apart certain lands in the State of Oregon as a public park, to be known as the Saddle Mountain National Park, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that bill can not be passed to-night, and I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4405) to provide for and encourage the prospecting, mining, and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States, for the purpose of securing an adequate supply of radium for Government and other hospitals in the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object to that bill, because I have not had an opportunity to examine it, and it relates to a very important subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8846) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, and under the provisions of section 151 of the act approved March 3, 1911, commonly known as the Judicial Code, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, it will be impossible to consider that bill to-night.

Mr. WARREN. It might go over temporarily, to be taken up at the end of the other bills on the calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I hope the Senator will not object to that bill. We might get through with it without much difficulty.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not object to the bill, except that it is a long bill with a great many items; and, if we take up that bill, we will not get along with other measures on the calendar.

Mr. PENROSE. Let it go over temporarily.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If it can be passed over temporarily, to be considered later, I will have no objection.

Mr. WARREN. We might take it up later in the evening, in the meantime allowing it to be passed over.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that I made the suggestion in order to facilitate the consideration of the calendar, but I have no objection to having the bill go over without prejudice and taking it up later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 120) creating a joint committee of Congress, and authorizing said committee to acquire, by purchase or condemnation the property known as Monticello, and embracing the former home of Thomas Jefferson and the family graveyard in which his remains were interred, with such lands and grounds appurtenant thereto as the committee shall find necessary in order to carry out the various public objects and purposes in said resolution set forth, all of said property being located in Albemarle County, Va., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. PENROSE. I also object to that measure on the ground that if Thomas Jefferson were alive now he would not recognize the Democratic Party. [Laughter.]

The bill (S. 3545) to provide for the highway-improvement work by the United States Department of Agriculture, in cooperation with the highway departments of the several States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that that go over.

Mr. PENROSE. I also ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable was announced as next in order, and the Secretary read the joint resolution.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4601) to authorize the Director of the Census to enumerate the population of the city of Tulsa, State of Oklahoma, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object to that bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS AND DEBATES IN CONGRESS ON TRUSTS.

The resolution (S. Con. Res. 21) authorizing the printing of additional copies of Senate Document No. 147 (57th Cong., 2d sess.), "Bills and Debates in Congress on Trusts," was announced as next in order, and the Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 500 additional copies of Senate Document No. 147, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, entitled "Bills and Debates in Congress on Trusts," for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

POWER OF THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY (S. DOC. NO. 964).

The resolution (S. Res. 305) to print a pamphlet entitled "The Power of the Federal Judiciary to Declare Legislation Invalid which Conflicts with the Federal Constitution," by David K. Watson, as a Senate document was announced as next in order.

Mr. KERN. I ask that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I hope the objection will be withdrawn. It is a pamphlet on the other side of the question, and ought to be printed. The resolution merely provides for the printing of the pamphlet; but, of course, if the objection is insisted upon, I will not ask that the resolution be passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Which Senator objected? The objection, I think, was not made in the regular way, and therefore the resolution is properly before the Senate.

Mr. KERN. I will withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That a pamphlet entitled "The Power of the Federal Judiciary to Declare Legislation Invalid which Conflicts with the Federal Constitution," by David K. Watson, be printed as a Senate document.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4843) to amend section 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ADDRESS OF LEWIS JEROME JOHNSON.

The resolution (S. 320) to print the address by Lewis Jerome Johnson before the First National Conference on Popular Government upon "The preferential ballot as a possible substitute for the direct primary," was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as this is a document that suggests a possible substitute for the direct primary, I ask that it go over. If it suggested a substitute, I might agree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, a substitute for Senate resolution 320 has been reported by the committee submitting another document in lieu of the one proposed to be printed, and

I ask that the substitute take the place on the calendar of the original resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have not seen the substitute resolution, and know nothing about it.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is the same document only it simply contains some changes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed substitute.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I think the publication of these documents leads to mental confusion on the part of the public, and I object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I think there was a misunderstanding as to Calendar No. 329, being Senate resolution 305, offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. I made the objection, but subsequently withdrew it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection was withdrawn, and the resolution was passed.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Indiana withdraws his objection, I wish to renew the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is too late. The resolution has been agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. Then, I ask that that action be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can move to reconsider the resolution.

Mr. OWEN. I move to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to, and I shall call for a vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order. Under the unanimous-consent agreement unobjected bills are to be considered, and if there is objection that settles it; but I do not think a motion to reconsider can be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think the unanimous-consent agreement precludes a motion to reconsider.

Mr. BURTON. One moment, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. The question is debatable, then.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will not insist on the motion to reconsider. This is a resolution to print a brief document. The resolution has been on the calendar for a very long time. The document takes a position in opposition to that which has been set forth in other documents which have been printed, and I submit it is but fair that both sides of the question should be presented in public documents printed by the Senate. It has been pending here a long while. It seems to me we should get it out of the way. Ordinarily those documents would be printed simply on the request of a Senator rising in his place. I can hardly see the motive of making a motion to reconsider this very innocent resolution which was passed just a few moments ago.

Mr. OWEN. I had assumed that these documents which were desired to be printed would be printed without objection; but if an objection is made to Order of Business 333, I do not intend that any of these shall be printed on the other side.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to submit an observation in the nature of a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GALLINGER. By unanimous consent it was ordered that we should consider the calendar under Rule VIII. Under that rule we are entitled to speak once and for five minutes only. A motion to reconsider is a debatable question, and we may talk an hour on that motion, or 10 hours; but, I think, under the unanimous-consent agreement it ought not to be entertained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the Senate can not be precluded from a motion to reconsider.

Mr. OWEN. I serve notice on the Senators on the other side that if the document provided for in Senate resolution 320, Order of Business 333, is not printed there will not be many of these bills agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. We can stand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The motion to reconsider was rejected.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 130) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that that joint resolution go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object to the consideration of that resolution.

Mr. BRISTOW. I trust the Senator from Georgia will withdraw his objection. The joint resolution can be passed in a very few minutes.

Mr. PENROSE. Owing to the apparent rivalry between various gentlemen on the woman-suffrage question, because we are coming to another resolution in a moment, being Order of Business 399—Senate joint resolution 128—and in order that the Senate may act impartially and without conflict, and without extending any undue favor to any gentleman in earning his spurs on this question, I shall object to both.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5340) to revise and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should be very glad to have that bill taken up, but I presume its consideration would take longer than the Senate would wish to devote to it.

Mr. SMOOT. It will not take very long, and I will say to the Senator that it will save the Government of the United States $800,000 the first year after it has been passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so. I should be very glad to have it taken up.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, that is the first suggestion along the line of economy that I have heard in a good while. Let us proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. OWEN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN H. ARMSTRONG.

The bill (S. 1988) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John H. Armstrong was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John H. Armstrong, late of Battery A, Third Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that company and regiment, and that other than as above set forth no pay, bounty, pension, or other emolument shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of John H. Armstrong."

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3804) for relief of Templin Morris Potts, captain on the retired list of the United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is an adverse report in that case. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 128) proposing an amendment of the Constitution of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

THOMAS SMART.

The bill (S. 717) to correct the military record of Thomas Smart, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provided that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Thomas Smart, late of Company B, Eighth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been present with his company and regiment from the 27th day of February, 1864, to May 27, 1864, and that other than as above set forth no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Thomas Smart."

ECONOMIC VALUE OF MAN (S. DOC. NO. 965).

The resolution (S. Res. 351) to print the manuscript entitled "A treatise on the economic value of man," by Dr. Chauncey Rea Burr, of Portland, Me., as a Senate document was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I object to that resolution.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me say to the Senator from Oklahoma that that is a document which was submitted by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. SMOOT. No; this is not the document.

Mr. BRISTOW. I know what I am talking about, because the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] spoke to me about it. It relates to workmen's compensation, and it is a very good document on that subject. Under the circumstances I do not think the Senator from Oklahoma ought to insist upon his objection.

Mr. OWEN. I withdraw my objection.

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by Mr. SUTHERLAND on April 15, 1914, entitled "A treatise on the economic value of man, together with rules for determining his economic loss in every case of injury or disease," by Dr. Chauncey Rea Burr, of Portland, Me., late assistant surgeon, United States Navy, be printed as a Senate document.

BILLS AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1887) to annul the proclamation creating the Chugach National Forest and to restore certain lands to the public domain was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1269) for the adjudication and determination of the claims arising under joint resolution of July 14, 1870, authorizing the Postmaster General to continue in use in the postal service Marcus P. Norton's combined postmarking and stamp-canceling hand stamp patents; or otherwise, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that that bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 367) for the printing of certain documents relating to claims against the Government of Colombia as a Senate document was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 13044) to pension widows and minor and helpless children of officers and enlisted men who served during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection or in China, between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 14330) to prohibit the importation and entry of goods, wares, and merchandise made in whole or in part by convict, pauper, or detained labor, or made in whole or in part from materials which have been made in whole or part or in any manner manipulated by convict or prison labor was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TOWN SITES IN MONTANA.

The bill (S. 4180) to validate title to certain town sites in the State of Montana was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to object. I will ask the Senator from Montana if he has the amendment to offer to this bill that has been agreed to?

Mr. MYERS. I have not it here.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any objection to the consideration of the bill, but I will say to the Senator that there is an amendment to the bill that has been agreed to by all parties interested. If the Senator will get it, I should like to ask that the bill go over in the meantime without prejudice, to be returned to as soon as that amendment is obtained by the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. I do not know that I can put my hand on that amendment to-night. I think I can offer one which will be satisfactory to the Senator from Utah and to all concerned and will be substantially what the other is.

Mr. SMOOT. Wait just a minute and I will see if I have it here. I may have the amendment here.

Mr. MYERS. I hope the Senator has the amendment. I can suggest one that I think will answer the purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over for the time being without prejudice.

Mr. MYERS. Before that is done I should like to suggest this amendment to the Senator from Utah and see what his judgment is on it. I offer the following amendment:

Provided, That nothing herein shall prejudice or affect any vested rights of any occupant of or claimant to any of the lands herein described, or affect any contest now pending in the Interior Department or any subdivision thereof.

Mr. SMOOT. I have the exact wording in an amendment, Mr. President, and if the Senator will allow the bill to go over for just a few moments I will try to find it.

Mr. MYERS. Very well.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from Montana that——

Mr. MYERS. Here is the amendment. What is the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota, however?

Mr. GRONNA. I wanted to suggest to the Senator from Montana that the entryman should be protected.

Mr. MYERS. That was my idea in suggesting the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the Senator from Montana an amendment he desires to offer?

Mr. MYERS. I have the amendment, and I will send it up to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, beginning on line 1, after the word "meridian," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the words "Montana meridian," at the end of line 7.

Mr. MYERS. I am assured that that covers all the land about which there is any contest of any nature whatever.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the following words:

And soldier's additional homestead entry heretofore made and designated as Glasgow, Mont., land office, serial No. 021481, for the following-described land: Southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 5, in township 35 north, of range 52 east, Montana meridian.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that that amendment is the one I was looking for. I have just found it and it agrees exactly with the amendment that was offered by the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

The resolution (S. Res. 376) requesting the President to open diplomatic negotiations for the settlement of the Panama Canal tolls question by international arbitration was announced as next in order.

Mr. JAMES. Let that resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

NELSON T. SAUNDERS.

The bill (S. 5210) to correct the military record of Nelson T. Saunders was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged officers, Nelson T. Saunders, late commissary sergeant of the Sixty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered into service as a second lieutenant of Company F, Sixty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, September 30, 1864, vice Charles W. Schutt, promoted, and to have been honorably discharged as of that grade and organization October 13, 1864: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or pension shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Nelson T. Saunders."

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) to determine the rights of the State of Colorado and of its citizens in the beneficial uses of waters of the Rio Grande and its tributaries within the boundaries of Colorado, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4541) to consolidate the veterinary service, United States Army, and to increase its efficiency, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4282) to establish in the War Department and in the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "The Army and Navy medal of honor honor roll," and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 293) to amend Rule XXV of the standing rules of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that resolution may go over. It has been reported adversely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 6059) to provide for the erection, furnishing, and equipping of a building in the city of Washington, D. C., for the Department of Justice was announced as next in order.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, in behalf of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] I ask that that bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 98) authorizing a survey and examination of the Rio Grande border of the United States to determine the advisability of constructing a highway either along the entire border or certain sections thereof was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

WILLIAM H. SHANNON.

The bill (H. R. 962) for the relief of William H. Shannon was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that it go over.

Mr. WORKS. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not insist upon that objection. The bill simply proposes to correct the military record of this gentleman, and I think it is a very deserving case.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, of course I will yield to any wish of the Senator from California, but I want to say this, that no Senate bill of this kind is ever acted upon by the other House.

Mr. WORKS. I hope the party interested will not be penalized on that account.

Mr. GALLINGER. No. That has been going on for two or three years, however.

Mr. WORKS. Yes; I know it has.

Mr. GALLINGER. And we are being penalized; but I withdraw my objection.

Mr. WORKS. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws William H. Shannon, late of the Seventeenth Battery Indiana Light Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as of the date of May 18, 1865, and that no back pay, bounty, or allowance shall be allowed by reason of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 6120) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1267) to transfer Capt. Armistead Rust from the retired to the active list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN and Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1151) to remedy in the line of the Army the inequalities in rank due to the past system of regimental promotion was announced as next in order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CAPT. DANIEL H. POWERS.

The bill (S. 1985) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Capt. Daniel H. Powers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Capt. Daniel H. Powers, late of the Sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment; and that other than as above set forth no pay, bounty, pension, or other emolument shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Capt. Daniel H. Powers."

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4492) to authorize James F. Barbour and his successors in title to permanently maintain and use siding from the tracks of the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad in the city of Washington was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 16586) to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, to prevent overissues of securities by carriers, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 10735) to create a bureau of labor safety in the Department of Labor was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object to that bill, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I ask that the bill may be considered. I beg to say that this bill was the formulation of the late Bob Bremner, of the House, jointly with Congressman MANN. The bill passed the House of Representatives unanimously. It has been approved by almost every manufacturer. I have received no protests regarding it, and it means so much to humanity that I trust the Senator will permit the consideration of it at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to say just one word in addition to what the Senator from New Jersey has said. The object of this bill is simply to gather together in the Department of Labor safety devices and to aid manufacturers in using devices that will help protect their employees from injury, and it was unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It was unanimously reported and it was unanimously passed by the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can either of the Senators who have spoken tell me how much of a bureau this is likely to become?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can not state just as to that. I do not know how much of a bureau it is calculated to maintain. I will say that in almost every country abroad a similar bureau is maintained.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, regular order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I understand the bill proposes to appropriate $15,000, but it seems a very great deal——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will have to object to the bill. I think we have bureaus enough for this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to return to House bill 10735, to create a bureau of labor safety in the Department of Labor. I objected, and I desire to withdraw my objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that it carries an appropriation of $15,000, and I renew the objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. That settles it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

JAMES W. M'GREEVEY.

The bill (H. R. 12909) to correct the military record of James W. McGreevey was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, James W. McGreevey, who was a musician in Company A, Second Regiment United States Veteran Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a musician of said company and regiment on the 2d day of July, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill for the relief of James W. McGreevey."

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1851) for the relief of the legal representatives of the estate of Henry H. Sibley, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (H. R. 11686) to provide that the United States shall in certain cases aid the States and the civil subdivisions thereof in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURTON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over on objection.

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD.

The bill (H. R. 12919) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead" was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a moment. I want to see if this is the bill——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will state to the Senator that the purpose of the bill is to give those who have not made final proof of their homesteads the same right as those who have to take up an additional entry. It is to correct an inequality of the law, and it is approved by the department. Not only that, but the bill has passed the House and has been reported unanimously by the Public Lands Committees of both bodies.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not the bill I thought it was. There is one amendment to the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was going to suggest, in reference to the amendment, that another bill has taken care of the States of Nevada and South Dakota, and the Senators from those States are willing that the Senate shall disagree to the committee amendments.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been read.

Mr. WALSH. I was not able to catch the full purport of the bill. If it is not too lengthy, I should like very much to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3 and 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, and of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved June 17, 1910, as amended by an act approved February 11, 1913, be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That any person who has made, or shall make, homestead entry of lands of the character herein described, and who has not submitted final proof thereon, or who having submitted final proof still owns and occupies the land thus entered, shall have the right to enter public lands, subject to the provisions of this act, contiguous to his first entry, which shall not, together with the original entry, exceed 320 acres: Provided, That the land originally entered and that covered by the additional entry shall have first been designated as subject to this act, as provided by section 1 thereof.

"SEC. 4. That at the time of making final proof, as provided in section 2291 of the Revised Statutes, the entryman under this act shall, in addition to the proofs and affidavits required under said section, prove by himself and two credible witnesses that at least one-sixteenth of the area embraced in such entry was continuously cultivated for agricultural crops other than native grasses, beginning with the second year of the entry, and that at least one-eighth of the area embraced in the entry was so continuously cultivated beginning with the third year of the entry: Provided, That any qualified person who has heretofore made, or who hereafter makes, additional entry under the provisions of section 3 of this act to an entry upon which final proof has not been made, may be allowed to perfect title to his original entry by showing compliance with the provisions of section 2291 of the Revised Statutes, respecting such original entry, and thereafter in making proof upon his additional entry shall be credited with residence maintained upon his original entry from date of such original entry, but the cultivation required upon entries made under this act must be shown respecting such additional entry, which cultivation, while it may be made upon either the original or additional entry or upon both entries, must be cultivation in addition to that relied upon and used in making proof upon the original entry; or, if he elects, his original and additional entries may be considered as one, with full credit for residence upon and improvement made upon his original entry, in which event the amount of cultivation herein required shall apply to the total area of the combined entry, and proof may be made upon such combined entry whenever it can be shown that the cultivation required by this section has been performed; and to this end the time within which proof must be made upon such a combined entry is hereby extended to seven years from the date of the original entry: Provided further, That where an entry is made as additional to an entry upon which final proof has heretofore been submitted by an entryman who still owns and occupies the land thus entered, the entryman in making proof upon his additional entry shall be credited with residence maintained upon his original entry from date thereof, but the cultivation required upon entries made under this act must be shown respecting such additional entry and must be performed upon the land included therein to the extent and for the period required in connection with original entries under this act, proof of which must be submitted within five years from and after the date of the additional entry: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to require residence upon the combined entry in excess of the period of residence as required by section 2291 of the Revised Statutes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Public Lands propose to add a new section to be known as section 5, and to read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the provisions of the said act of February 19, 1909, and all acts amendatory thereof, and also the provisions of this act shall extend to and include the States of South Dakota and Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The committee reported to amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for an enlarged homestead, and for other purposes.'"

The amendment to the title was rejected.

FLATHEAD INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

The bill (S. 647) to amend an act entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," approved April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., 302), as amended by the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. L., 796), was considered in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, line 1, after the word "entries," to insert "or before final proof thereon, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 302), entitled "An Act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," amended by the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. L., p. 796), be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. That all merchantable timber on said lands, returned and classified by said commission as timber lands, shall be sold and disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior, for cash, under sealed bids or at public auction, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, and under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That after the sale and removal of the timber such of said lands as are valuable for agricultural purposes shall be sold and disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided further, That lands valuable for agricultural or horticultural purposes, heretofore classified as timber lands, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be appraised under regulations prescribed by him and be opened to homestead entry under the general provisions of section 9, upon condition that homestead entrymen shall at time of making their original homestead entries or before final proof thereon, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, pay the full value of the timber on the land entered as fixed by the appraisement commission, such payment to be in addition to the appraised price of the lands apart from the timber, as herein authorized."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask the Senator from Montana if this provision is not carried also in the Indian appropriation bill, on which our attention is now directed?

Mr. MYERS. Not all, but a part of it. It is recommended unanimously by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I am afraid in the Indian appropriation bill it will be subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEDAWAKANTON AND WAHPAKOOTA SIOUX.

The bill (H. R. 11246) for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] what the effect of the bill would be, so far as making a charge upon the Treasury is concerned?

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] is quite familiar with the measure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It does not appropriate a dollar, except I think it provides for something like $2,500 to pay for proceedings in the Court of Claims. It simply provides for an adjudication in the Court of Claims of the claim of these Indians to annuities. It is identically similar with a bill that was passed in relation to another family of these Indians. It is on all fours with that measure, and it goes into the Court of Claims for adjudication.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does it constitute a claim against the United States, then? Does it give them, in case the Court of Claims sustains them, a claim against the United States that is now barred by the act?

Mr. CRAWFORD. These Santee Indians drew annuities. They were under the accusation of having forfeited them by being in the Sioux conspiracy in the sixties. A part of them perhaps may have been guilty, but a part of them were innocent of it. It is simply to determine the rights to certain annuities in the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

H. S. HATHAWAY.

The bill (H. R. 7205) to correct the military record of H. S. Hathaway was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 9, to strike out "at the close of the war" and insert "August 25, 1865," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing admission to soldiers' homes, H. S. Hathaway shall be held and considered to have been mustered into the United States service in December, 1864, as a private in Company F, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and to have been honorably discharged August 25, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue or become payable prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill for the relief of H. S. Hathaway."

MINE SAFETY STATIONS.

The bill (S. 5588) to provide for the establishment and maintenance of mining experiment and mine safety stations for making investigations and disseminating information among employees in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. I to-day reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining favorably House bill 15869, which was intended to cover the same subject as that covered by Senate bill 5588, and in substantially the same language, except the House bill carries no appropriation, as the Senate bill does. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill instead of the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15869) to provide for the establishment and maintenance of mining experiment and mine safety stations for making investigations and disseminating information among employees in mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with amendments.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Montana that inasmuch as he is chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, which authorized us to make the two small amendments which were offered, it would insure the passage of the bill if we would disagree to the amendment and adopt the bill as it is, whereas, if it is sent over to the House and a conference required, perhaps the bill might be lost at this late stage of the session.

Mr. WALSH. In response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado, I am obliged to say that the bill as drawn is exceedingly obscure, and I feel it might cause considerable doubt as to its proper construction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, before the words "mine safety stations," strike out "15" and insert "7," and on page 2, line 1, strike out "including" and insert "in addition to," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to establish and maintain in the several important mining regions of the United States and the Territory of Alaska, as Congress may appropriate for the necessary employees and other expenses, under the Bureau of Mines and in accordance with the provisions of the act establishing said bureau, 10 mining experiment stations and 7 mine safety stations, movable or stationary, in addition to those already established, the province and duty of which shall be to make investigations and disseminate information with a view to improving conditions in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries, safeguarding life among employees, preventing unnecessary waste of resources, and otherwise contributing to the advancement of these industries: Provided, That not more than three mining experiment stations and mine safety stations hereinabove authorized shall be established in any one fiscal year under the appropriations made therefor.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept lands, buildings, or other contributions from the several States offering to cooperate in carrying out the purposes of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator from Montana how much money this contemplates? It contemplates an appropriation, I know.

Mr. WALSH. It makes no appropriation.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand; but has the Senator any estimate as to the cost to the Government?

Mr. WALSH. It contemplates the establishment of seven mine safety stations. Mine safety stations are simply the cars for the purpose of carrying out rescue work. They are not expensive. They would not cost exceeding $10,000 apiece, and probably not more than $7,500.

Mr. OVERMAN. How many stations are there in all?

Mr. WALSH. There is contemplated the establishment eventually of 10 mining experiment stations to conduct the same kind of educational work in mining that is now conducted by the experiment stations for the business of agriculture. It contemplates the expenditure eventually of a sum for the maintenance of mining experiment stations.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WALSH. I move that Senate bill 5588, of like title, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

SURPLUS UNALLOTTED LANDS IN BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 5484) modifying and amending the act providing for the disposal of the surplus unallotted lands within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont., was announced as next in order.

Mr. LANE. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made.

Mr. WALSH. I trust the Senator from Oregon will not insist on that objection. I will say in explanation that perhaps the Senator himself does not entirely recall the act of 1907. The act of 1907, passed now eight years ago, provided for the opening of the entire Blackfeet Indian Reservation. It has never been opened. This bill proposes to provide for the opening of only a very small portion of the eastern end of that reservation. With some amendments that are desired by the Interior Department, the passage of the bill is recommended by the Indian Bureau; it is also recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

A board was created by act of Congress not a year ago to go out there and study conditions upon the reservation. They have returned a report here, in which they recommend, in the interest of the Indians, the passage of this bill. I read from page 20 of their report, as follows:

We earnestly urge the passage of Senate bill 5484 as introduced by Senator T. J. WALSH, of Montana, or a similar bill which will amend the act of March 1, 1907, which originally provided for the opening of the surplus lands of the Blackfeet Reservation to settlement.

And, Mr. President, in their conclusions and recommendations they say, on page 38 of this report, going back to the question:

4. As we believe Senate bill 5484, regarding the opening of a portion of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, as introduced by Senator WALSH, of Montana, to be for the best interest of both entrymen and Indians, we recommend passage of same.

Mr. President, in view of this condition of affairs, in view of the desire on the part of both the white people and the Indians, as their views are expressed here by the representatives of the State of Montana, I trust the Senator from Oregon will not stand in the way of the enactment of this very necessary legislation in the interest of the Blackfeet Indians, and that he will not set up his individual judgment, after a visit of four days to the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, against the judgment of the Indian Department, against the judgment of the board that was sent out for the purpose of investigating this very matter, and against the judgment of the Senators from the State of Montana.

I know how earnestly the Senator desires to protect the best interests of the Indians; but I submit to him that it is hardly fair for him to come to our State and, in addition to taking care of the large and important affairs of the great State of Oregon, which he represents, to come into our State and endeavor to regulate our affairs and to object here upon the floor of this Senate to legislation which is thus recommended by every department of the Government, recommended by the Senators from Montana, and desired by its people. I do not think the Senator from Oregon ought to desire to put himself in that attitude, and I appeal to him to let us alone.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I am very sorry that my objection to this bill does not meet with the full and entire approval of the distinguished Senator from Montana; but, as it happened, I was upon the Blackfeet Reservation making an investigation as a member of the joint commission looking into their general welfare. The Indians held a council—Indians, many of whom were hungry and cold and destitute—and they voted against this proposition. They asked that this bill be not allowed to pass. With the exception of 8 votes out of about 300 present, about that number of Indians were against the bill, contending that their interests are not properly conserved; and I shall insist on my objection to the bill for that reason and in their behalf.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I make the point of order that nothing can be considered under the existing order except by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 8428) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, limiting the amount of campaign expenses, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to that bill, if it is to be considered to-night; but I have not the amendment at hand, and I will ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 2321) to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the States in goods, wares, and merchandise wholly or in part manufactured, mined, or produced by convict labor or in any prison or reformatory, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 180) to determine the rights of the State of Nebraska and its citizens to the beneficial use of waters stored in the North Platte River by the Pathfinder Dam was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

DRENZY A. JONES AND JOHN G. HOPPER.

The bill (H. R. 2703) for the relief of Drenzy A. Jones and John G. Hopper, joint contractors, for surveying Yosemite Park boundary, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that there be paid to Drenzy A. Jones and John G. Hopper, joint contractors, $2,649.48, for the survey and resurveys of the Yosemite Park boundary under contract 184, California, the boundaries of the park having been changed, rendering the survey unnecessary, which sum shall be accepted as full settlement of all claims against the United States growing out of the contract or surveys or on account of the arrest of the said persons or either of them by any officials of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEDAWAKANTON AND WAHPAKOOTA (SANTEE) SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to House bill 11246, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ASHURST, Mr. MYERS, and Mr. CLAPP as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3000) for the relief of Ten Eyck De Witt Veeder, commodore on the retired list of the United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN in the chair). That bill will go over.

The bill (S. 6072) for the relief of John Henry Gibbons, captain on the retired list of the United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill will go over.

MINE-SAFETY STATIONS.

Mr. WALSH. Recurring to House bill 15869, for the establishment and maintenance of mining experiment and mine safety stations, and so forth, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the bill, and request a conference with the other House and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. PITTMAN, and Mr. FALL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CAPT. FRANK KINSEY HILL.

The bill (S. 6138) for the relief of Frank Kinsey Hill, captain on the retired list of the United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] has asked that the vote by which that bill passed the Senate be reconsidered, and I am rather of the opinion that he objects to the passage of the bill. Does the Senator's colleague know about that? The bill passed the Senate, and the Senator's colleague asked that the vote whereby it passed be reconsidered, and it was reconsidered and placed upon the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Louisiana entered a motion to reconsider.

Mr. RANSDELL. What was the question which the Senator from Utah asked me?

Mr. SMOOT. I desired to know whether the Senator's colleague was opposed to the passage of the bill last called on the calendar?

Mr. OVERMAN. I know the Senator is.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not at all familiar with it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the Senator from Louisiana is opposed to the bill. It was passed when he was out of the Chamber, and he came back and entered a motion to reconsider.

Mr. RANSDELL. Let the bill go over.

Mr. WARREN. There are several in the same position, and all the others have gone over.

REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS OF LAND OFFICES IN KANSAS.

The bill (S. 6392) for the relief of registers and receivers of United States land offices in the State of Kansas was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, on page 1, line 9, after the name "Kansas," strike out "and that any and all registers and receivers of the United States land offices who performed services in the location of military bounty-land warrants"; on page 2, line 6, after the word "therewith," to strike out "or for locating military bounty-land warrants"; and in line 9, after the word "merits," to strike out "and shall allow the complainants interest at 6 per cent per annum from date of service upon any amount found due them, or either of them, by the court," so as to read:

That any one or more of the registers and receivers of the United States land offices in the State of Kansas upon whom was imposed the responsibility of making sale and disposition of the Delaware Indian trust lands, the Iowa Indian trust lands, and the Indian trust lands of the United Tribe of the Wea, etc., Indians, all in the then Territory of Kansas and thereafter State of Kansas, their administrators, executors, or representatives, may bring suit in the Court of Claims or any United States Federal court against the United States, or the said tribes of Indians, or both, to determine the claim of the plaintiff or plaintiffs for commission, compensation, or fees for the sale of said lands, or any service or duty connected therewith. And the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said cause and to render judgment thereon on the merits, and the Attorney General shall appear on behalf of the United States and said tribes, and either party feeling aggrieved at the decisions of the court may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Does that allow 6 per cent interest on a claim against the Government?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That provision is stricken from the bill by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 6484) to provide for the nonmineral entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing coal, phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals in Alaska, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN M. GRAY.

The bill (H. R. 9270) for the relief of John M. Gray was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, John M. Gray, private of Company K, Eighty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of that company and regiment on the 9th of December, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH P. LEITER.

The bill (H. R. 10719) for the relief of Joseph P. Leiter was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. That bill has been reported adversely, and I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 646) providing for the labeling and tagging of all fabrics and articles of clothing intended for sale which enter into interstate commerce, and providing penalties for misbranding, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

NEW ORLEANS, BATON ROUGE & VICKSBURG RAILROAD GRANT.

The bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of settlers within the limits of the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection for just a moment, so that a very brief statement may be made. May I ask the Senator to withdraw his objection for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] also objects to that bill. I see that Senator is now in the Chamber.

Mr. KENYON. I will say, Mr. President, that I also have objection to the bill.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask that the objection may be withdrawn for just a moment so that a very brief statement may be made in regard to the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this bill, with the insertion of a single word, meets the approval of both parties to a long-drawn-out litigation in the State of Louisiana. All parties appeared before the Senate committee, full hearings were had before a subcommittee, and, as I have said, the parties have agreed. I ask to insert in the RECORD a telegram from Col. R. P. Hunter and F. G. Hudson, jr., representing both parties to the litigation in Louisiana, and those who appeared for and against the bill in the Senate committee. I sincerely hope that the Senator from Massachusetts may be induced to withdraw his opposition in view of the fact that the parties have agreed, and that the enactment of this measure will settle a very prolonged controversy in the State of Louisiana. If it is not now passed in this form, it will cause a continuance of a controversy that all of us desire to get rid of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegram referred to by the Senator from Arkansas will be printed in the RECORD.

The telegram referred to is as follows:

ALEXANDRIA, LA., January 25, 1915.

Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Have had conference to-day, and we agree that the word continuously inserted in the New Orleans-Pacific settlers' bill will do substantial justice to all worthy settlers, and with this amendment the parties we represent will withdraw all opposition to present bill and urge its passage by unanimous consent present session of Congress.

R. P. HUNTER,
F. G. HUDSON, Jr.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I heartily concur in what has been said by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], chairman of the subcommittee which had charge of this measure. It is a matter of great interest to the people of my State. A controversy has been pending for years, and this is certainly a fair adjustment and settlement of it. I hope that this bill may be allowed to pass.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] was a member of the subcommittee and knows how fair the measure is.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word with reference to this bill. As a member of the subcommittee I hope that the bill will be permitted to pass. I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts particularly, and to other Senators who may have objection, that it was first supposed the bill affected nine or ten thousand claims, but the committee found that the bill as amended would not affect over 400 claims. The matter has been very much simplified by the amendment of the committee. The bill now simply protects the rights of those settlers who were in occupancy of the land at the time of the filing of the railroad map of location and their heirs and assigns.

The telegram referred to by the Senator from Arkansas, I think, refers to an amendment covering a point about which there had been some question. The amendment to be proposed provides that the possession of any claimant, his heirs or assigns, shall have been continuous up to the date of the passage of the act. I hope that for the purpose of ending long-drawn-out litigation and trouble this bill will be allowed to pass.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the change suggested in the bill will be objected by the Senator from New York. I have no information which would guide me in that matter, but I can not withdraw my objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me for an inquiry?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator not consent to the present consideration of the bill, with the understanding that if the bill passes and he desires so to do, he may enter a motion to reconsider, and if the measure is objectionable to the Senator from New York to-morrow morning, I shall not object to a reconsideration if the Senator from New York insists upon it after he has become familiar with the real status of the matter.

I ask, Mr. President, leave to insert in the RECORD, in addition to the telegram to which I have referred, the report on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The report is as follows:

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of settlers within the limits of the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co., having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report it back to the Senate with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to immediately take up and resume the adjustment and adjudication of all rights, privileges, and relinquishments granted, conveyed, and confirmed to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Co., as the assignee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co., by the act of Congress approved February 8, 1887, and entitled 'An act to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co., to confirm title to certain lands, and for other purposes,' and subject to all the provisions and conditions therein contained, for the protection of actual settlers on said lands at the date of the definite location of said road, their heirs or assigns, and remaining in the possession of said settlers, their heirs or assigns, at the date of this act: Provided, That the claims of such settlers, their heirs or assigns, shall be asserted within a period of one year from the passage of this act, and if not asserted within that time shall be forever barred."

H. R. 5890, which is the basis of the legislation reported by this committee, was considered in the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives on January 26 and 27. Representatives of the railroad company, its grantees, and of the settlers appeared before the committee and made detailed statements of facts and arguments concerning the subject. A favorable report on the bill was made by that committee. However, representatives of the General Land Office submitted for the consideration of the committee two drafts of a substitute bill, the committee reporting substantially draft No. 1, as follows:

DRAFT No. 1.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to immediately take up and resume the adjustment and adjudication of all rights and privileges relinquished, granted, conveyed, and confirmed to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Co., as the assignee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co., by the act of Congress approved February 8, 1887, and entitled 'An act to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co., to confirm title to certain lands, and for other purposes,' subject to all the provisions and conditions therein contained for the protection of actual settlers, their heirs and assigns.

"2. On the application of persons to make entry in accordance with the provisions of the act aforesaid, the rights only of those who were actual settlers at the date of definite location, their heirs, or other persons to whom they may have assigned their possessory rights, prior to December 1, 1913, will be given consideration as against the outstanding patent or patents to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Co.

"3. In determining rights asserted by and on behalf of actual settlers, or their assigns, proof showing actual settlement at the date of definite location, and the existence of such settlement and occupancy at the present time, shall be deemed prima facie evidence of the continuity of the settlement claim.

"4. All claims adverse to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Co., or its successors in interest, which shall not be asserted within the period of two years from the passage of this act shall be deemed and considered forever barred."

The Senate Committee on Public Lands appointed a subcommittee composed of Senators Robinson, Ransdell, and Sterling to consider the bill. The subcommittee had prolonged hearings on June 12 and 13. Some parties in interest asked a continuance of the hearings in order that additional proof might be submitted and this was granted. Subsequently the hearings were resumed and concluded, practically four additional days being consumed in the hearing of statements and in the consideration of documents and arguments by the various parties interested in the legislation.

The subcommittee of this committee recommended as a substitute for the bill passed by the House substantially draft No. 2, prepared by the Land Office, with certain amendments designed to make it more specific and with an amendment limiting the period within which claims may be asserted to within one year of the date of the passage of the act.

ACT OF CONGRESS OF MARCH 3, 1871.

The act of Congress of March 3, 1871, granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Co. and its successors certain lands situated in the State of Texas. Section 9 of that act contained the following provision, that—

"For the purpose of aiding in the construction of its railroad and telegraph line, every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of 20 alternate sections per mile, on each side of said railroad line, as such line may be adopted by said company through the Territories of the United States, * * * where the same shall not have been sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of by the United States, and to which a preemption or homestead claim may not have attached at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed." * * *

The department has decided that dates of definite location are specifically determined by the act of February 8, 1887, to wit, October 22, 1881, for that portion of the road from a point in township 2 north, range 1 east, to a point in township 4 north, range 2 west, and from Shreveport to a point in township 10 north, range 12 west, and October 17, 1882, for the balance of the road.

Much confusion and many controversies having arisen as to the rights of actual settlers within the exterior limits of this grant, the act of February 8, 1887, was passed. Section 2 of said act, after providing that the title granted by the act of March 3, 1871, to the Texas Pacific Railroad Co. (not declared forfeited), is relinquished and confirmed to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Co. as the assignee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co. under certain conditions, containing the following proviso:

"Provided, That all such lands occupied by actual settlers at the date of the definite location of said road and still remaining in their possession or in possession of their heirs or assigns shall be held and deemed excepted from said grant and shall be subject to entry under the public-land laws of the United States."

As to lands which had already been patented under the act of 1871 the confirmatory act of February 8, 1887, contained the following provision:

"That the patents for the lands conveyed herein that have already been issued to said company be, and the same are hereby, confirmed; but the Secretary of the Interior is hereby fully authorized and instructed to apply the provision of the second, third, fourth, and fifth sections of this act to any of said lands that have been so patented and to protect any and all settlers on said lands in all their rights under the said sections of this act."

ACT OF MARCH 3, 1887.

March 3, 1887, Congress passed an act providing for the adjustment of land grants to railroads. Section 2 of that act provided that whenever it shall appear upon the completion of such adjustment, or sooner, that lands had been erroneously certified or patented by the United States to any railroad company, that the Secretary of the Interior shall demand from said company a relinquishment or reconveyance to the United States, and if such company shall fail to so reconvey within 90 days after the demand it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to commence and prosecute in the proper courts the necessary proceedings to cancel all patents and certifications erroneously issued or made.

Provision was also made whereby good-faith purchasers of land erroneously patented to the railroad company should obtain title from the United States and the railroad company should reimburse the Government.

ACT OF MARCH 2, 1896.

The act of March 2, 1896, relied on largely by the opponents of this legislation, is a general act, contains no repealing clause, and in the opinion of your committee does not apply to settlers whose rights are saved by the special acts hereinabove referred to.

The proposed legislation is not without serious complications and presents difficulties which have been the subject of prolonged consideration by your subcommittee hereinbefore referred to. From a consideration of the whole case, however, we are of the opinion that Congress from the beginning has expressed and manifested its purpose to save and reserve the rights of all persons actually on any of these lands at the time of the definite location of the road. Even patents issued under these acts have referred to the claims and rights of actual settlers in such a way, in our opinion, as to put purchasers on notice and to impose upon them some obligation to make inquiry. Moreover, the deeds executed by the claimants under the grant are all quitclaim or special warranty deeds wherein the grantor simply warrants the title as against himself or those claiming through or under him. Taking the language of these deeds in conjunction with the language of the grants hereinabove referred to, we are of the opinion that these constituted notice to the purchasers of the prior rights of actual settlers, their heirs and assigns, occupying the lands in good faith.

The Land Office, while regarding the matter as doubtful, applied the act of 1896 so as to shut out a considerable number of cases, which under the adjustment act of 1887 appears to your committee to be meritorious. The Land Department has changed its views, however, regarding this act, and thinks a mistake was made in giving it the application. An erroneous idea prevails in some quarters as to the effect of this legislation and the number of cases which will arise under it. When agitation of the matter began in Louisiana it was thought that all of these railroad lands would be thrown open to settlement, and a large number of filings were made and claims asserted which did not have any foundation. The misapprehension which for a time existed concerning the matter has disappeared. The actual number of cases which will be presented to the Land Office can not be definitely determined by your committee, but we are of the opinion that the same will not exceed 400. In all probability the cases found meritorious by the department will be far less than that number.

The committee is of the opinion that relief should be granted in these meritorious cases and that it should take the form suggested and most heartily approved by the department.

We therefore recommend the adoption of draft No. 2, with the amendments indicated. It is quite desirable from every standpoint that this legislation should be speedily disposed of. The subject matter has formed the basis of prolonged complications, protracted litigation, and serious agitation extending over a period of many years. It is not thought that injustice can result to anyone by the passage of this legislation in view of the whole history of the case and the course which the matter has heretofore taken, both in Congress and in the courts.

Mr. PENROSE. What the Senator from Arkansas suggests can be done by unanimous consent, and it seems to me to be a reasonable request.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, it may be a reasonable request, but I can not tell what the legislative situation may be to-morrow. I regret exceedingly that I have not the authority to consent to the suggestion, and my objection must remain.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CREW OF THE NORWEGIAN SHIP "INGRID."

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 198) providing an appropriation to indemnify Trygve Andersen, Sigurd Nilsen, and Arthur Rasmussen, of the crew of the Norwegian ship Ingrid, for losses caused by their arrest and detention in Hudson County, N. J., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas on the 1st day of February, 1911, an explosion of dynamite took place in a railway car in Jersey City, N. J., causing damage to the Norwegian ship Ingrid, which was lying in the harbor near which the explosion occurred, and out of which occurrence arose an investigation and proceeding under the criminal laws of the State of New Jersey; and

Whereas Trygve Andersen, Sigurd Nilsen, and Arthur Rasmussen, of the crew of said ship, were arrested, confined, and detained in the jail of Hudson County, N. J., on the ground that it was deemed probable that they might be able to give material testimony in such proceeding; and

Whereas said parties, after several weeks, were released from said jail by the judgment of a United States court in a habeas corpus proceeding instituted for that purpose; and

Whereas by reason of said confinement and detention in jail and their effort to secure release therefrom, said parties, without fault of their own, suffered certain damages and incurred certain expenses; and

Whereas, without admitting legal liability, either under treaty or otherwise, for losses growing out of said occurrences, the United States recognizes the peculiar circumstances of hardship to said parties in said matter: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $2,200 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum is hereby directed to be paid to the Government of Norway for the use of Trygve Andersen, Sigurd Nilsen, and Arthur Rasmussen, their heirs or legal representatives, because of losses sustained by reason of their removal from the Norwegian ship Ingrid, in the month of February, 1911, and their subsequent arrest, confinement, and detention in the jail of Hudson County, State of New Jersey, as witnesses in certain proceedings in the courts of said State.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

JAMES KENNEDY.

The bill (S. 3367) for the relief of James Kennedy was announced as next in order.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I move that action on Senate bill 3367 and on the bill (S. 155) for the relief of Joseph B. Riley, alias Thomas Kiesy, be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I object to having Senate bill 155 go over. I can not consent to that without controversy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Calendar No. 722, being Senate bill 3367, is before the Senate at this time.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I move that action on Calendar No. 722, Senate bill 3367, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas object to that action being taken on Senate bill 3367?

Mr. BRISTOW. I object to Calendar No. 723, Senate bill 155, being acted on adversely; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas object to the action proposed by the Senator from Tennessee on Senate bill 3367?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not care anything about that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to indefinitely postpone Senate bill 3367.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 155) for the relief of Joseph B. Riley, alias Thomas Kiesy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FRANCIS TOMLINSON.

The bill (H. R. 3586) for the relief of Francis Tomlinson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that in the administration of the pension laws Francis Tomlinson, late of Troop L, First Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been in the military service of the United States from the 12th day of October, 1861, until the 29th day of December, 1865, and honorably discharged from such service on December 29, 1865, and that he shall not receive any back pay, pension, or allowances by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD WHITESIDE.

The bill (H. R. 10271) for the relief of Edward Whiteside was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Edward Whiteside, who was a musician in Company C, Fifth New York Infantry Volunteers, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a musician of said company and regiment on or about the 14th day of May, 1863, and that no back pay, bounty, pension, or allowance shall be allowed by reason of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILES A. HUGHES.

The bill (H. R. 14711) for the relief of Miles A. Hughes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that in the administration of the pension laws Miles A. Hughes shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, on the 27th day of June, 1864, and that no back pension, back pay, or back allowances shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES ANDERSON.

The bill (S. 5053) to correct the military record of James Anderson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that in the administration of the pension laws James Anderson, who was a private in Company A, Cass County Regiment, Missouri Home Guards; Company A, Second Battalion, Missouri State Militia Cavalry; and Company F, Fourteenth Regiment, Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of the last-mentioned company and regiment on the 19th day of December, 1864, and that no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of James Anderson."

ALLEGED USE OF MEXICAN FUNDS.

The resolution (S. Res. 487) to investigate the newspaper report that $75,000 was paid to two United States Senators by Carranza for influence in the withdrawal of the United States troops from Vera Cruz was announced as next in order.

Mr. PENROSE and Mr. SMOOT. Let that resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

BARK "SIMLA."

The bill (S. 6028) to authorize the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the rebuilt bark Simla to be registered as a vessel of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the bark Simla, rebuilt at San Francisco, Cal., from the wreck of the sailing vessel Simla, burned in the harbor at Acapulco, Mexico, and abandoned by her owners as a total wreck, to be registered as a vessel of the United States whenever it shall be shown to the Commissioner of Navigation that the cost of rebuilding the vessel in the United States amounted to three times the actual cost of the wreck and that the vessel is wholly owned by citizens of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL REVENUE CUTTERS.

The bill (S. 6829) to provide for the construction of two revenue cutters was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to construct one steam revenue cutter for service in the waters of California, at a cost not to exceed $350,000, and one steam revenue cutter for service as anchorage patrol boat in New York Harbor, at a cost not to exceed $110,000, the vessel to be specially constructed for ice breaking.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION, TAWAS, MICH.

The bill (S. 6780) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to transfer a portion of the lighthouse reservation, Tawas, Mich., to the Secretary of the Treasury, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to transfer to the Secretary of the Treasury, for the use of the Life-Saving Service, lot No. 1, section 34, township 22 north, range 8 east, Iosco County, Mich., which is a portion of the lighthouse reservation at Tawas, Mich., and which is no longer needed in connection with the work of the Lighthouse Service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMBOAT-INSPECTION SERVICE.

The bill (H. R. 20282) to provide for the appointment of 11 supervising inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, in lieu of 10, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida whether this matter was not taken care of in the sundry civil appropriation bill which passed the Senate a few days ago?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; it was not.

Mr. SMOOT. Is this the measure in which the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] was interested?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; this is not the measure.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does not this bill provide for additional inspectors at New York?

Mr. FLETCHER. This is a House bill. It takes the place on the calendar of a Senate bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that, but we have provided for seven inspectors at New York and inspectors at other places.

Mr. SMOOT. In the sundry civil appropriation bill we provided for some 10 or 11 inspectors. If I remember correctly, there was 1 for Florida, 1 for Louisiana, 7 for New York, 1 for Michigan, and some at other places, and they were provided for in the sundry civil appropriation bill. This adds 1 to the 10, in lieu of the 10 already provided for. I can not, of course, say whether this was included in that or not, but I know that the Committee on Appropriations provided for all the steamboat inspectors that were asked for by the department.

Mr. FLETCHER. What bill was it in?

Mr. OVERMAN. The sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not advised of the fact that it covers these.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, yes; I think it does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERMAN. I object.

Mr. FLETCHER. It provides, if the Senator will allow me, for 11 supervising inspectors instead of 10.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have taken care of it in the sundry civil appropriation bill, I think, as recommended by the Secretary.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill may be passed over for the present, then. I will look up the matter, but I was not advised that it had been covered.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over temporarily, so that the Senator can look it up.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; I will look up the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Also the next bill, for the assistant inspectors. Let that bill go over, and the Senator can look up that matter at the same time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know that both of these bills have been insisted upon by the department.

Mr. SMOOT. I am only saying to the Senator that I do know they were asked for by the department, and I know that we provided for a number of steamboat inspectors on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will look up the matter.

The bill (H. R. 20281) to provide for the appointment of certain assistant inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, at ports where they are actually performing duty, but to which they are at present detailed, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

LICENSED OFFICERS IN UNITED STATES MERCHANT MARINE.

The bill (H. R. 16392) to better regulate the serving of licensed officers in the merchant marine of the United States, and to promote safety at sea was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend sections 4448 and 4449 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to read as follows:

SEC. 4448. That all officers licensed under the provisions of this title shall assist the inspectors in their examination of any vessels to which such licensed officers belong and shall point out all defects and imperfections known to them in the hull, equipments, boilers, or machinery of such vessel, and shall also make known to the inspectors at the earliest opportunity all accidents or occurrences producing serious injury to the vessel, her equipments, boilers, or machinery, and in default thereof the license of any such officer so neglecting or refusing shall be suspended or revoked.

No inspector or supervising inspector receiving information from a licensed officer who is employed on any vessel as to defects in such vessel, or her equipments, boilers, or machinery, or that any provision of this title is being violated, shall impart the name of such licensed officer, or the source of his information, to any person other than his superiors in the Steamboat-Inspection Service. Any inspector or supervising inspector violating this provision shall be subject to dismissal from the service.

SEC. 4449. That if any licensed officer shall, to the hindrance of commerce, wrongfully or unreasonably refuse to perform his official duties after having signed articles or while employed on any vessel as authorized by the terms of his certificate of license, or if any pilot or engineer shall refuse to admit into the pilot house or engine room any person whom the master or owner of the vessel may desire to place there for the purpose of learning the profession, his license shall be revoked or suspended upon the same proceedings as are provided in other cases of revocation or suspension of such license.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 6856) to authorize the United States, acting through a shipping board, to subscribe to the capital stock of a corporation to be organized under the laws of the United States or of a State thereof or of the District of Columbia to purchase, construct, equip, maintain, and operate merchant vessels in the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that title has so familiar a sound that I ask that the bill may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 16053) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Let that bill go over.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

THE LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

The bill (S. 6919) to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask to substitute for that bill House bill 19746, which has come from the House and which covers the same subject. I ask to consider that instead of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 19746) to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment.

The SECRETARY. The committee amendment proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask leave to withdraw the committee amendment entirely, and have the bill passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator whether the committee has authorized that?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; the committee authorized it, and the department recommends it. I have a letter here from the department on the subject, asking that and urging it, and the committee desires to do it. I will ask to have the letter printed in the RECORD. The committee withdraws the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 26, 1915.

MY DEAR SENATOR: You will probably recall that on February 3, 1915, I wrote you stating that on January 27 H. R. 19746, "To authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes," was passed by the House of Representatives, and such passage reported to the Senate; that the bill as it passed the House met in every respect with the approval of the department, and that it was my earnest desire that it be passed by the Senate in such form and without any amendment or change. The bill was subsequently reported to the Senate with the following amendments:

"Sixteenth lighthouse district: Alaska lighthouse depot, purchase of site, construction, and equipment, $40,000.

"Seventeenth lighthouse district: Establishment and improvement of aids to navigation, Washington and Oregon, $35,000.

"Eighteenth lighthouse district: Goat Island lighthouse depot, California, repairs and improvements, $43,000.

"Anacapa Island: Establishment of light and fog signal station, $103,000."

While the work provided for in these amendments is considered by the Lighthouse Service as advisable, it is not considered anything like as necessary at the present time as the items included in the bill as it passed the House. As a matter of fact, in going over the work that might be considered necessary or advisable at this time, the same was divided into three groups, arranged in the order of necessity, the most important being in group 1, that which might be done but was not considered quite as important in group 2, and that which was advisable but not absolutely necessary at the present time in group 3. I find upon examination of this summary that the amendments made by the Senate are all items included in group 3. The work provided for in the items in the bill as passed by the House is absolutely necessary, and the department feels that the passage of the bill providing for such work should not be jeopardized by the addition of amendments which at this time are not so absolutely necessary. Should the bill pass the Senate as it passed the House the legislation would be assured. On the contrary, should it pass the Senate with the amendments added, it would mean that the bill would have to go to conference, which might ultimately result in the defeat of the entire measure.

I have talked this matter over with Secretary Redfield and am authorized by him to say that it is his earnest desire that the bill be passed by the Senate in the same form that it was passed by the House, and that if you can assist in bringing this result about it will be greatly appreciated by him. If there is any further information in regard to the matter that you care to have I will be glad to furnish it to you without delay.

Respectfully,

A. L. THURMAN, Acting Secretary.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. FLETCHER. I hope the Senator will not do that, because it will simply complicate it.

Mr. WEEKS. It is the additional section about which I spoke to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know; but it will have to go back to the House, and if that is done I am afraid we will never get the bill through. I have withdrawn all of the amendments that have been offered to the bill and reported by the committee in order to expedite its passage on the recommendation and advice of the department. It is very important to have it enacted into law.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, if the Senator will say that he thinks it impossible to get a conference report on this bill agreed to at this session of Congress, I will withdraw the amendment, but I think the amendment is so unobjectionable that a conference on it would not take three minutes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am advised, furthermore, by the department, if the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, that what his amendment provides for can be covered under the existing law; it can be taken care of. The proposition which is mentioned in the Senator's amendment can be taken care of without any further legislation.

Mr. WEEKS. Then I withdraw the amendment.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 6919 on the same subject will be indefinitely postponed.

LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY.

The bill (H. R. 4545) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 11, after the word "amendment," to insert a comma and the words "if preserved," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after section 274 thereof three new sections, to be numbered, respectively, 274a, 274b, and 274c, reading as follows:

"SEC. 274a. That in case any of said courts shall find that a suit at law should have been brought in equity or a suit in equity should have been brought at law, the court shall order any amendments to the pleadings which may be necessary to conform them to the proper practice. Any party to the suit shall have the right, at any stage of the cause, to amend his pleadings so as to obviate the objection that his suit was not brought on the right side of the court. The cause shall proceed and be determined upon such amended pleadings. All testimony taken before such amendment, if preserved, shall stand as testimony in the cause with like effect as if the pleadings had been originally in the amended form.

"SEC. 274b. That in all actions at law equitable defenses may be interposed by answer, plea, or replication without the necessity of filing a bill on the equity side of the court. The defendant shall have the same rights in such case as if he had filed a bill embodying the defense of seeking the relief prayed for in such answer or plea. Equitable relief respecting the subject matter of the suit may thus be obtained by answer or plea. In case affirmative relief is prayed in such answer or plea, the plaintiff shall file a replication. Review of the judgment or decree entered in such case shall be regulated by rule of court. Whether such review be sought by writ of error or by appeal the appellate court shall have full power to render such judgment upon the records as law and justice shall require.

"SEC. 274c. That where, in any suit brought in or removed from any State court to any district of the United States, the jurisdiction of the district court is based upon the diverse citizenship of the parties, and such diverse citizenship in fact existed at the time the suit was brought or removed, though defectively alleged, either party may amend at any stage of the proceedings and in the appellate court upon such terms as the court may impose, so as to show on the record such diverse citizenship and jurisdiction, and thereupon such suit shall be proceeded with the same as though the diverse citizenship had been fully and correctly pleaded at the inception of the suit, or, if it be a removed case, in the petition for removal."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 12750) relating to procedure in United States courts was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, it seems to me that these bills changing the procedure of the courts are too important to snap off in this way, and I object.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It is quite impossible to hear what the Senator from South Dakota says.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota objects to the consideration of Order of Business No. 745.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator that it seems to me that these bills regulating the judicial procedure of the courts and amending the judicial code are all so important that we ought not to pass them here at lightning speed.

Mr. O'GORMAN. If the Senator will bear with me a moment, I think he may not deem it necessary to interpose that objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is only five minutes left.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I insist on order in the Chamber.

Mr. O'GORMAN. This measure had the careful consideration of the Judiciary Committee for several months, and the conclusion embodied in this bill was the unanimous judgment, according to my recollection, of every member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 93) to regulate the judicial procedure of the courts of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 95) to amend chapter 11 of the Judicial Code was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

The bill (S. 1762) relating to procedure in United States courts was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The bill (H. R. 15638) proposing an amendment to the Federal reserve act relative to acceptances, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. In hastily reading this bill, I really can not tell just what changes are proposed.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it is impossible to hear on this side of the Chamber what the Senator from Utah is saying.

Mr. SMOOT. It is impossible to hear in the Chamber because there is so much confusion.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; that is true. I ask for order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, a moment ago the Senator from Utah made reference to Orders of Business 734 and 735. I am just advised by Gen. Uhler that the inspectors taken care of by the appropriation bill are not those covered by the first of these bills, and also that the matter covered by Order of Business 735 was not taken care of. I should like to have those bills passed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the consideration of Order of Business 749.

Mr. FLETCHER. This is the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; Order of Business 749 is the regular order for the present. As soon as we finish that the other matter can be taken up.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is a most important bill, and I was saying to the Senator when I was interrupted that from hastily reading the bill I can not tell what change it proposes to make in the law. I notice that the report gives no information whatever, and I think it is of enough importance that it should go over for to-night.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the matter is very simple. The words "except by authority of the Federal Reserve Board, under such general regulations as such board may prescribe," in lines 2 to 4 of page 2, are inserted in the Federal reserve act. Otherwise the language is the same, and the same language recurs in lines 18 to 20, inserting the words "except by authority of the Federal Reserve Board, under such general regulations as said board may prescribe," and a committee amendment following, "but such regulations shall apply to all banks alike, regardless of the amount of capital stock." Otherwise the Federal reserve act is left without change.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will state——

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Massachusetts is quite familiar with this matter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from Utah that the only addition is giving, under certain circumstances, the Federal Reserve Board the authority to extend the rules to some extent.

Mr. SMOOT. To what extent?

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will turn to the bill at line 17, page 2, he will find this language:

"Except by authority of the Federal Reserve Board, under such general regulations as said board may prescribe," but such regulations shall apply to all banks alike regardless of the amount of capital stock.

That is repeated above in relation to the amount that notes can be discounted. The board is very anxious that this should be gotten through. They claim to be hampered somewhat in the consideration of the Federal Reserve Board unless it is passed.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no limitation in the words "except by authority of the Federal Reserve Board, under such regulations as said board may prescribe." That may apply to a change of the Federal reserve act.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will not object to the passage of this bill. It simply gives authority to the Federal Reserve Board to increase the acceptance of bills on imports and exports. We are doing a very large foreign business just now and for the first time have developed a direct business with South America. There is a great deal of direct banking business with the Argentine at this time. Some banks are pretty nearly to their limit——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 11 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] if he will not temporarily lay that bill aside and allow us to proceed with the calendar until we conclude it to-night. I wish to say to the Senator, in justification of this request, that the first 10 pages of the calendar are bills that have been taken up every time a unanimous-consent agreement has been arrived at, and they have been objected to and objected to, and instead of being put over under Rule IX they still remain under Rule VIII. So it took an hour and a half of the time to pass over those bills to which objections have been made so often in the past. Now, we have reached a point of the calendar where the bills are bills that have not been reached on the calendar since they have been reported to the Senate, and many of them are bills to which there is no objection. It seems to me we ought to spend the balance of the evening in considering the calendar. So I ask the Senator from Arizona if he will not allow the appropriation bill to be laid aside until we conclude the consideration of the calendar.

Mr. ASHURST. May I not make this suggestion for the consideration of Senators, that the calendar may proceed under Rule VIII until 12 o'clock, at which time we shall proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill for two hours.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object to that, Mr. President.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that without fixing any terms beyond 12 o'clock we simply have an understanding now that we will go on with the calendar until 12 o'clock.

Mr. KERN. We can not make progress with the Indian appropriation bill in that way. There is no telling how long it will take. We have given now three hours to the calendar, and I would rather agree to another session for the consideration of bills on the calendar under Rule VIII and then give an hour and a half to that purpose. I should like to see the Indian appropriation bill out of the way. We do not want an extra session.

Mr. SMOOT. No; nobody wants an extra session. I will say to the Senator there are two items in the appropriation bill that can not be considered to-night. It has been agreed that they shall go over until to-morrow. They are the two items which will cause what discussion there is in the bill, at least more than all the balance. It seems to me if we could go through with the calendar, now that we are on it and while we are all interested in it to-night, that would be the best course to pursue.

Mr. KERN. The Indian appropriation bill has taken twice as long as we anticipated. There seems to be no disposition to economize time. I see no way except to go on and finish it, and then there will be time to take up the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any question but that the Indian appropriation bill will be put through.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will let me make a suggestion, let us go on with the calendar for an hour and dispose of a good many of the small bills upon it.

Mr. KERN. I am willing to agree to go on with the calendar for an hour provided there is a further agreement that we give two hours to the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not think we will have any trouble about going on with the appropriation bill when we get to it. We can dispose of a great many of these little bills in an hour's time.

Mr. KERN. It will be agreeable to the chairman of the committee, I know, to proceed with the appropriation bill, and there will be a great deal better feeling after we get it out of the way. We could proceed with the calendar for an hour with the agreement that we will then take up the Indian appropriation bill and proceed with it for two hours.

Mr. WARREN. As a matter of fact, we have had less than an hour and a half on the calendar, because it was a little after half past nine before we took it up.

Mr. KERN. I am willing to make that agreement, and I think it is a very liberal proposition; and if we have time later in the session, I am willing to go to the calendar. I am interested in the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I am not particularly interested, but——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana make that request?

Mr. KERN. I ask unanimous consent that we proceed with the calendar until 12 o'clock, and that then we proceed with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill until 2 o'clock, at which time we shall take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator make it 1 o'clock?

Mr. KERN. No.

Mr. SMOOT. Then we may as well go on with the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. PENROSE. Regular order.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the Indian appropriation bill be proceeded with.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to present a report from the Committee on Commerce. I ask consent to report from the Committee on Commerce an amendment to the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent to present a report from the Committee on Commerce. Is there objection?

Mr. PENROSE. What is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. From the Committee on Commerce, an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill (H. R. 20189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire object to receiving the report?

Mr. GALLINGER. I object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire objects.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator object to receiving the report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire objects to receiving the report.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a proposed amendment to the river and harbor bill. Does the Senator understand that?

Mr. GALLINGER. When the river and harbor bill comes up the amendment can be offered.

Mr. FLETCHER. I simply want to have it printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not object to printing it. I did not fully understand the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be received and printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside long enough to finish the matter on which the Senate was proceeding when the hour of 11 o'clock arrived.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. PENROSE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. WEEKS. I ask unanimous consent that we may continue the calendar until 12 o'clock and then take up the Indian appropriation bill and continue its consideration until 1 o'clock, and at that time we take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. KERN (to Mr. WEEKS). Say 1.30 o'clock.

Mr. WEEKS. Well, I will say 1.30 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills upon the calendar until midnight and that the Senate then proceed with the Indian appropriation bill until 1.30 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask that that be made 1 o'clock.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator from Indiana will not consent to 1 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PENROSE. I wish to make an inquiry before the request is put.

Mr. JAMES. We can not hear the private conversation, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to make an inquiry. If this agreement is made and is ratified, when is it expected that the Senate will meet to-morrow morning?

Mr. KERN. At 11 o'clock.

Mr. PENROSE. Then, if it is a part of the unanimous-consent agreement that no other business shall be considered after 12 o'clock except the Indian appropriation bill, I shall not object; but I want to have that a distinct part of the unanimous-consent agreement, in justice to Senators who have to leave the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that that is the request.

Mr. PENROSE. No other report of a committee is to be made and no other supplemental business is to be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. And I want the Senator from Arizona to understand now that two amendments that he promised to allow to go over until to-morrow shall not be considered to-night.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator has reference to the Mississippi Choctaw amendment and the amendment referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. PENROSE. I wish to make another inquiry. I take it the unanimous-consent agreement also covers the proposition that there shall be no executive session to-night.

Mr. KERN. It does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. KERN. Nothing is to be considered after 12 o'clock but the Indian appropriation bill. That is the understanding.

Mr. FLETCHER. We want to pass the shipping bill to-night. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. I assure the Senator that that will not be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none. The Senate will continue the consideration of House bill 15038, proposing an amendment to the Federal reserve act.

AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15038) proposing an amendment to the Federal reserve act relative to acceptances, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRISTOW. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, let us have order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is impossible to transact business in the Senate, and Senators will please be in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I wish to inquire if this amendment to the Federal reserve act does not permit banks not only to very greatly increase the amount of money they can use in acceptances, foreign and also domestic, but is it not a part of a plan which some of these theoretical financiers have of establishing in this country a system of acceptances instead of the normal business manner in which our business is now conducted?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the main feature in this part of the Federal reserve act is the adjustment of acceptances based on importations and for exportations of goods. Just now——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend until there is order.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. President, I object to the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish we could have order, so that I could explain this matter to the Senator from Kansas and to other Senators. It is impossible to be heard in the Chamber.

Mr. CATRON. I have made an objection, and I do not see any use of an explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. OWEN. I will ask the Senator from New Mexico to withhold his objection until I can explain what this measure is.

Mr. CATRON. There is no need to spend the time in discussing it. It is just as well to let it go over now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will kindly take their seats or retire into the cloakroom. No business will be transacted until Senators come to order.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, this act is merely repeating the language of the Federal reserve act, except the words giving authority to the Federal Reserve Board to enlarge the amount of acceptances which banks may permit.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now, Mr. President, let me inquire what limitation have you put on the Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. OWEN. There is no fixed limitation upon the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is the very reason why I object to the amendment. The Federal Reserve Board, in my opinion, has entirely too much power now, and to give them the unlimited authority to permit banks to invest in these acceptances, in my opinion, is not safe. It was controverted at the time as to whether or not they should be given this authority.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico will state his point of order.

Mr. CATRON. I made an objection to the bill and under the rule we can not consider the measure any longer and no argument can be had.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order raised by the Senator from New Mexico is sustained. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] asks to return to calendar Nos. 734 and 735.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall object to the consideration to-night, for this reason——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee, Mr. JAMES, and others. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the calendar will be announced.

ESTATE OF JAMES S. CLARK, DECEASED.

The bill (H. R. 13240) for the relief of the legal representatives of James S. Clark, deceased, was announced as the next bill on the calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to the legal representatives of James S. Clark, of Fayette County, Ky., the sum of $250, in full compensation for personal property taken and used and use and occupation of real estate, all belonging to said James S. Clark, by the Army of the United States during the War with Spain in the months of August, September, October, November, and December, 1898, in and about the establishment and maintenance of a military camp at Camp Hamilton, in said county and State.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VICTORIA COFFMAN.

The bill (H. R. 9734) for the relief of Victoria Coffman was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "of," to strike out "$1,200" and insert "$660," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Victoria Coffman, wife of Henry Clay Coffman, deceased, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $660, to compensate her for the death of her husband, Henry Clay Coffman, as the result of injuries received while acting in the course of his duties as janitor of the Government building at Parkersburg, W. Va.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

HEIRS OF THEODORE DEHON.

The bill (H. R. 10201) for the relief of the heirs of Theodore Dehon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the heirs of Theodore Dehon the sum of $500 for the seizure of 100 bushels of rice, under misinformation, by Capt. Armstrong, and used to feed freedmen in Colleton district, South Carolina, in November, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH B. HATCH.

The bill (H. R. 8811) to execute the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Sarah B. Hatch, widow of Davis W. Hatch, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Sarah B. Hatch, widow of Davis W. Hatch, of Bexar County, Tex., the sum of $3,000, being the amount found due for timber taken and used by United States troops in the winter of 1865 and 1866 and the spring of 1866, as set forth in the findings of fact filed by the Court of Claims on March 28, 1910, and printed as House Document No. 857, Sixty-first Congress, first session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLYDE ODUM.

The bill (H. R. 5966) for the relief of Clyde Odum was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Clyde Odum, of Punta Gorda, Fla., the sum of $400, the said sum to be in full payment of all claims and demands growing out of or that may result from injuries received by the said Clyde Odum while in the employ of the United States on the dredge Ajax in December, 1907: Provided, That no sum of money due or to become due to the said Clyde Odum under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable processes whatever, but shall inure to the benefit of the said Clyde Odum.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE & ST. PAUL RAILWAY CO.

The bill (H. R. 13) for payment to the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. the $4,583.67 improperly collected under the act of August 5, 1909, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., a corporation, the amount of the corporation tax, if any, which has been excessively or improperly collected for the year ending December 31, 1909, by the United States under the corporation tax act of August 5, 1909; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, is vested with full authority and power to determine the amount, if any, so excessively or improperly collected, notwithstanding the limitation contained in section 3228 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and for the purpose of carrying into effect this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,583.67, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the amount due such corporation for the excessive tax so collected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EPPS DANLEY.

The bill (H. R. 17110) to reimburse Epps Danley for property lost by him while light keeper at East Pascagoula River (Miss.) Light Station was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Epps Danley, of the city of Pascagoula, Jackson County, Miss., the sum of $331.70 for property losses sustained by him during a storm on September 27, 1906, while light keeper of the East Pascagoula River (Miss.) Lighthouse Station.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW J. LAWRENCE.

The bill (H. R. 2662) for the relief of Andrew J. Lawrence was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$2,000" and to insert "$900," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Andrew J. Lawrence, of San Jose, Cal., out of moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $900, for injuries sustained by him while employed as a lineman for construction of military telegraph line for the Signal Corps of the United States Army, between Valdez and Gulkana, Alaska, in the line of duty, on or about the 1st day of September, 1908.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM A. HOWARD.

The bill (H. R. 13830) for the relief of William A. Howard was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to William A. Howard $800 for personal injuries received while working in the quartermaster's department of the Army transport service as yeoman on the United States Army Transport Crook.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HANNAH WALDO.

The bill (H. R. 10167) for the relief of Hannah Waldo was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $1,500 to Hannah Waldo, widow of Charles Waldo, inspector in the Immigration Service of the United States, who lost his life in North River, September 9, 1913, by drowning, having fallen in the river because of the giving way of a defective fan rail, without negligence or fault on his part.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMETT W. ENTRIKEN.

The bill (S. 6109) for the relief of Emmett W. Entriken was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Emmett W. Entriken $250, in full compensation for injuries received by him on September 26, 1913, while employed as a painter at the Salem Indian school, Chemawa, Oreg.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRED A. EMERSON.

The bill (H. R. 4630) for the relief of Fred A. Emerson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Fred A. Emerson $1,500, as compensation for the loss of his left foot through no negligence on his part while employed in the Watertown Arsenal, at Watertown, Mass., in December, 1900.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF PATENT LAWS.

The bill (H. R. 15220) to amend sections 4888 and 4889 of the Revised Statutes, relating to patents, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. I object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. GORE. I ask the Senator from Missouri to withhold his objection a moment until I can state the exact purpose of the bill.

Mr. REED. I will do that. My objection is based solely on the ground that we are passing important legislation here without knowing anything about it.

Mr. GORE. I will suggest that this is a House bill and is intended to facilitate the dispatch of business in the Patent Office. Under existing law an applicant for a patent is required to make oath to his application and also to file specifications describing the invention, signed by two witnesses. In many cases the applicants fail to secure the signature of two witnesses, which results in needless delay and in needless correspondence. It is the opinion of the Commissioner of Patents that dispensing with two signatures eliminates an unnecessary safeguard. It will obviate a great deal of delay and a great deal of useless correspondence. It is in the interests of wise and speedy administration and it is his request. I hope that the bill will pass.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri that all that has been stated by the Senator from Oklahoma is correct. This bill, when it was reported the last time, as I remember, failed of passage in the last hour of the session. There is not any question but that the Government is protected. The only change in the present law is that the bill eliminates the requirement that the patentee shall have two witnesses sign his application.

Mr. REED. My sole reason for objecting to the consideration of the bill was the one which I gave. It seems to me to be unwise to pass a bill which changes existing law under this rule. The Senators who have spoken have examined the bill, and I shall not stand on the objection. I wish to remark, however, that it seems to me we are sacrificing accuracy to expedition.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4888 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out from the last clause thereof the words "and attested by two witnesses," so that the section so amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 4888. Before any inventor or discoverer shall receive a patent for his invention or discovery, he shall make application therefor, in writing, to the Commissioner of Patents, and shall file in the Patent Office a written description of the same, and of the manner and process of making, constructing, compounding, and using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art or science to which it appertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make, construct, compound, and use the same; and in case of a machine, he shall explain the principle thereof, and the best mode in which he has contemplated applying that principle, so as to distinguish it from other inventions; and he shall particularly point out and distinctly claim the part, improvement, or combination which he claims as his invention or discovery. The specification and claim shall be signed by the inventor."

SEC. 2. That section 4889 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "and attested by two witnesses," so that the section so amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 4889. When the nature of the case admits of drawings, the applicant shall furnish one copy signed by the inventor or his attorney in fact, which shall be filed in the Patent Office; and a copy of the drawing to be furnished by the Patent Office shall be attached to the patent as a part of the specification."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. OWEN. I now ask to recur to the bill (H. R. 15038) proposing an amendment to the Federal reserve act relative to acceptances, and for other purposes. Objection to its consideration will not now be urged if an amendment be added providing that the limitation shall be to the capital stock and surplus of such banks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment, Mr. President. Does the Senator state that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] have withdrawn their objections?

Mr. OWEN. They do not object now to the consideration of the bill, with an amendment after line 4, on page 2, inserting the words "but not to exceed the capital stock and surplus of such bank," and the same amendment in line 20, after the word "prescribed."

Mr. SMOOT. What would the effect of that be?

Mr. OWEN. It would limit such acceptances to the capital stock and surplus of the banks.

Mr. SMOOT. Acceptances to the extent of not over 50 per cent of the capital stock and surplus of any bank could not be discounted unless by sanction of the Federal board.

Mr. OWEN. The present limitation is 50 per cent, and under this proposed legislation, with the consent of the board, the limit might be raised to 100 per cent.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Do I understand from the Senator from Oklahoma that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] has withdrawn his objection to the bill?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, sir; with the amendment which I have suggested.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator says that under the amendment the acceptances could be discounted to the amount of 100 per cent of the capital and surplus of the bank.

Mr. OWEN. I am proposing an amendment that will prevent the board going beyond 100 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I do not understand the amendment which is suggested by the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. The amendment has no limitation. It might be 150 per cent or 200 per cent or 500 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Or 1,000 per cent.

Mr. OWEN. Or any per cent. The amendment which I propose is a limitation to the capital stock and surplus of the bank.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Oklahoma again repeat his amendment?

Mr. OWEN. On page 2, after line 4, I propose to insert the words "but not to exceed the capital stock and surplus of such bank."

Mr. SMOOT. But supposing a bank has $100,000 capital and $600,000 surplus, under that amendment it could discount $700,000?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Or seven times the amount of its capital.

Mr. OWEN. Well, the capital and surplus, of course, constitute the capital.

Mr. SMOOT. I was only suggesting that that was what the amendment means.

Mr. OWEN. That is what it means.

Mr. SMOOT. I am making that suggestion in order that there may not be any doubt about it.

Mr. OWEN. There is no question about it.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from Oklahoma permit me to make an inquiry of him?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] has left the Chamber. Do I understand the Senator from Oklahoma to assure the Senate that the Senator from Kansas has withdrawn his objection to the bill and is willing that it shall pass?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. And that he has agreed to let the bill pass the Senate?

Mr. OWEN. I saw him, and he agreed to allow it to pass with the amendment which I have suggested.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator from Kansas is protected, I have no objection.

Mr. OWEN. Certainly he is protected; otherwise I would not ask for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not doubt the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. CATRON. I made objection to the consideration of the bill, and I shall not withdraw my objection unless we proceed with it at once. If we are going to discuss it any longer, I shall insist on my objection; otherwise I withdraw the objection.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Kansas is now present and can speak for himself.

Mr. BRISTOW. I withdraw my objection, provided a limitation is made to capital stock and surplus.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to proceeding to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Oklahoma?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been read. The amendments will be stated.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 7, before the word "Federal," to strike out "That any" and insert "Any," so as to read:

Any Federal reserve bank may discount acceptances, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 4, after the word "prescribe," it is proposed to insert the words "but not to exceed the capital and surplus of such bank," so as to read:

The amount of acceptances so discounted shall at no time exceed one-half the paid up and unimpaired capital stock and surplus of the bank for which the rediscounts are made, except by authority of the Federal Reserve Board, under such general regulations as said board may prescribe, but not to exceed the capital and surplus of such bank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, on page 2, line 6, before the word "indorsement," to strike out "of" and to insert "or"; and in line 9, after the word "draft," to strike out the comma and to insert a semicolon, so as to read:

The aggregate of such notes and bills bearing the signature or indorsement of any one person, company, firm, or corporation rediscounted for any one bank shall at no time exceed 10 per cent of the unimpaired capital and surplus of said bank; but this restriction shall not apply to the discount of bills of exchange drawn in good faith against actually existing values.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 20, after the word "prescribe," to insert "but such regulations shall apply to all banks alike, regardless of the amount of capital stock."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. After the word "prescribe," in line 20, I move to insert the words "but not to exceed the capital stock and surplus of such bank."

Mr. SMOOT. That will not be consistent with the amendments which have been agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. Yes, it will. There is no inconsistency.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; the amendment reported by the committee reads: "but such regulations shall apply to all banks alike regardless of the amount of capital stock."

Mr. OWEN. The amount of capital stock simply determines the size of the bank—whether it is a big bank or a little bank; that is all. That is the meaning of that; but I have no objection to the words "and surplus" being inserted.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would be much better to have it read "the amount of capital stock and surplus."

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer that amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment in line 20, page 2, was agreed to will be reconsidered. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 20, in the committee amendment, after the word "stock," it is proposed to insert the words "and surplus."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JOSEPH A. POWERS.

The bill (H. R. 11394) for the relief of Joseph A. Powers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $256.17 as compensation to Joseph A. Powers, a letter carrier in the city of New York, N. Y., for loss of salary resulting from injuries received by him on February 23, 1912, from the breaking of a stool which he was using in his employment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARTHUR BROSE.

The bill (H. R. 14931) for the relief of Arthur Brose was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Arthur Brose, of Bemidji, Minn., $866.58 on account of injuries received while in the discharge of his duties as mail carrier in the post office at Bemidji, Minn., on the 9th day of July, 1912.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SANDY CRAWFORD.

The bill (H. R. 4008) for the relief of Sandy Crawford was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Sandy Crawford, of Chicago, Ill., $2,500 as damages for personal injuries sustained by him while employed upon the rivers and harbors improvements at Riverton, Ala.; but no sum of money due or to become due under this act shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure under any legal or equitable process whatever, but shall inure wholly to his benefit.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

L. V. THOMAS.

The bill (H. R. 10172) for the relief of L. V. Thomas was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to L. V. Thomas $1,680, for personal injuries received while working on the Panama Canal in the employ of the Panama Canal Commission as a carpenter.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VESSELS FOR COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The bill (S. 7108) to authorize the purchase or construction of six new vessels, with all necessary equipment, for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and providing for additional surveys by the Coast and Geodetic Survey, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CATRON. I object to that bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I inquire who made the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think perhaps the Senator does not understand that this is a very important measure, that it is recommended by the department, and has been unanimously reported by the committee. The service will be very much crippled unless it is allowed the new vessels provided for, because the old equipment is worn out.

Mr. CATRON. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 6, after the word "equipment," to strike out "and also to provide for additional surveys"; in line 7, before the word "limits," to strike out "respective"; and in line 8, after the word "hereinafter," to strike out "respectively," so as to read:

That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to acquire for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, by purchase or by contract for construction, six new vessels, including all necessary equipment, in accordance with the limits of cost hereinafter set forth, which shall in no case be exceeded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 6, to strike out:

ADDITIONAL WIRE-DRAG SURVEYS.

For additional wire-drag surveys on the coasts of the Pacific Ocean under the jurisdiction of the United States, $60,000.

For additional wire-drag surveys on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States, including the coasts of outlying islands under the jurisdiction of the United States $34,000.

OYSTER SURVEYS IN THE STATE OF FLORIDA.

For additional mensurational surveys as may be required by the Bureau of Fisheries in connection with the oyster surveys in the State of Florida now authorized to be made by the Bureau of Fisheries by the act of Congress approved August 1, 1914, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the purchase or construction of six new vessels, with all necessary equipment, for the Coast and Geodetic Survey."

PORT ANGELES CITY DOCK CO.

The bill (H. R. 7049) to reimburse the Port Angeles City Dock Co. for damage done to the dock of that company by the United States revenue cutter Snohomish was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $100 to the Port Angeles City Dock Co. for damage done to the dock of that company in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington, by the United States revenue cutter Snohomish.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID MOWEN.

The bill (H. R. 15414) for the relief of David Mowen, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers David Mowen, who was a private in Company C, One hundred and second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered into the military service of the United States as a private of that company and regiment on the 18th day of March, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SECOND LIEUT. J. A. ROGERS, UNITED STATES ARMY.

The bill (S. 5404) for the payment of certain sums due by reason of an injury sustained by Second Lieut. Rogers, United States Army, while attempting to provide suitable mounts for United States Army, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been reported adversely, and, without objection, it will be indefinitely postponed.

ISADOR MILLER.

The bill (S. 1763) for the relief of Isador Miller was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Isador Miller, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, to compensate him for injuries received while in the employ of the Government at the Picatinny Arsenal, Dover, N. J.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER SCOTT.

The bill (H. R. 3885) for the relief of Peter Scott, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Peter Scott, who was a private of Company K, Fifty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of that company and regiment on the 10th day of July, 1864; but no pension, emoluments, or allowances of any description shall accrue by reason of this act prior to the date of approval thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALONZO D. CADWALLADER.

The bill (H. R. 1090) for the relief of Alonzo D. Cadwallader, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws Alonzo D. Cadwallader shall hereafter be held and considered to have performed 90 days actual military service as a private of Company K, Seventeenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LE GRAND C. CRAMER.

The bill (H. R. 3613) to reimburse Le Grand C. Cramer for amount of damages to his motor launch Winninish by the United States launch Gunedmertrix at Morris Heights, N. Y., on March 31, 1911, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $4,911.64, to be paid to Le Grand Cramer as damages for the loss sustained by his motor boat Winninish on March 31, 1911, by reason of the collision of the Gunedmertrix, a United States Government launch operated by the War Department, with the Winninish while the latter was lying at a dock at Morris Heights, N. Y.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. GEORGE H. PENROSE.

The bill (H. R. 3305) directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to credit and settle an account of Maj. George H. Penrose was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to credit and settle the suspended account of Maj. George H. Penrose, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, in the sum of $267.87, being the amount disbursed by him in August, September, October, and November, 1908, at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., to Albert W. Carlson and Bruno Buschek, employees of the United States, which account was disallowed by the Auditor for the War Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARKER S. ROUSE.

The bill (H. R. 2667) for the relief of the legal representatives of Parker S. Rouse, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of Parker S. Rouse, deceased, $600, being the amount of salary for one year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MAX S. RETTER.

The bill (H. R. 3435) for the relief of Mrs. Max S. Retter, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $1,000 to Mrs. Max S. Retter, widow of Max S. Retter, late a commissary sergeant in the United States Army and superintendent of the national cemetery at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., on account of the death of Max S. Retter, due to infection of the blood brought about while as superintendent he received and reinterred, in line of duty, in July, 1907, several human bodies in a state of putrefaction contained in unsealed wooden boxes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF OFFICERS OF CIVIL WAR.

The bill (S. 6857) authorizing the retirement from active service, with increased rank, of officers now on the active list of the Army who served in the Civil War was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that any officer now on the active list of the Army who served not less than 100 days in the Regular or Volunteer forces of the United States during the Civil War and prior to April 9, 1865, who was honorably discharged therefrom, and who shall since have served not less than 40 years as a commissioned officer of the Regular Army, shall, at his own request, be placed on the retired list of the Army, with the rank of major general.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, what does that mean?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I should like to ask whether the War Department has approved of this bill?

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that it refers to only one man in the United States Army, and that is Col. Clem. He is the only man now on the active list who served in the Civil War.

Mr. NORRIS. What punishment does it inflict on him?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that Col. Clem has been passed over in promotions—I do not know how many administrations past—and this bill applies only to him. He is the only man in the active service of the Army now who served during the Civil War.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Can the Senator state whether or not the War Department has expressed any disapproval of this measure?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not recall now. As a rule the War Department does not approve of these bills. Whether they disapprove of this one or not I do not know, and so far as I am concerned it does not make any difference to me whether they do or not. This body has just as much power as the Secretary of War. I think as a general rule they do not approve of these kind of bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did not know that objection was made.

Mr. BRISTOW. I withdraw the objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSAL OF CLOTHING OR UNIFORMS.

The bill (S. 7051) to authorize the disposal of clothing or uniforms which have become unserviceable or unsuitable was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "issued," to insert "or by a disinterested officer of the Regular Army to be appointed by the Secretary of War," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any clothing or uniforms, which have heretofore, or may hereafter be furnished by the War Department to any State, or Territory, or the District of Columbia, have become unserviceable, or unsuitable from use in the service, or from any other cause, they shall be examined by a disinterested surveying officer of the Organized Militia, to be appointed by the governor of the State, or Territory, or the commanding general of the National Guard of the District of Columbia, to which the clothing or uniforms have been issued, or by a disinterested officer of the Regular Army, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, and his report shall be forwarded by said governor or commanding general direct to the Secretary of War, and if it shall appear to the Secretary of War from the record of survey that said clothing or uniforms are unserviceable or unsuitable for the purposes for which intended, then the buttons or braid thereon, if any, shall be removed therefrom, and the said clothing or uniforms shall be turned over to the governor of the State or Territory, or to the commanding general of the National Guard of the District of Columbia, to which said clothing or uniforms were furnished, to be by him distributed among the destitute of his State, Territory, or District of Columbia, in such manner as to him may seem proper and just.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with these provisions are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATER POWER.
